SEOUL--DRAFT AFTER-DINNER REMARKS

I want to thank you for your hospitality, most especially this excellent meal. It is a fitting conclusion to a very productive day. I first met President Kim this afternoon. After discussing a full range of bilateral and international issues with him this afternoon and after talking to him more informally this evening, I believe more than ever that we can work together effectively to the benefit of both the American people and the Korean people.

The U.S.-Korean partnership is longstanding. This partnership provides a firm foundation for a new era of peace and prosperity in the entire Northeast Asian region. I look forward to working with you, Mr. President, during the next few years of this partnership. Together we can promote the interests of the people of our two nations.

Thank you very much.
