Dear Eli:

I am very pleased to have this opportunity to add my warm congratulations to the many I know you have already received on your appointment as Director of President Clinton's new Office of National Service. It was a source of great pride to all of us at your alma mater when you were named to this important and influential post in the new administration.

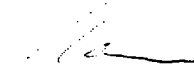

As you are perhaps aware, Brandeis has long been involved in the effort to address creatively the need for a national service program. In 1992 the Heller School's Center for Human Resources contracted with Abt Associates to evaluate service initiatives under the Federal Commission on National and Community Service. Andrew Hahn, Associate Dean for External Affairs at the Heller School, is working with study leader Alan Melchior to evaluate the effectiveness of Serve-America programs, integrating community service into the public school curriculum across the United States. Also, Larry Bailis of the Center for Human Resources is leading a study of higher education community service models being funded by the Commission. We are most interested in the additional opportunities that may exist for public/private partnership as you help to bring President Clinton's vision of a national service trust to fruition.

I would welcome the opportunity to meet with you at a time of mutual convenience during one of my upcoming trips to Washington, DC. I would appreciate the opportunity to bring you up to date on some of the other exciting initiatives that are under way at Brandeis. In addition, I hope you will choose to return to campus for your 30th class reunion next Spring, if not indeed sooner. If either work or personal business draws you home to Massachusetts, I would enjoy the opportunity to host you on campus.

My secretary, Mrs. Jane Spencer, will be in touch with your office to inquire about the possibility of scheduling a time for us to meet in Washington at a time convenient to your schedule. With very best wishes,

Sincerely,

MEMORANDUM TO THE PRESIDENT

FROM: ELI J. SEGAL ELJ

SUBJECT: Talking Points Suggestions for 4:30 p.m. Meeting with Congressman Bill Ford

1. Thank Chairman Ford for his vital support of your national service legislation. Acknowledge his leadership in the passage of the 1990 precursor to the Bill that we are introducing on Thursday.
2. Chairman Ford's willingness to provide the earliest possible Committee time for consideration of the Bill is vital to you. Mention that it is important that the American people can see national service volunteers working in their communities by the beginning of next year -- which requires authorizing and appropriating now, for FY '94 funding.
3. This initiative is also an important demonstration of the Democrats' ability to govern -- and it will require broad support among all segments of our party, and as many Republicans as we can attract. It is therefore critical to you and to the success of the bill that Chairman Ford continue actively to assist the effort to line up Republicans and solidify conservative Democrats.
4. You can tell him that we have seven House Republicans ready to co-sponsor and that we hope to have a total of ten as original sponsors by tomorrow (his staff has the names and will be given updates). If we have ten, Chairman Ford may want to ask Congressman Goodling (ranking minority member on the Committee) to be a co-sponsor at the moment of introduction. (Note: We have David Durenberger and hopefully one or more other Republican Senators with us on the Senate side.)

May 5, 1993
Page Two

5. Recognize that Ford will have met (at 1:00 p.m. today) with Congressman Chris Shays (R-Conn), who has been our Republican "whip" in the effort to line up co-sponsors. It will help Shays do his work if Ford thinks Shays is important to you. You should also mention the leadership of Steve Gunderson (R-Wis.), a senior member of Ford's Committee and a committed co-sponsor whom Ford may see as the lead Republican.

6. You similarly should let Chairman Ford know that you regard the role of Dave McCurdy to be crucial to a victory on this bill and that you appreciate his willingness to cooperate with McCurdy. McCurdy has already provided leadership in lining up support from moderates of both parties, including members of the Main Stream Forum. Ford has indicated that he will call McCurdy today (and may have done so before your meeting). It would be useful for you to confirm that McCurdy will be (i) the first non-Committee Democrat listed as an original co-sponsor, and (ii) the lead Democratic member invited to testify before the Committee. This is also appropriate given McCurdy's long-time involvement in national service.

FROM: ELI J. SEGAL

SUBJECT: House Education and Labor Committee Sscheduling

As we have discussed, it would be useful in your meeting with the President today for you to review with him the scheduling priorities for the various Administration initiatives coming before the House Education and Labor Committee. I know you agree that national service may be unique in offering an opportunity for a relatively rapid and bi-partisan win. The reverse is also true: without authorization before Memorial Day, it appears impossible to receive FY '94 funding, delaying until 1995 the first real view Americans could have of the "Clinton Corps" of national service volunteers, working in communities throughout the country.

Dear President Clinton

At its regular meeting of March 3, 1993, the Newark Municipal Council adopted a "MOTION", SPONSORED BY COUNCIL PRESIDENT DONALD BRADLEY, "WHOLEHEARTEDLY ENDORSING THE CLINTON ADMINISTRATION'S NATIONAL SERVICE PROGRAM."

On behalf of Council President Bradley and the Members of the Governing Body, please permit me to commend you and your Administration for its spirited confidence in young people and the many contributions they can make towards bettering this nation. Your idealism and commitment towards a National Service Program bodes well with the Council, particularly the second provision which allows students, mostly in college, to pay off tuition debts in public and/or community service.

Hopefully, the program will not create a federal bureaucracy, but build around already successful youth initiatives such as the Boys and Girl Scouts, YMCA's, the Newark-based International Youth Organization and New Jersey Youth Corp. The Council trusts that the National Service Program will not be geared primarily towards middle-class youths.

INFORMATION

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

FROM: ELI J. SEGAL ES

SUBJECT: Material from General David C. Jones, USAF (ret)

As you remember, you met General Jones at the New Orleans event. He is a thoughtful and strong supporter of your national service initiative, and he has sent along some interesting material proposing to utilize military resources in the national service initiative.

Such efforts are already proceeding under the "Boren/Wofford" Civilian Community Corps (CCC) authorized last year. That initiative will provide opportunities for retired and discharged military personnel to help operate national service programs on bases no longer in use. The Commission on National and Community Service is in the process of selecting a Director who will oversee the CCC initiative.

General Jones' proposal is in the same spirit. He suggests starting up a program here in the D.C. area. Even if these bases are not incorporated into the CCC, they could receive funding through the new Corporation for National Service. Because we have established very broad eligibility, the Department of Defense will be able to apply to the Corporation for funds to start up programs. With the work that our office intends to do with General Jones and other members of the Armed Forces, the Corporation could help make General Jones' proposal a reality in time.

General Jones continues to be helpful in implementing the CCC program, and we are working hard with him and others to make the military an important partner in the national service initiative.

DAVID C. JONES
2426 SOUTH QUEEN STREET

May 5, 1993

Dear Mr. President:

I thoroughly enjoyed being with you on the trip to New Orleans. Thank you for inviting me.

The trip was a great success as a kickoff for a very important program.

Enclosed is a short paper on the concept of using the military in National Service as we discussed briefly on Air Force One. I cannot speak for the other Services, but I know Tony McPeak is a strong supporter of the general concept.

Best wishes,

National Service Concept

This paper outlines a concept for using the inherent flexibility of resources and facilities at military installations in supporting the National Service program. Three fundamental principles should guide the overall development of the program:

First, the "service" component of National Service must be genuine and measurable. It must not be (nor be seen to be) a make-work endeavor with little substantive and enduring benefit.

Second, the individuals in the program should emerge as better citizens and better human beings. There should be increased self-discipline, better health, greater tolerance, better ability to communicate and learn, and higher self-esteem.

Third, participants should finish their National Service at least as well equipped to pursue their life's goals as their contemporaries who did not serve, unlike the case with some earlier volunteer programs. (For example, Lou Harris concluded in a 1978 report that "...there can be no question that, in the short run, Peace Corps service puts the two-year volunteer at a disadvantage.")

The program should provide intensive education and training at the outset to develop skills needed to begin beneficial service. Education and training would continue, but in a declining proportion, throughout the program in order both to refine skills needed for continued service and to strengthen the foundation for post-service education and/or employment. The participants would leave the program with a "dual track" of options: they can apply their earned college credits toward advanced education or take their newly acquired and field-tested job skills into the competitive market place—or both.

National Service and the Armed Forces

The linkage of National Service with the Armed Forces is a natural one. The military services have developed in millions of young men and women many of the characteristics that the nation will expect to be fostered by National Service. Furthermore, military units have a long tradition of involvement in their local community activities. Of many outstanding examples, the one closest to the premises of National Service was started some years ago at the Memphis Naval Air Station by a young Episcopal priest. Young people were brought on base and lived in available dormitories in a mini-boot camp environment. Their civilian counselors exposed them to a world of values and caring that many of the youngsters didn't know existed. Although the stay was only a week, this youth service program produced some dramatic changes in attitude and outlook. The following concept has its philosophical and practical roots in that program.

Pilot Concept

This recommended military service involvement with National Service would have greatly enhanced prospects for success if it were tested under closely controlled circumstances. The Washington, D.C., area has a dense concentration of military installations of the four services and would be an ideal place to test this approach to National Service. If it proves successful here, it could be adapted and expanded throughout the country.

Each Service would be asked to make dormitory space available on bases in the greater Washington area for 100–200 individuals (not necessarily all at one site), thereby providing living space for up to 800 people. The participants should be both men and women, high school graduates, diverse in background and competitively selected. They need not be residents of the D.C. area and, indeed, could be drawn from any area of the country. However, the bonding achieved during the program would (at least initially) have a more enduring and productive effect if all the participants were from the same area.

Outside counselors, preferably former military members, would be hired to run the camps at each selected location. It would have to be made clear at the outset that the military's official role was only to support the program with available resources. The services would not bear responsibility for not run the program. However, experience has shown that many servicemen and women would volunteer in their off duty time to help mentor the National Service participants.

The first week or two would consist largely of orientation in a mini-boot camp setting. Throughout their stay at the installation, the participants would have to meet the same standards of conduct as the military members stationed there, including acceptance of no-notice drug testing.

The participants would be tested on their education level and aptitudes. Intensive education and training would then be started to give the individuals the skills needed to serve and to help in post-service employment or further education. The education and training could be provided by community colleges or proprietary organizations, using the student loan program.

A wide range of skill areas could be considered for the education and training phase. By way of illustration, the pilot program might train computer operators and medical assistants as well as other skills. After a few weeks of training, the participants would have acquired enough skills to start serving in the community for part of the day. For the computer operators, such service could take place in the schools by teaching students, primarily in the inner city, how to use computers (many of which are now simply gathering dust). The medical assistants could help in public health services or in hospitals that serve the indigent. "Camps" could "adopt" schools or hospitals, or vice versa. All participants would be kept busy six days a week, at least for the early part of their service. Base athletic and other facilities would be used on an as-available basis. Weekend sports competitions could be conducted among the "camps."

The program would be so rigorous and so fulfilling that the "graduates" should be in great demand, for jobs or further education or both. This approach would impart skills with carryover benefits appropriate to the economy of the next century rather than emphasizing unskilled tasks. The participants would earn college credits that could be applied to still more advanced education in the future. Moreover, spending several months in a drug- and crime-free environment where racial integration has been most successful would well serve all involved for the rest of their lives.

Growth Potential

Once the concept is validated, there is vast potential for expansion throughout the country. As military bases are targeted for closure, the personnel on the base normally start a phased departure that can take as long as two years or more to complete, creating significant unoccupied living space at such installations. As a base is identified for elimination, incentives could be given to the local community to support a National Service program, both to serve the national interest and to help offset the local impact of the base closure. Furthermore, the military force reductions are forcing many truly outstanding men and women to leave active military service. These experienced leaders would do an outstanding job in motivating and guiding national Service participants.
