THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

January 11, 1999

PRESS BRIEFING BY JOE LOCKHART

The Briefing Room

1:24 P.M. EST

MR. LOCKHART: Good afternoon, everyone. Welcome back, Mr. Hunt. I hope you enjoyed your time off, as extensive as it was. How long was it?

Q Two, three days, I don't know. (Laughter.)

MR. LOCKHART: Where DID you go, what did you do? Enough about you, Terry. (Laughter.) Now, let's do a little bit more about the rest of you. What's up? Questions?

Q Joe, with regard to the factual response to Article One, is it the contention here that even if the charges could be proven true, they do not rise to the level of high crimes and misdemeanors?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think there are a couple of points that are made in the document. Again, as those of you who have followed this know, this is not an extensive filing seeking to go after every part of the case. It's a formal response to the charges. But I think there are a couple important things in this document.

One, I think it really explodes some of the myths, much of which the charges are based on. Myth number one, the President tried to conceal the relationship he had with Monica Lewinsky. In fact, the President did the opposite -- he acknowledged that relationship and acknowledged that it involved intimate contact.

Secondly, that there's testimonial evidence that there's an obstruction of justice here. We believe that there is no testimonial evidence that makes the case for obstruction. In fact, if you look at the testimony, there's direct testimony to the contrary.

And then, thirdly, there are some constitutional arguments about the articles and whether they reach the standard.

So, in fact, I think this document makes both cases; one about the actual factual foundation, and, two, that goes in part to the standards -- in part to the standards that you need to reach for impeachment.

Q If I can just follow up, then. The factual response to Article One, is the White House suggesting here that even if the charges were proven true they do not rise to the level of high crimes and misdemeanors?

MR. LOCKHART: The White House is suggesting that there is no perjury, that the House has failed to make a case for perjury, and that the evidence and circumstances of which they are describing and what we think is in a factually insufficient way does not reach the standard of an impeachable offense.

Q Article One complains that the President -- accuses the President of lying under oath before the grand jury when he said to the grand jury that he had told the truth in the Paula Jones deposition. Well, I mean, your first point was the President acknowledged a relationship with Monica Lewinsky. He did not do that in the Paula Jones deposition.

MR. LOCKHART: We're talking about the grand jury and Article One concerns the grand jury.

Q Well, but Article One complains that he lied to the grand jury when he said he told the truth in the Paula Jones deposition.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, again, I'm not going to litigate the case here. The lawyers will have --

Q I'm asking you to respond to --

MR. LOCKHART: The lawyers will have their chance to do that. But this document --

Q But you have litigated, you've given us a response.

MR. LOCKHART: The document makes the case, I think in an effective way, that they don't make their case in a proper way on Article One on the issue of perjury.

Q Is there still a reasonable dispute about the nature of that relationship? I mean, that is not clear from what the President said or from what Monica Lewinsky --

MR. LOCKHART: No. I think the President acknowledged an improper relationship, an improper intimate contact. And he did that openly, and as we've all seen -- there's a videotape of it that's been repeated over and over again. But --

Q That wasn't the question.

Q But not in the Paula Jones deposition.

Q The Article also -- it says "nature and details." You're just talking about the nature right now -- the nature is the fact that he had an intimate sexual relationship. But they're also accusing him of perjury on the details of that relationship.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, no, I think that he read a statement before the grand jury; he did decline to go into the specifics, the salacious material that has been released to the public. But the main point is he acknowledged the improper relationship.

Q Joe, the statement says that the charges should be dismissed. Why is the White House not seeking a vote on dismissal at the outset of the trial?

MR. LOCKHART: Because we think that the Senate is going forward right now -- they reached a bipartisan agreement late last week, Friday, and now they're going forward in good faith. And we believe that both sides have the right to make their case. Both sides will be given several days to do that. The senators have a right to ask questions, to discuss the evidence that's before them in the five volumes, 60,000 pages. And then the senators, I think rightly, have carved out some time for any motions. I'm not going to anticipate today from here any motions, if any, we'll file. But we made the judgment the the Senate should go forward in the way they're going forward, and we shouldn't try to preempt this process before both sides have had a chance to make their case.

Q On the evidence question, that's one thing. But also there seems to be a procedural complaint here, which is that there are four perjury charges lumped into one and the document makes the case that that is unfair and, therefore, should not be the case. So, in that case, where it's not a question of them having to wait and hear the evidence, why didn't the White House move to dismiss on that?

MR. LOCKHART: Because we thought it was important that both sides get a chance to make their case. This is the procedure that the Senate has worked out on a bipartisan basis. We respect the prerogative of the Senate to set the rules and we will wait until the time that they have designated to deal with any motions that we might file.

Q Are the lawyers contemplating taking less than their allotted time to present the case? And will you delay the State of the Union?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know how much time they'll take. They certainly have a right to use 24 hours. I have no indication that they'll go ask for time beyond that, but I don't know if they'll fill it up.

On the issue of the State of the Union, the President is working hard on the State of the Union. He'll be meeting with some of his advisors this afternoon to do some more work on it and we intend to give the speech on the 19th.

Q As you know, some senators in his own party have suggested that he should delay it, at least slightly.

MR. LOCKHART: I understand that some senators have indicated that they would like a delay. But we think while it's important for the Senate to move forward on this business, which is important, it's also important for the President to move forward on the State of the Union.

Q Does the President consider perjury and obstruction to be high crimes and misdemeanors?

MR. LOCKHART: I think the President's lawyers have articulated very clearly that the Founding Fathers talked about grave offenses against the state. So if this was -- if someone was proved to have committed perjury and obstruction of justice in a way that was a grave offense to the state, I think the lawyers would argue that it was impeachable.

But the vast majority of constitutional scholars, historians and people who are non-partisan in nature have argued forcefully that there's nothing in this case that involves a grave offense to the state, there's nothing in this case that reaches the standard of an impeachable offense.

Q Joe, is anyone telling the President from the Hill that he shouldn't give his State of the Union address on the 19th?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know that anyone has told the President that, directly. I haven't been aware of it. But there are certainly people out on television, and we watch, we know what people's opinions are.

Q Joe, why isn't the President having a press conference today?

MR. LOCKHART: In looking at the schedule we didn't think it was the most productive use of his time for today. He'll be working on some other things.

Q Why not?

Q What does that mean, Joe? Come on, come clean, for God's sake. (Laughter.)

Q Can't you just acknowledge that the President can't answer our questions about the trial?

Q Just say that he doesn't want to answer questions at this particular time.

MR. LOCKHART: I think that, as I said, it wouldn't be a productive use of his time. I also think that given the prerogatives of the Senate, that's where the discussions will be going forward on this issue and that's where it should go forward.

Q Why can't he just refuse to answer questions, which he's done many, many times in the past? I mean, certain questions.

MR. LOCKHART: That would be no fun.

Q He's not going to answer questions to the Senate, is he? I mean, he won't be --

MR. LOCKHART: No. He's already answered the questions.

Q No, he's not going to go to the Senate. That was a definitive no.

MR. LOCKHART: I have no reason to believe that he will testify.

Q How much input did he have on the document that was filed? I mean, did he sign off on it?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes. I think it was primarily the work of his lawyers, but he certainly agrees with the tone, tenor and contents.

Q Joe, on the four charges of perjury, they're all lumped together. You're making the argument that the problem here is that some senators might believe one of them, but not believe the other three and it's essentially unfair. How -- I don't quite understand what you're arguing here.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, you have four areas. You could have a situation potentially, where 17 senators believed that the President committed perjury in one area, 17 believed in the second area, 17 believed in the third area, and 17 believed in the fourth area, giving you one over the magic number. So you're asking people to vote on multiple charges without giving them the ability to look at each charge, weigh the evidence and make a reasoned judgment.

Q It's unlikely that you would have 17 people pick one, 17 people pick another.

MR. LOCKHART: Jim, there are a lot of things unlikely. Getting to where we are was once considered unlikely, so I don't think there's anything wrong with making the argument --

Q Are you saying that because these four are lumped together that this is fundamentally wrong and that the President should not be convicted simply because you have four charges lumped together?

MR. LOCKHART: We have made -- in this document is laid out a series of factual contentions and some constitutional questions, and these are constitutional questions that are worth considering.

Q It says it should fail, it's not worth considering -- the thing says it should fail, period, because of that.

MR. LOCKHART: And they make a series of other arguments, and it will be up to the Senate to consider these.

Q If somebody is accused of stealing horses, and 17 thinks he stole this horse, 17 this horse, 17 this -- they're going to hang him because he's a horse thief. (Laughter.)

MR. LOCKHART: Right.

Q Well, I mean, so I don't understand your argument.

MR. LOCKHART: Sam, I don't understand your horse allusion, so call us even.

Q What about sheep?

Q Joe, by deciding to go along with the opening statements and not filing any motions today, is the White House now eliminating this constitutional question of the lame duck 105th --

MR. LOCKHART: I have tried in every way that I know to indicate to you that that is not something that's been under serious discussion. It continues to get brought up and people continue to get asked, well, what about if the White House does this. And then you have a headline over, senators warn White House not to do that. I've indicated to you in every way I know how that that's not something that's been seriously considered here. I don't know any way.

Q Except to say, no. You never told us, no, we're not going to do it. Today you are, today.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, look at the document here. If you can find it in the document here today --

Q All right. What about, if I can just --

Q Is this your final filing for the day or -- is this it?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes. We will file nothing else today.

Q Why shouldn't we take it as a sign the White House is fully satisfied with the procedure the Senate has put in place?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, look back on what we said that the criteria was, for what we were looking forward to in the Senate: that it be bipartisan, fair and expeditious. It's clearly bipartisan. Senators of both parties reached an agreement. I think the jury is still out on whether it will be fair and whether it will be expeditious. There are issues that still need to be resolved. We look forward to working with the Senate in good faith over the next few weeks. So it clearly meets one of the criteria we set out and I think it's impossible to answer on the other two.

Q If I could just follow up Sam's earlier question on the perjury allegation before the grand jury. The House prosecutors are going to suggest that when the President answered that he did not lie during the Paula Jones deposition he was, in effect, lying to the grand jury. So the question is this; did the President lie during the Paula Jones deposition?

MR. LOCKHART: The President has answered that in a series of documents, and the answer is, no.

Q Joe, in view of the complaints of Democratic Congressmen Meehan, Nadler and Bobby Scott about no witnesses before the Judiciary Committee or the House. Why does the House -- the White House, and now Senator Daschle seem to be objecting to any witnesses, or what is your latest stand on witnesses?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not aware that Mr. Nadler or Meehan or --

Q Yes, they've been quoted.

MR. LOCKHART: They're quoted as saying, we ought to have witnesses? Oh, I'm sorry, during the House. Listen, let me --

Q They said, it's terrible that we don't have any witnesses.

MR. LOCKHART: Let me be very clear on this. The objection from the White House to calling witnesses is not witnesses, per se. One of the things that we think should be done, and we've taken steps to try to make sure, is that this should be expeditious. One of the steps is not at the outset filing a series of pre-trial motions. We have very good and clever lawyers. I'm sure they could have come up with 15 or 20 constitutional arguments that could have tied this process up for weeks and months. But we think that this should move forward expeditiously. It's in everyone's interest -- the Senate, the House, the White House, most importantly, the American public.

Q So you want witnesses.

MR. LOCKHART: And the problem with witnesses, as I said to you last week, is once you get beyond the stipulated record, the five volumes, you need to go into a period of discovery, perhaps depositions -- and that takes time. And if you're talking about -- the House has talked about 10 to 14 witnesses. I don't know from a defense point of view how many witnesses the White House would need to call because we don't know who their witnesses are.

Q Your obligation --

MR. LOCKHART: Let me finish my answer, if you could -- and how did you get so far up? (Laughter.)

Q I do what I can, Joe. Do you want me banished like the witnesses?

MR. LOCKHART: Now I've lost my thought. The idea that this could somehow be done in a couple weeks is just not realistic. You need time to go through this process. Sure, maybe the witnesses could all be examined and cross-examined in two or three weeks, but that would be months down the road.

Q But, Joe, if the obligation is to try him, i.e. a trial, it should be a fair trial. How can you have a fair trial in the United States without having witnesses?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think you can do a lot of picking and choosing on how you compare something to another trial. I think if 51 senators decide it's fair, they're going to move forward. And they're going to make this decision --

Q Is it the White House position that you would want witnesses, except for the fact that it would delay the trial?

MR. LOCKHART: No. It is the White House position that one of the things that we'd like to get done here is to have this done in an expeditious way. And one way to do that is to rely on the record, which we will stipulate to, despite the obvious disadvantages of that, and to move forward as quickly as possible.

Q The only reason you don't want witnesses is because it would cause a delay; is that right?

MR. LOCKHART: I think --

Q There's no other reason?

MR. LOCKHART: No, the witnesses -- because we'd be doing this for months and months.

Q So you are saying, yes, that's the only reason?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes.

Q Okay, well, Joe, how long would it take to rule on a motion to -- if you offered it today?

MR. LOCKHART: I have no idea.

Q Do you think that would take a long, long time?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I didn't say that.

Q You said the only reason you're doing it, you have good and clever lawyers, but you're not doing it because you want it to be expeditious.

MR. LOCKHART: I wish I could repeat exactly what I said, but I said you could do 15, 20 motions at the start that could delay this. We're not doing that. We're going to go forward on the schedule set out by the Senate. We're going to have two weeks or so of presentations by the House and the White House, some time for Q&A and then there will be a time for motions.

Q The reason why it's hard for us to believe that the only reason you're doing things like not filing pretrial motions to dismiss or not wanting witnesses because of delays, you took all the time that was available to you at every other step of this process when you were asked to respond for documents, for the answers to the 81 questions, and I can think of a handful of things where expeditiousness was not your first priority. Why, all of a sudden, is it now?

MR. LOCKHART: Because we believe the public has had enough of this. We're at the final stage of this process and we can do it two ways: We can do it fairly and expeditiously or we can do it fairly in a process that's open and that takes months and months. We prefer the former rather than the latter.

Q Joe, is it a sad commentary on society now that we're sitting here waiting for the next sex scandal to come out this time on Republicans on the Hill, especially since years ago, these kinds of dalliances were swept under the rug and we didn't see them?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm in a poor position to offer cultural commentary. I will repeat that the President has said that the time for bringing an end to the politics of personal destruction has long passed and we would urge all involved, from anyone who is bringing forward information to the news media that prints it or repeats it, to exercise some judgment.

Q The response says that the Articles are unconstitutionally vague, that there are multiple charges under one. Why not motion, then, for a bill of particulars to make them un-unconstitutionally vague, or some kind of motion to break them up into multiple charges so they would be constitutional?

MR. LOCKHART: Because the time, as we've judged and the Senate has judged, is not appropriate now for motions. We will wait until all sides have had a chance to make their case, until the Senate has had a chance to make -- ask their questions, and if there are appropriate motions that we feel need to be offered, we'll offer them.

Q Does it follow, then, about witnesses, does it follow, then, if the Senate can devise a way to call witnesses but not have undue delay, that you would think that was all right?

MR. LOCKHART: Sam, I think it's logistically impossible. I think we have to go -- once you get beyond the record and injecting a witness into this process goes beyond the stipulated record by nature, because you don't know what a witness is going to say. You know what they've testified to in the grand jury or when they were deposed. There is a mountain, a virtual mountain of evidence, that the Independent Counsel has developed or has access to, that the House Judiciary Committee has looked at, that the White House has not. We'd need to be given a chance -- if you're going to go beyond the record -- to review all of that. We need to be given a chance to depose people, to understand what their testimony is.

So just through discovery and a process of deposing people takes time. And I don't see how that could happen in an expeditious way.

Q Joe, you speak of expeditiously. Would a month from today be considered expeditious by the White House, if everything is finished?

MR. LOCKHART: Listen, I can't put an exact date on it. There are certainly presentations that need to be made and we are on track now to go on for two weeks -- a little bit more than two weeks, probably -- and then the Senate will face some decisions and we'll discuss that when we get there.

Q Would six weeks, instead of six months, be something that would fall under your definition of expeditious?

MR. LOCKHART: Listen, I can't give you a precise -- you know it when you see it. So I can't give you a precise definition. But what I'm saying is if we decide -- if the Senate decides, in their wisdom, to go beyond the record, to bring in witnesses that were not heard from by the House Judiciary Committee, so are not part of the record, it's going to take time.

Q On December 14th, the House Judiciary Committee received a submission from the Counsel for the President which said, and I quote, "Neither the committee and staff, nor counsel for the President have the opportunity to confront the witnesses who have appeared before the OIC's grand jury, to cross-examine them, assess their credibility and illicit further information that might affect the testimony the witnesses gave." Doesn't that sound to you like an appeal for the right to have witnesses?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I think as we said last week from here, as I said, there is certainly an advantage to -- there's a lot of testimony out there that's untested, that's never been cross-examined. But there is an advantage -- excuse me, a disadvantage to allowing that to be the case.

But we believe, for a couple of reasons, that we should move forward and not exercise the right to challenge that testimony - because it will be more expeditious. And we don't believe -- and I think today's document makes clear -- that the House in their deliberations effectively made a case for removing the President. So we don't think we need to go beyond what's in the record.

And I'd suggest that there is an element of people who were trying to expand the record and go past what they've already sent. There's an element of admission there that maybe they don't think that they've effectively made the case.

Q Joe, was today's answer run past any member of the Senate for their comment or approval before it was sent up?

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I know of, but I can't speak with 100 percent certainty on that.

Q Two follow-ups. Does the President believe that delivering the State of the Union at this time would help rally public opinion, is that why he's so determined?

MR. LOCKHART: To get from 70 to 75? (Laughter.) I don't -- I think public opinion -- I think the public solidly supports the President and the agenda he is pursuing. And I think one of the reasons is, although what's going on is important, he will not allow himself to get sidetracked from the people's business.

Q Another question on the legal fees. What are they up to now? And I'm assuming that that President pays all the fees from people in the left-hand column? I mean, that's a lot of lawyers there. He's responsible for --

MR. LOCKHART: He is, indeed.

Q But not anybody in the right-hand column?

MR. LOCKHART: He is not.

Q Joe, one more follow-up question on his agenda for today. He did not have a joint news conference with a head of state. Yesterday he did not attend church on Sunday. Are we seeing a pattern here of a low profile, like a White House Rose Garden strategy here?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I think you're seeing a continuation of what we've been doing for about the last month.

Q Is he going to stay under cover, certainly for the remainder of this week?

MR. LOCKHART: No, he will be out talking about his agenda and will be articulating the ideas that will go into the State of the Union and his budget.

Q -- specifically last week that it would be manifestly unfair for the process to go forward in the Senate with opening arguments without knowing whether witnesses could be called. Is it still the White House's position that --

MR. LOCKHART: I think, again, I would reiterate the point that it's very difficult, and I think unfair, to the President's lawyers to have to prepare an opening statement or an opening presentation without knowing what it is they're defending against. I do think, though, that the Senate has moved forward in good faith on a bipartisan basis and we accept the rules by which they've laid out.

Q If I could just follow up on that, Joe. There was a press report over the weekend that administration officials were discouraging Democratic senators appearing in bipartisan appearances with their colleagues on the Hill.

MR. LOCKHART: That would be news to people here at the White House.

Q Joe, has any decision been made on Pollard and whether the --

Q -- was quite visible in his defense of the President in this impeachment case. Did he say anything privately in his meeting today with regard --

MR. LOCKHART: I think Mr. Dobbins reflected what was said on that subject during the meeting.

Q Joe, you mentioned -- State of the Union has come up a couple of times. Can you give us any outline on what the agenda will be in the State of the Union or any ideas that will come out?

MR. LOCKHART: I could, but I won't. I think there have been a series of newspaper stories and broadcast reports that should give you some sense of some of the areas the President will be talking about. I think I'm going to leave some of it to the President.

Q Has the President reached a decision on Pollard yet? Has he gotten all the advice or reached a decision --

MR. LOCKHART: No. My understanding of the process is, Mr. Ruff is coordinating, receiving the views from around the administration. We expect that by the end of this week everyone who has an opinion will have found a way to express it, to weigh into the process. And then I think the process that Mr. Ruff will lead will begin in earnest. But I don't expect there to be any immediate conclusions or decisions.

Q On the Pollard, the World Jewish Congress is sending a letter to the President today, asking for a meeting with Ruff and Dershowitz and Elie Wiesel on the Pollard matter. Will the President meet with them?

MR. LOCKHART: We'll take a look at the letter, once it arrives here.

Q Has anybody recommended that Pollard be released? Has anybody that the President sought news from, anybody in the administration --

MR. LOCKHART: I'm going to prefer to let people keep their advice to the President private.

Q Along that front, Dershowitz and other Pollard supporters have argued that the President has only asked for opinions from those who are opposed any release of Jonathan Pollard and hasn't asked for any recommendations or any input from those who have a different argument, who want to challenge that position.

MR. LOCKHART: I think those who favor his release have found very effective ways to get their opinion out, they're certainly well-known. I think Mr. Ruff is responsible for gathering the opinions of those who work within the government and have a formal view on this case. I don't think that those -- I don't think there will be any opinion that will be unturned or unnoticed by the time the President makes his decision.

Q Joe, on the State of the Union, is the President flexible enough to change his mind about any delay in this if enough senators or members of Congress persuade him that it's an awkward time?

MR. LOCKHART: I think the President believes that it's important to stay on the business that he was elected to do. Part of that business is once a year laying out his agenda. He does that in the State of the Union. He was invited to come up on the 19th; he plans to come up on the 19th.

Q But you're not ruling out he could change his mind?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not trying to lean either way on this to say, except the President was invited to address the nation on January 19th. I have every reason to believe, and no reason to believe otherwise, that he won't be there on January 19th, giving a State of the Union.

Q Joe, the answered filed today flatly, categorically denies lying or perjurious statements. That would seem to preclude the President acknowledging lying in any future censure agreement.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think as I've said over and over again, I'm not going to get into any of the details of censure. That's something for the Senate and the House to work out and I'm sure they'll do that at the appropriate time if they deem necessary.

Q This isn't a minimum standard, then?

MR. LOCKHART: That has nothing to do with censure. That has to do with the two articles of impeachment that are before the Senate in a trial that has become.

Q Just to close the loop on something we were talking about earlier, are you saying the White House deserves the right to file procedural motions later on matters like the bundling of the charges, say after the opening arguments -- all those issues could be reopened?

MR. LOCKHART: I in no way want to signal the White House intention to file any motion. But I think if you look at the schedule that the Senate laid out, the Senate made the decision that they believed that after opening statements and after a chance for questions from the senators to both sides there would be a time for motions. And if there are motions that the White House decides we need to file, presumably they would come at that time.

Q And those could include procedural motions at a trial that's already at that point weeks old?

MR. LOCKHART: They could include anything. But I'm just not going to get into what they are, what they're aren't or what they might be or what they might not be.

Q How are the President's lawyers going to use their 24 hours, who is going to give the presentations and --

MR. LOCKHART: I'll let you know once I've got more information on that.

Q You clearly have the same objections you had to this process last week. It seems that the reason that you've swallowed them is simply because the Democrats went along with the process and you can't criticize anything that --

MR. LOCKHART: No, I think there is reason to believe that at the end of this day this process can move forward fairly and expeditiously. I'm not going to preclude anything. Our concerns are well-known and they've only changed in the respect that the Senate has found a way to move forward in a bipartisan way, and we'll see how the process goes.

Q Joe, speaking of precluding things, just to get on the record, have you, as Press Secretary, closed the door on any news conferences, any exchanges between the President and reporters until this impeachment trial is over?

MR. LOCKHART: I have not. I expect that during the -- there will probably be some opportunity during the Central America trip. So I have not closed the door. I just --

Q I'm talking about a White House news conference, a formal session where the public could get some sense of how this President feels about what he's confronting.

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know how long a trial will go on, so I can't tell you definitively one way or the other.

Q So the answer is --

MR. LOCKHART: The answer is I can't tell you definitively one way or the other.

Q The President is not going to be accountable at all during this whole period? I mean, a news conference is the only institution in a democracy where you can question a President. And he should be questioned.

MR. LOCKHART: Helen, as much as I respect that point of view, I'd suggest that there are other ways and they're currently being exercised.

Q Like what?

Q What are the other ways?

MR. LOCKHART: What's going on in the Senate.

Q No, no, no, by the public.

Q But short of throwing him out of office.

MR. LOCKHART: I'll take this all under advisement and pass it back.

Q Joe, have any of the President's lawyers prepared for the possibility of witnesses by pre-interviewing some of the witnesses? For example, Betty Currie, Vernon Jordan --

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I'm aware of.

Q They haven't talked to any of them?

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I'm aware of.

Q Joe, during an interview published yesterday, the Governor of Minnesota revealed that during the election campaign, Mrs. Clinton came into the state and announced, "okay, Minnesota, it's time to end the carnival sideshow." Question: Did the White House press office know about this statement in advance? Did you suggest this to Mrs. Clinton?

MR. LOCKHART: I'd suggest she probably had another candidate she wanted elected.

Q What is your reaction to Governor Ventura's response?

MR. LOCKHART: What was his response?

Q I think Hillary should worry about --

MR. LOCKHART: I guess I walked into that one.
(Laughter.)

Q His response was --

MR. LOCKHART: This is a freebie, come one. (Laughter.)

Q Take it like a man.

Q I think Hillary should worry more about leaving Bill home alone.

Q Oooh.

Q Don't touch it. That's my advise to you.

Q Don't touch it? What is this interference?

MR. LOCKHART: Thanks, Sam.

Next.

Q You're right, I was out of line.

Q Your second defense is that -- or your third defense is that too many things are bundled together. Your second defense is that there are not enough specifics, because it says the President doesn't know what specific charges he's facing. Do you want -- you've obviously decided not to move for a dismissal on that ground. Are you asking for a clarification?

MR. LOCKHART: No, we --

Q What would solve this problem for you?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know at this point that there is any way to rectify either the problem of vagueness or of bundling these charges together, but we are -- what this is about is making our case, both on a factual and constitutional basis. And that's what we're doing.

Q But there is a way -- it's called a motion for a bill of particulars. And a lot of people were expecting that to happen. Why isn't --

MR. LOCKHART: And if we get to the point where that's, during the time where it's appropriate to file motions, that's what we file, I'll stand here and explain why we're doing it. But I'm not going to preview our legal strategy two weeks before it's executed.

Q I realize you're not going to lay out the details of what motions might come a couple of weeks down the line, but surely at least there's going to be a motion to dismiss the charges at that point.

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not going to preview part of it, all of it, or some of it. This is two weeks down the road, or two, three weeks down the road, and we'll talk about it when we get there.

Q When was the last time there was a state visit without a news conference?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know.

Next.

Q Going back to the news conference issue, some around the White House have said the reason why there is not going to be a news conference today is because it's like putting Clinton on the stand and you don't want to do that. Is that true?

MR. LOCKHART: I think I've said all I'm going to say on the subject, so I'm not going to say any more.

Q -- the President's time is being spent on the State of the Union versus preparing for the trial?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know how to quantify it, but I certainly know of more time that he's spending on preparing the speech than he is meeting with his lawyers.

Q Did he review this brief before it was set up?

MR. LOCKHART: Who?

Q Did he review the brief himself before it was sent over?

MR. LOCKHART: If not in final form, in one of the late drafts, I'm certain he did.

Q Yesterday or today?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know.

Q Joe, do you support the Harkin-Wellstone motion to open the Senate trial?

MR. LOCKHART: I think that's an issue that the Senate will need to come to grips with.

Q Well, but do you support it? Obviously, the Senate will decide.

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know enough about the issue to express an opinion.

Q You hear suspicious minds at work again on the question of Iraq. Iraq is being warned by several people, I think -- Tony Blair among others -- that if it persists in trying to violate the no-fly zone, and otherwise flaunt what he and others have said we'll do, that he will be hit hard again, as they were in December. Suspicious minds say, correct, about the time of the vote on the articles of impeachment. Can you address that?

MR. LOCKHART: I think that we have made very clear our policy on Iraq, on our containment, and the credible use of force that remains in the region, should Saddam Hussein not comply with the agreements that he's made. And I don't think I need to say anything more on that.

Q It does make it more difficult for the President to execute a policy that he believes is right, if there are people who will claim --

MR. LOCKHART: I think if the last month tells you anything, it tells you that the President considers only the national security interests of this country when he makes decisions like that.

Q Joe, you did say you left the door open for a possible press clearance on the Central American trip. Is that trip still scheduled on the dates it was announced?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes.

Q 10th to the 15th?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes, and sometime soon we will have more details.

Q And a second question. Mr. Dobbins says you're about to put out a communique on the Clinton-Menem meeting. Is that ready to come out?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, let me get out of here and go check, okay?

Q Wait, wait. Seriously.

Q In the answer filed today, the President's lawyers repeatedly quote from testimony and the proffer of Monica Lewinsky. Do they consider her to be a reliable and accurate witness?

MR. LOCKHART: We have chosen, for the purposes of moving forward and stipulating to the record, not to challenge the veracity -- or the fact that she's given this testimony. And beyond that, I'm not going to get into it.

Q Well, wait a minute. Those are two separate things, Joe -- the veracity and the record of the testimony.

MR. LOCKHART: Right.

Q My question is, you're quoting her in your answer. Are you saying she testified truthfully and you think, as a witness, that she is reliable?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I will leave it to the lawyers to make their case when they go and make their case. There are certainly examples of conflicting testimony within the volumes that were sent from the House to the Senate, and we will make our case.

Q She is sometimes reliable and not at other times, is that --

MR. LOCKHART: Scott, I think what I'm trying to do is say that I'm not going to play this particular game on this particular day.

Q Now Saddam seems to be saying that Iraq is no longer going to acknowledge the border with Kuwait as being legal.

Is that a serious position for him to take?

MR. LOCKHART: If that is his view, it's a view that violates the will of the international community, and it is a quite serious position to take.

Q Joe, could you clarify what you said about challenging the credibility of Monica Lewinsky? Because I don't know if you've said it from that podium, but certainly your predecessor did, that it was an absolute -- was absolutely verboten that the White House attack Lewinsky's credibility --

MR. LOCKHART: I said it on Thursday. This last Thursday I said that --

Q But are what you saying now is that you don't rule out changing that stance in the future?

MR. LOCKHART: No. I said last Thursday, and I'll say it again, that for a year now people in this building have not attacked her and I don't expect that to change.

Q Joe, you said earlier that you expect that during the State of the Union address that the Republicans will be well behaved, they will not get up and walk out, they will not boo and they will not hiss, like the Democrats did, as you remember. Why do you think that that's the case? Do you believe the Republicans are more courteous and well behaved or what?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't think I said that.

Q Well, no, could you explain why you think that there won't be anything from the Republicans?

Q You've had enough Les, my turn.

MR. LOCKHART: Listen, I think the President will give his speech and every member of Congress will have to decide how they want to act and they'll do that.

Q So you do expect that they might walk out?

Q Les, there are other people.

MR. LOCKHART: I didn't say that.

Q Joe, a follow-up on Pollard. Despite pressure from some citizens groups, is it conceivable the President would overrule advice from his Secretaries of State, Defense and CIA not to --

MR. LOCKHART: The President has the power to make decisions. Anything is conceivable. He will look to the advice from a wide variety of sources. The counsel here will run that process. And when that process is complete he'll make a decisions.

Q Well, wouldn't there be severe repercussions on the part of the Cabinet if he overruled it?

MR. LOCKHART: I can't predict.

Q Will he touch on impeachment in his State of the Union?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know.

Q Did President Clinton personally tell President Menem he would be canceling the press conference and what message does that send to the rest of the world?

MR. LOCKHART: It would have been difficult for him to tell him that, since it wasn't canceled, it was never scheduled.

Q It was on the schedule, Joe. It's on the Argentine schedule and on the White House schedule.

MR. LOCKHART: That's obviously some sort of oversight.

Q Well, what message does that send to the rest of the world, Joe, because everybody thinks it a cancellation?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't think that --

Q What if the Argentine President wanted to hold a news conference, would you have let him come out here on his own?

MR. LOCKHART: Sure. And I don't think he had any problem with it.

Q We'd like to request one with the Argentine President.

MR. LOCKHART: Does anyone have the number of the embassy?

Q Joe, for clarity, to follow up Mara, I think you, in response to Mara's question, you just suggested the veracity of Monica Lewinsky would not be attacked at trial? Is that --

MR. LOCKHART: No. I said that by stipulating to the record -- and if I didn't use the precise words, let me try again, because I think maybe I didn't, because "veracity" might not be the right one -- we have basically said we will not challenge that she testified to A through Z, whatever A through Z is. And we will make our case based on that testimony, based on the President's testimony, based on the facts as we know them.

Q Joe, if I could just follow up with this. So the inclusion of Ms. Lewinsky's quotes in today's answer is not an endorsement of her veracity by the White House?

MR. LOCKHART: No, it is a -- the inclusion of her testimony is an acknowledgement of her testimony.

Q You're not suggesting to the Senate, then, that what she said is accurate? I mean, you're using this to build your case --

MR. LOCKHART: I'm suggesting that that's how she testified, and that is a useful piece of information for the Senators as they move forward to make a decision.

Q Do you hold that Lewinsky testified in some ways that you consider truthful and in others that you consider untruthful?

MR. LOCKHART: We believe that she testified to this and it's central to the case, and that's the case we made here, and the lawyers will be happy to get into all of this when they make their presentation.

Q So you're saying she's a credible witness and we should believe the things that you quoted from her.

MR. LOCKHART: I'm saying that we would not include these things here if we didn't think she testified to those, and they certainly coincide with the statements that the President has made.

Q Joe, you said earlier today that, we believe each side should be allowed to present its case. Does this mean that White House lawyers won't object in any way to anything the House managers choose to do in their presentations? Or do they reserve the right to object?

MR. LOCKHART: No -- well, I don't know who might object but, according to the rules as we understand them is, the House managers have to keep their presentation to the record that was sent to the Senate. I don't think it would be in order if they start bringing in issues that aren't part of that record.

Q But during the presentation you don't expect White House lawyers to stand and object to anything?

MR. LOCKHART: As long as the rules are followed, I don't expect them to.

Q Back on Monica Lewinsky, does the President believe she was a stalker, as Sidney Blumenthal testified?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't have any knowledge on that subject.

Q Joe, did the White House not motion for a bill of particulars so they could argue that these articles are unconstitutionally vague? So they could continue to argue that way?

MR. LOCKHART: No. The White House did not file any motions now because, as I've said several times here, we made the judgment that this is the time for opening presentations, and then questions and answers, and if motions are appropriate and useful, they will be done at a later date.

Q Will Ruff make the opening presentation?

MR. LOCKHART: We'll find out.

Q Thank you.

STATE DINNER ENTERTAINMENT IN THE EAST ROOM

A Celebration of Tango

After dinner in the State Dining Room, guests will be invited to the East Room for a celebration of tango, performed by American and Argentine musicians and dancers. The tango has been an integral part of the history of the Argentine Nation and its appeal and popularity have spread around the world. The resurgence of the tango has communities from Alaska to Florida learning this fascinating, difficult, elegant and passionate art. The fervor and joy of the tango once again capture our creative imagination.

TANGO DANCERS

Robert Duvall, actor, director and writer, found his passion for the tango twelve years ago while attending a performance of Tango Argentino. Since that time, the Academy Award-winner has been enamored with the Argentine people, their music, dance and culture and has worked on two films during his fifteen visits to Buenos Aires. Francis Ford Coppola suggested that Mr. Duvall play a character connected with the tango.

Since then, Robert Duvall has written a screenplay which he intends to star in and direct.

The story takes place largely in the world of tango in Buenos Aires. His tango heroes are many, but he particularly loves to dance to Darienzo, Tanturi and Pugliese.

Luciana Pedraza was born in Salta, a town in northern Argentina. Being the oldest of five sisters, Luciana grew up among horses and sports but never took a dance lesson. She moved to Buenos Aires at sixteen to finish her schooling and shortly thereafter began her own business. Tango did not cross her path until three years ago when Robert Duvall introduced her to a world within her own country -- the world of tango. Since that time, she has moved to the United States and studies tango under Orlando Paiva and Pablo Veron.

Pablo Veron, a versatile dancer with a background in classical, tap and jazz, is one of the most acclaimed tango dancers from Buenos Aires. A key figure of the tango renaissance, Mr. Veron is recognized for his unique, innovative style that links traditional tango to the sensitivity of the nineties. He formed his own dance company in Buenos Aires while performing in such musicals as Evita and Cabaret and touring extensively with the renowned Tango Argentino as a dancer and choreographer. In 1996, Pablo Veron choreographed and starred in The Tango Lesson, winner of the Best Film award at the Mar del Plata Film Festival in Argentina. In October, 1998 he won the American Choreography Award for outstanding choreographic achievement in motion pictures.

Victoria Vieyra, a frequent dance partner of Pablo Veron, grew up in Argentina studying Milonga with Mingo Pugliese and Gustavo Naveira. She has danced and choreographed numerous musicals and operas and was appointed as a member of the Tango Academy founded by Horacio Ferrer. She frequently teaches and organizes tango dances in Los Angeles and has recently danced in several shows in Paris.

TANGO MUSICIANS

QuinTango is a unique chamber ensemble dedicated to the musical performance of tango. Inspired by the Argentine orquesta tipica -- the classic tango orchestra of violins, bandoneons, bass and piano -- QuinTango brings its own interpretations to this evocative music. Their recent performances include appearances at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts and the Embassy of Argentina and the group is a Concerts in Schools Artist for The Washington Performing Arts Society. The sounds produced by this Washington, D.C., ensemble have turned music lovers into tango lovers.

Raul Jaurena, master bandoneon player, first studied bandoneon with his father becoming a member of a child's tango orchestra at the age of eight. In the 1960s and 1970s, Mr. Jaurena spent much of his time organizing tango orchestras in Argentina, Uruguay, Brazil and Chile. Mr. Jaurena recently became an American citizen and is currently the musical director of the acclaimed tango group, New York Buenos Aires Connection. He performs regularly as a guest artist throughout the United States and was most recently featured with the Hollywood Bowl's Philharmonic Orchestra in a concert of music by Astor Piazzolla and has played with such greats as Yo Yo Ma.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release January 11, 1999

STATEMENT BY THE PRESS SECRETARY

State Visit of President Menem of Argentina

President Clinton met today with President Carlos Menem of Argentina. The President paid tribute to President Menem for his role in consolidating democracy and open markets in Argentina, promoting economic integration and cooperation in South America and leading the way toward a new relationship between the United States and Latin America. Argentina has assumed a seat on the United Nations Security Council, will chair the Free Trade Area of the Americas (FTAA) process for two years beginning November 1999 and has played a leadership role in global climate change negotiations. In this context, the two leaders had a fruitful exchange on a wide range of global and international issues as well as a discussion of our bilateral relations.

The meeting between the two Presidents was their fourth in the last two years and highlighted the close and beneficial partnership that has developed between the United States and Argentina. We have cooperated to address key challenges in many areas including climate change, resolving hemispheric conflicts such as the now settled border dispute between Ecuador and Peru, combating terrorism, and containing the effects of global financial turbulence. Discussion of these and other issues will continue in the 2nd Special Consultative Process to be hosted by Secretary Albright on January 12. The two Presidents established this group in 1997.

The President praised Argentine participation in UN peacekeeping. He noted that Argentina has taken the toughest assignments -- including sending detachments to Haiti, Cyprus and the former-Yugoslavia -- and contributes more personnel to UN peacekeeping than any other Western Hemisphere nation. The President designated Argentina a Major Non-NATO Ally in 1997 because of that country's peacekeeping involvement and we have supported Argentina's peacekeeping capability through funding and equipment assistance. The President was pleased that the United States would provide a Coast Guard patrol boat, a Coast Guard buoy tender and a TA-4J flight simulator. The Administration is also notifying Congress of its intent to make available from excess U.S. military stocks 900 Light Anti-Tank Weapons (LAWs) for force protection use by Argentine peacekeepers.

Representatives of the two governments also will sign agreements on military acquisition and servicing and information security. These agreements will facilitate our support of future Argentine peacekeeping deployments. This year the United States will again provide assistance to Argentina's regional peacekeeping training center, which is a widely recognized model for emulation elsewhere. The meeting also highlighted Argentina's significant contributions to international civilian police efforts, both in regional training and in contributions to UN civilian police monitoring operations.

The two leaders discussed our joint efforts to address global climate change by building upon the work of the recent Fourth Conference of Parties to the Climate Change Convention held in Buenos Aires last November. The President and the Vice President praised Argentina's leadership in committing to take on a greenhouse gas emissions target.

The Department of Education and its Argentine counterpart are entering into a Declaration of Intent which will set up a framework for cooperation in areas ranging from educational standards to teacher training and human resource development.

The Presidents also reviewed the international economic picture. The President praised Argentina's sound macro-economic management and open markets as the foundation for its continued growth and ability to maintain investor confidence during last year's market turbulence. Both Presidents reaffirmed their commitment to work to realize the goal of creating the FTAA.

The Presidents acknowledged the importance of air traffic to the development of the trade and economic relationship between their countries. In that spirit, they instructed that the U.S. and Argentine negotiators should seek to conclude an Open-Skies air services agreement when they meet in Buenos Aires in March 1999 that incorporates a reasonable transition period and opportunities for marketing arrangements (code-sharing) among airlines. They agreed that this transition period to Open Skies, to begin in January 2000, must enhance competition and, at each step, allow greater access to carriers of both countries to the growing air traffic market. Foreign investment plays an increasing role in the aviation industry. Both sides agreed that the United States and Argentina should reach an understanding on foreign investment in aviation that is compatible with the laws and policies of both countries.

President Menem informed President Clinton on his recent trip to Great Britain and the President noted with appreciation the steady improvement in relations between Argentina and the United Kingdom.

The Presidents discussed the scourge of international terrorism, which has inflicted tragic losses on both countries. The President applauded Argentina's initiative at the Second Specialized Conference on Terrorism, hosted by Argentina last November, on the creation of a standing Inter-American Committee on Terrorism. The United States has offered to host the first meeting of the Committee should the Organization of American States authorize its creation.

Todd -- a couple of questions:

1. Do you want a paragraph or a one pager at this point?
2. I assume the paragraph/one-pager should address climate generally. One of the e-mails you attached e-mails suggested that you were only responsible for something on the auto tax, but that doesn't sound right .

Am clearing the decks to proceed but need answers.

During most of 1990's, Argentina's economy has grown by more than 6% per year while greenhouse gas emissions have grown by only 1% annually. (Menem used this in his BA speech.) Helps prove President's point on prospects for clean energy future.

Just had long talk w/ Reifsnyder. Umbrella group delegation (Dan, Sue, David Doniger, etc.) leaves Sunday night for Australia. Think we need to sit down w/ them first to discuss agenda/strategy/tactics. Could try for Friday (or maybe Sat am - tho this is different discussion than the bigthink session we were thinking of for Sat).

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release January 11, 1999

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

Today the United States and Canada mark the 90th anniversary of our Boundary Waters Treaty, signed on January 11, 1909. I salute the U.S.-Canada International Joint Commission (IJC) established to implement the treaty!,s terms, meeting today in Ottawa. For most of the 20th century, the IJC has served to prevent and resolve disputes over the use of shared waters and to provide independent advice on other transboundary environmental issues. The excellent relationships we have developed in dealing with the precious air and water resources we hold in trust together reflect the success of the Commission!,s efforts. From cleaning up the Great Lakes to managing water-levels and flows in transboundary lakes and rivers, the Commission has come to serve as a global model for international cooperation in the realm of shared resources. More importantly, the IJC has improved the quality of life for Americans and Canadians while preserving for future generations the beauty and vitality of our lakes and rivers.

Through its air quality monitoring and international watershed initiatives, the Commission is already confronting future environmental challenges along our border. I look forward to its continued success as the United States and Canada extend their partnership into the 21st century.

TEXT:

Here's a redraft of an outline for the climate change budget paper based on direction from TDS.

TDS is very interested in developing more user-friendly categories under CCTI. Randy -- call me on this in the morning. I need paper from you describing the universe of spending items related to climate included in the budget and then we need to talk about what categories would work best.

Henry: TDS has nixed for the time being the idea of combining tax and spending sections according to subject matter. I have not yet had the chance to discuss with him the other items in your e-mail to me. More later.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release January 12,
1999

STATEMENT BY THE PRESS SECRETARY

Trade Penalties Against Three Russian Entities

The U.S. Government has imposed trade penalties against three Russian entities for materially contributing to Iran's nuclear weapons and missile programs. These three entities are NIKIET (the Scientific Research and Design Institute of Power Technology), the D. Mendeleyev University of Chemical Technology, and the Moscow Aviation Institute (MAI). Based on existing authorities, including President Clinton's July 1998 Executive Order on weapons of mass destruction (WMD), the United States is banning exports to and imports from these entities, as well as U.S. Government procurement from and assistance to these entities. Relevant notices to this effect will appear shortly in the Federal Register.

The Clinton Administration is taking these actions as part of its ongoing, high-priority effort to combat the threat to U.S. forces, allies, and interests posed by Iran's aggressive pursuit of WMD and their delivery systems. These penalties apply only to the aforementioned entities, not to the Russian government or Russia as a whole. These steps complement the Russian government's efforts to enforce its laws and international commitments relating to nonproliferation and export controls.

The United States will continue to work with Russia to strengthen controls on such exports and to enforce compliance with the laws, policies, and international agreements on such transfers. The United States will continue to urge the Russian leadership to take aggressive steps to curtail the flow of sensitive technology to Iran from Russian entities in violation of the Russian government's laws and policies.

TEXT:
THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

As Prepared for Delivery

REMARKS BY SAMUEL R. BERGER
ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT FOR NATIONAL SECURITY AFFAIRS
TO THE CARNEGIE INTERNATIONAL NON-PROLIFERATION CONFERENCE

WASHINGTON MARRIOTT HOTEL
WASHINGTON, DC

JANUARY 12, 1999

Thank you, Jessica. You are an inspiration to everyone at the NSC, for you are proof that it is possible to make something of oneself after working on our staff. Joe Cirincione, thank you for putting together this outstanding program, the first of these conferences not run by a guy named Sandy. And let me say a word of thanks to Sandy Spector for building this empire and for now applying his talents and energies to the work of our Administration.

I also want to say something about the distinguished people participating in this conference. Many of you have given all or virtually all of your careers to the cause of global security, and a large number of you have focused particularly on seeking ways to prevent the spread and use of weapons of mass destruction. This is demanding and often frustrating work -- whether you are a government official, a scholar, or an activist. You have chosen to do good, sometimes at the expense of doing well. But as you understand, and I believe the public appreciates, this work is vitally important to the future of our world, to the safety of our citizens. On behalf of President Clinton and our entire national security team, I want to thank you very much for all your efforts.

I would note that since virtually everyone in the room deserves this thanks, there is no one to clap for you. That's why we sometimes speak before broader audiences. In great venues like the basketball arena at Ohio State University.

Every year, the nonproliferation community eagerly awaits the Carnegie nonproliferation conference, an opportunity to take stock, and renew commitment to the cause. Renewing our commitment to curbing weapons of mass destruction is ever more important this year, as the conference title, "Repairing the Regime," suggests. 1998 was a troubling year -- a year of living dangerously. There was some significant progress, but several problems took a turn for the worse, and perilous new trends have emerged. All of you here know well what the key developments were:

In May, India, and then Pakistan, conducted nuclear tests that blew the lid off South Asia's long-simmering nuclear rivalry. These explosions threaten to trigger a full-fledged nuclear and missile race in the region. Also ominous was some of the early rhetoric surrounding the blasts -- suggesting that many politicians and citizens in India and Pakistan believed that a nuclear weapons capability provided instant great power status.

In July, Iran's test of the Shahab-3 missile -- its version of the North Korean No Dong -- extended Teheran's capability to target U.S. friends and allies in the Middle East, as well as our forces in the region. Combined with Iran's continued pursuit of nuclear weapons, this missile development threatens the stability of the region -- as if the stability of that region needed any further threatening.

In August, North Korea tested its Taepo-Dong missile over Japan. This test, and the revelation that North Korea is constructing a suspicious underground site, have raised questions about North Korean compliance with the 1994 Agreed Framework, which aimed at bringing stability and discouraging proliferation on the Korean Peninsula. If the agreement unravels, we could quickly return to an environment like the 1993-94 crisis, with increased risk of war and North Korean resumption of plutonium production.

By August, Russia's economic crisis heightened the challenge for Russia to control the leakage of sensitive weapons-related materials and technology beyond its borders. Weapons scientists and institutes face increased financial pressures to sell their wares to whomever is in the market, including rogue states. Finally, in December Saddam Hussein once again broke his commitments to cooperate with U.N. inspectors, ignoring our warnings. The United States, together with our British allies, responded with military force. We attacked Iraq's program to develop and deliver weapons of mass destruction and his capacity to threaten its neighbors. But we have not eliminated the danger, and our resolve to curb the threat Saddam poses will not diminish.

In addition to these specific developments, two broad and dangerous trends have emerged.

First, as the President has repeatedly warned, the risk is increasing that terrorists will acquire and seek to use chemical or biological weapons as weapons of terror.

Second, ballistic missile proliferation has intensified, as demonstrated by the Iranian and North Korean missile tests and advances in the missile programs of India and Pakistan. While the technology to develop intercontinental range missiles remains out of reach for a large number of countries, shorter-range missile capabilities "based on liquid-fueled SCUD technology" are widely available. The Missile Technology Control Regime helps to limit the spread of missile technology, but several key suppliers, such as North Korea, are outside the MTCR. Unfortunately, in regions like the Middle East and South Asia, ballistic missiles are increasingly seen as essential to national status and security, and political dynamics weigh against agreements to limit these missiles.

Not all the news on non-proliferation was bad last year. There were several encouraging developments. Brazil ratified the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty -- as did 17 other nations -- and joined the Non-Proliferation Treaty, completing a remarkable process that has almost eliminated the threat of nuclear proliferation in Latin America. The multinational Conference on Disarmament, based in Geneva, agreed to arrangements to begin negotiations on a global Fissile Material Cutoff Treaty, which would halt the production of additional material for nuclear weapons. China agreed in June to seriously study joining the MTCR. At home, our Congress passed critical legislation to implement the Chemical Weapons Convention, which the Senate ratified in 1997.

Also encouraging was the global reaction to the nuclear tests by India and Pakistan: They were condemned in nearly every corner of the world. Here was an issue where the U.S., China and Russia found a common voice. Where nuclear powers agreed with many nations of the developing world. Far from demonstrating the death of international norms against proliferation, the international reaction to the tests showed the resilience of these norms.

But these positive signs were overshadowed by the mounting challenges. We need your commitment, the public's commitment, our Congress's commitment, the commitment of responsible nations more than ever to build a safer future. Let me outline America's policy initiatives for preventing and addressing proliferation as we reach a new century.

The United States will redouble existing efforts and seek new approaches and solutions -- this year and beyond -- on multiple fronts.

First, we will move aggressively to strengthen the non-proliferation regime, by which I mean international consensus and the international agreements and structures aimed at curbing weapons of mass destruction and ballistic missiles. Bolstering this regime is critical if we are to give nations greater confidence that they can forego or limit weapons of mass destruction and ballistic missiles without finding themselves at a disadvantage against rivals brandishing such weapons. The regime is also essential for isolating nations outside the regime and pressuring them to restrain their programs and eventually to join.

With respect to strengthening the regime, let me say that President Clinton will make one of his top priorities for 1999 obtaining advice and consent to the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty in the United States Senate.

The President has called the CTBT the "longest-sought, hardest-fought prize in the history of arms control." It bans all nuclear explosive tests. We should pause and contemplate this development: 151 nations have signed an accord to never, or never again, test a nuclear device. We must not let this extraordinary opportunity slip away.

By its terms, the CTBT cannot enter into force until the United States and other key designated nations ratify it. If we fail to ratify, we will undercut our own efforts to curb further nuclear arms development, particularly in South Asia, where India and Pakistan each have announced an intention to adhere to the CTBT by this coming September. That is the right choice for those countries, one we have been urging for some time.

Senate action on the CTBT before September will greatly strengthen our hand in persuading India and Pakistan to fulfill their pledges.

The Treaty is in America's national interest. Four former chairmen of the Joint Chiefs of Staff -- Shalikashvili, Powell, Crowe, and Jones -- plus all six current members of the JCS -- agree on that. The directors of our three national nuclear weapons labs and numerous outside experts have said we can maintain a reliable deterrent without nuclear explosive testing. Polls show that 75 to 80 percent of all Americans support the Treaty. Indeed, public support has been strong for more than 40 years, ever since President Eisenhower first proposed a test ban treaty.

The Treaty will constrain the development of more advanced nuclear weapons by the nuclear powers -- and limit the possibilities for other states to acquire such weapons. It will also enhance our ability to detect and deter suspicious activities by other nations. As the experts assembled here well know, with or without a CTBT, we must monitor such activities. The Treaty gives us new tools to pursue this vital mission: a global network of sensors to supplement our national intelligence capabilities and the right to request short-notice, on-site inspections in other countries.

If the Senate rejected or failed to act on the Test Ban Treaty, we would throw open the door to regional nuclear arms races and a much more dangerous world. Ratification will take a serious effort from all of us. But it would be a terrible tragedy if our Senate failed to ratify the CTBT this year.

In addition to the CTBT, we want to make rapid progress on the treaty I mentioned earlier to ban further production of fissile materials. Last fall, we called on all countries that have tested nuclear devices to adhere to a voluntary production moratorium. In fact, the U.S., U.K., France, Russia and China have all stopped producing fissile material, and we hope they, along with India and Pakistan, will formally join this moratorium while we seek a treaty through the Conference on Disarmament.

We will also work to strengthen other components of the nuclear nonproliferation regime, including the safeguards applied by the International Atomic Energy Agency. And we will implement the initiative Presidents Clinton and Yeltsin announced in Russia to dispose safely of 50 tons of plutonium each that is no longer needed by our military programs -- enough to make literally thousands of nuclear weapons.

Another strong catalyst for convincing nations to forego nuclear weapons would be continued progress in the START process -- the effort by the United States and Russia to reduce our nuclear arsenals. We hope the Russian Duma will promptly ratify START II, which will clearly benefit Russia's security, as well as ours. And we remain committed to concluding a START III Treaty for even deeper cuts based on the agreement reached by Presidents Clinton and Yeltsin at Helsinki in 1997.

Our commitment to strengthening the global nonproliferation regime extends, of course, beyond nuclear weapons. I am proud that this Administration obtained ratification of the Chemical Weapons Convention.

This year, we will continue to pursue aggressively another key priority, announced by the President in last year's State of the Union address: strengthening our ability to determine whether nations are complying with the Biological Weapons Convention. We will push to obtain international agreement this year on compliance and inspection measures, making it much more difficult for nations to cheat and thereby increasing our safety from the threat of biological weapons. Under Secretary of State John Holum, who is leading our diplomatic efforts, will be in Geneva next week to explore ideas for pushing the negotiations to a successful conclusion.

The chemical and biological conventions are vital not only to preventing states from acquiring weapons of mass destruction but also, in combination with law enforcement and intelligence, to keeping these weapons away from terrorists. Yes, the conventions are focused on the obligations of states, not substate actors. But virtually every state on our State Department's list of terrorism sponsors has weapons of mass destruction programs. As potential suppliers of such weapons to terrorists, there is no more worrisome source than these state sponsors. Under a strong nonproliferation regime, states that fail to join or comply with the conventions will be isolated, cut off from weapons materials, and thus hindered from assisting terrorists with WMD activities.

Our second set of priorities focuses on the most pressing regional proliferation challenges.

With respect to South Asia, we have pressed for a strong international response to deter India and Pakistan from additional testing. Secretary Albright and Deputy Secretary Talbott have engaged in intense diplomatic efforts to move India and Pakistan away from nuclear confrontation. In 1999, we will further intensify our diplomacy and encourage Indo-Pakistani dialogue in pursuit of concrete results: adherence to the CTBT, establishment of strong export controls, and restraint on fissile materials production and ballistic missile development and deployment. I hope that by the end of the year sufficient progress will have been made to enable the President to travel to the subcontinent to hail a more stable and secure South Asia.

Dealing with North Korea -- the most isolated nation in the world -- is a delicate balancing act that requires a judicious mix of deterrence, diplomacy, and aggressive non-proliferation efforts. To preserve the Agreed Framework, we must work toward arrangements with the North to resolve our concerns about the underground activity. We must intensify our efforts to dissuade and deter the North from conducting additional long-range missile tests and continuing its missile technology exports. We are working closely with our allies the Republic of Korea and Japan, and with China, to achieve these goals. We are also conducting an overall review of U.S. policy, with the help of former Defense Secretary Bill Perry, to develop a sustainable long-term strategy towards North Korea beyond the Agreed Framework.

As we work with China on common nonproliferation goals, we will continue to express our hope that it will join the Missile Technology Control Regime -- and do so this year.

On Iraq, the Administration will use all means -- including, if necessary, additional military force -- to obtain Saddam's compliance with Iraq's commitments regarding weapons of mass destruction and with the relevant Security Council resolutions. We will adhere to our position that disarmament under these resolutions is the only pathway to sanctions relief. And we continue to believe that UNSCOM is the appropriate entity to verify and monitor Iraq's disarmament. It is up to Saddam to decide whether he wants sanctions relief by giving up his weapons of mass destruction. In the meantime, we will be ready to act again if we see Iraq rebuilding a WMD capability.

We will also continue to offer humanitarian assistance to the Iraqi people, and, most importantly, work toward the day when Iraq has a government that respects its people and lives in peace with its neighbors. It is clear that real disarmament in Iraq will come only when there is a new government in Baghdad.

As to Russia, we will continue to work aggressively with the Russian leadership to halt Russian entities, cooperation with Iran's missile and nuclear weapons programs. This issue has been at the top of our agenda with the Russian government. We continue to urge Russia to enforce and strengthen its export controls and take actions against Russian entities that violate those controls, selling out Russia's own nonproliferation and security interests for their own financial gain.

We will continue to take action against these entities ourselves. In that regard, I want to announce that today the United States is imposing economic penalties against three additional Russian entities -- the Moscow Aviation Institute, Mendeleyev University, and NIKIET, or the Scientific Research and Design Institute of Power Technology -- for providing sensitive missile or nuclear assistance to Iran. Last July we took action against seven others. Let me be very clear: The Administration has authority to act against entities that violate international nonproliferation standards, and we will use this authority to protect our security.

In the end, though, the most effective shield against proliferation from Russia is not U.S. penalties, but a Russian export control system that is designed to work and does so. Only Russia can police its own borders, factories and technology institutes. That is why President Clinton and President Yeltsin agreed at last year's Moscow summit to create seven export control working groups to improve Russia's capacity to stop the flow of sensitive technology and equipment. It is also why we are funding the International Science and Technology Center in Moscow and other initiatives to help thousands of weapons scientists apply their skills to civilian purposes. It is why we are funding the Nuclear Cities Initiative, announced by Energy Secretary Richardson last September, to help Russia convert its nuclear weapons production facilities to peaceful uses.

We currently are considering enhancement of existing threat reduction programs -- to work together with Russia to secure and dispose of dangerous materials, convert WMD resources to peaceful use, tighten export controls, and help ensure that Russian scientists are engaged in work other than proliferation activity. We hope to be able to say more on this in the near future.

Our third set of priorities recognizes that, despite our efforts to strengthen the international regime and resolve regional issues, we cannot prevent all forms of proliferation in all cases -- and that weapons of mass destruction already are out there, in the hands of dangerous actors. So we must devote sufficient resources to develop defensive capabilities to protect the United States and our allies in the event these weapons are used.

To deal with the spread of ballistic missile technology in key regions, we have stepped up our Theater Missile Defense programs, including with Israel and Japan. We are also committed to the development of a limited National Missile Defense system that could, if we decide, be deployed to counter the emerging ballistic missile threat from rogue nations. In the next budget we present to Congress, we will propose to include funds -- approximately $7 billion over the next six years -- that would be necessary if we later decide to deploy a limited National Missile Defense system. Let me be clear: We remain strongly committed to the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty -- a cornerstone of our security -- and we would seek agreement with the other Treaty parties if any missile defense activities necessitated modifying the ABM Treaty.

To be ready to protect our citizens from the threat of terrorist use of chemical and biological weapons, we have launched a robust program under our new National Coordinator for Security, Infrastructure Protection and Counterterrorism. We have created a National Office of Domestic Preparedness to train and equip fire, police and medical personnel across the country to deal with chemical, biological and nuclear emergencies. We are readying National Guard units in every region to meet this challenge. We have begun the work necessary to improve our public health surveillance system -- so that if a biological weapon is released, we can detect it and save lives. We have begun the effort to create the first-ever civilian stockpile of needed medicines. We have increased funding for research and development on medications. And I am confident that in the budget the President will submit next month, we will deepen our efforts on the public health front. We also hope to make progress at the NATO summit here in April to better equip our Alliance to deal with this growing threat.

All of these efforts -- strengthening the nonproliferation regime, addressing regional threats, and bolstering defenses -- are absolutely essential. And the Clinton Administration is committed to making 1999 a year of progress and achievement on each front.

The President's continuing focus on these matters -- in talks with world leaders, meetings with experts, policy sessions with his national security team, and speeches to the public -- makes plain that the United States will not shrink from the fight against weapons of mass destruction. By your presence here, you show that you have not given up on this most important of causes. Together, let us do all we can so that the next time we assemble we can find renewed cause for hope -- hope for a safer future for all peoples.
