THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

January 13, 1999

PRESS BRIEFING BY JOE LOCKHART

The Briefing Room

1:50 P.M. EST

MR. LOCKHART: Anyone in the back who wants to join us, sitting in your little booth, want to come up to the front? Let me do a couple of housekeeping -- a formal announcement and an informal announcement. What does he mean by that?

Friday afternoon, at approximately 5:30 p.m. in Washington, D.C., President Clinton will address the closing session, "A Global Forum on Reinventing Government," a conference being held at the State Department. This two-day conference, chaired by the Vice President, presents an opportunity to call together countries that have put in place national programs to reinvent government and exchange ideas and information with each other. The location within the State Department and coverage are TBD.

Informally, I received a lot of informal and constructive advice after yesterday's briefing of ways to make things more easy going here. I'll share a few of them with you. One was unsolicited from the 10-year-old son of an employee here, who suggested I buy a Super-soaker -- (laughter) -- I didn't know what that was, but I now know it's one of those souped-up water guns. I decided to decline that. (Laughter.)

But walking back from the briefing yesterday I decided that I really needed to find some way to search for that inner peace and calm. Unfortunately, Rahm Emmanuel has left, so he wasn't around for advice. (Laughter.) But I did get the next best thing, and I went in and talked to, sort of the Zen master here of calm and peace, John Podesta. John and I had an extensive conversation, and at one point, John brought in a third person, his friend, Skippy. (Laughter.) Skippy and I had an extensive conversation and John,

Skippy and I decided that I need special friend like Skippy.

So we've decided that we're going to schedule briefings on a ad hoc basis, where sometimes my special friend will come in, talk to you all and you all can decide what his name is.

So moving on --

Q Nice Joe?

MR. LOCKHART: Nice?

Q Nice Joe.

MR. LOCKHART: No, we wouldn't do that. (Laughter.)

Questions.

Q Joe, the President referenced 900 constitutional scholars in his statement this morning. What's that a reference to?

MR. LOCKHART: There is a group that put out a newspaper advertisement some months ago --

Q Right, that was 400.

MR. LOCKHART: Right. And that group has continued to grow and it's at somewhere between 800 and 900 now.

Q Is there somewhere we can reference who these people are?

MR. LOCKHART: I think -- was the original signatures, was that Cass, Sunstein? Yes, I think if you go to someone like Cass, Sunstein, I'm not sure who the other organizers are. But it's been a continual effort that has continued to sign up. And the last time that they did something I think they referenced a number like 850 or 900.

Q I'm puzzled by the President's statement that it's up to someone else to worry about the defense and that he's going to concentrate on the issues he's working on. To what extent did he have a role in putting together the 130-page trial brief? And to what extent will he watch, listen to and respond to the accusations against him when the trial begins? Because it's his personal conduct at stake, it's not a government --

MR. LOCKHART: I understand that, but the constitutional proceeding that's moving forward is not about personal contact. The House has alleged a grave offense against the state. But let me answer -- I think the answer to the whole question with each part is a limited one. I think he had a fairly limited role in putting this together. He's relying on his lawyers, but the lawyers -- here at the White House Counsel's Office and the Williams and Connolly lawyers, his private attorneys -- to put together and piece together an effective defense. I think that's the way it should be.

I can't tell you and I can't predict whether -- how much he'll watch, but I don't expect that he'll spend that much time focusing in on the proceedings in the Senate. I think he'll rely more on getting a report at the end of the day from his legal team about how the proceedings went that day. He's got a lot on his plate. He's got a big speech coming up next Tuesday; he's got the budget the following week; we've got a travel schedule we need to keep, and he's going to focus on that.

Q Joe, who will be in the Senate tomorrow at the White House table representing President Clinton?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know precisely who will be sitting at the table at all times. It will be drawn from the lawyers in the White House Counsel's Office. I think you've seen their names on filings -- Mr. Ruff, Cheryl Mills, Lanny Breuer. I don't know who actually will be sitting at the table.

Q They all will be at some point?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know.

Q And his private lawyers?

MR. LOCKHART: There will be some representation from Williams and Connolly drawn from the list that you see --

Q Isn't there any lead lawyer in all this?

MR. LOCKHART: I think the President will rely on the White House Counsel -- I'm sorry, I left out Greg Craig, who has also played an integral role in this process.

Q Mr. Ruff will not be there tomorrow?

MR. LOCKHART: I think what I said is I don't know precisely who will be, but I started that answer with -- I think I said Mr. Ruff. If I didn't, there was no omission intended. But it will be some combination of the lawyers here who work in the Counsel's Office and lawyers who work for the Williams and Connolly law firm.

Q I figured that, but I was looking for more precise names.

MR. LOCKHART: Not today.

Q You don't know who is going to be sitting at the table when the case against the President opens tomorrow?

MR. LOCKHART: I do not.

Q Do you know how they're going to divide up the responsibilities next week? In other words, will Mr. Kendall have a speaking role, or will Mr. Ruff --

MR. LOCKHART: I talked to the lawyers today and they're not prepared to detail that information at this point.

Q Joe, are they actually going to be interposing objections and doing things that other trial lawyers would do during opening arguments?

MR. LOCKHART: That would be up to what the presentations are made by the House managers. We'll have to wait and see.

Q Has the White House asked for next Tuesday a day off from the trial so it wouldn't interfere with the State of the Union address?

MR. LOCKHART: The conversations that are going on about scheduling are happening between the Senate Majority and Minority Leader and I'm not going to get into that from here.

Q And because this is a constitutional process, what exactly is the role of the President's private lawyers in this affair?

MR. LOCKHART: The President's private lawyers will be there to assist the White House Counsel and his staff in presenting a defense.

Q Joe, I think you left off the list Ms. Seligman. Will she be there?

MR. LOCKHART: No, what I said was Mr. Kendall and other lawyers from Williams and Connolly, so I meant to be inclusive there.

Q Senator Lieberman said today that with a few witnesses, the trial probably could be completed by early to mid-February. Is that your assessment of how long it would take?

MR. LOCKHART: I think with a few witnesses you could probably go through a few witnesses in a couple of weeks. The problem isn't the time it takes to do the cross-examination and questioning, it's all of the work that has to get done before you can move forward with that point. You have issues of depositions, discovery, and that's going to take time, in our view.

Q So is the preference not to have witnesses?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes -- or, our preference -- yes, but let me tell you why. Because we believe that it's important to get this done in an expeditious way, and it's very difficult to see how that can be done when a whole new area of the case is brought open, because there's going to be a lot of discovery, there's going to be a lot of evidence that the White House has not had access to over the past six or seven months that the White House is going to need access to in order to prepare to deal with any such witnesses.

Q Both Senators Lieberman and Lautenberg seem pretty clear that in their mind, there would be witnesses. Does the White House share that view?

MR. LOCKHART: I think that's something that's going to be subject to a vote, and I'm not in a position to preview the results of that vote.

Q Joe, just to be clear, when you said "a couple of witnesses in a few weeks," you're saying that doesn't include all the discovery period --

MR. LOCKHART: That's correct. I can't preclude that a couple of witnesses couldn't be dispensed with, both the question and the cross-examination, in a week or two weeks. But it's just not going to be some time within the next few weeks, because I don't think you can fairly ask either side to be prepared to go forward with that without a reasonable period of discovery and depositions.

Q So witnesses can be called in a reasonable period of time without throwing the trial off balance?

MR. LOCKHART: I think what I just stated was just the opposite, which is the actual question --

Q "Reasonable" was the word you used, Joe.

MR. LOCKHART: Okay, let me say it again. I'll try to be more clear. You can actually do the questioning and the cross-examination in a reasonable time; over a week or two. The point is, is you can't do that the first week of February, you can't do that the second week of February, because you have to then have a time -- you have to have a time period intervening where the White House, the floor managers are given access to all information, there is time to depose any such witnesses -- that is going to take an extended period of time.

So some people can make the argument that, sure, it will only take us a couple days to ask these questions and you ask some questions -- but that sort of skirts the main point of when that actually would happen.

Q Joe, to follow up a little on Anne's question earlier, the President said he was going to spend as little time as possible worrying about impeachment -- he sounds and acts at times as if this is happening to somebody else. Is he really that detached about this whole process?

MR. LOCKHART: No. No. And I think you can -- there's a risk in trying to over-analyze his comments and what he's doing. As I've told you, he understands what's going on, he understands it's important, but he's making an assessment of what the best use of his time is. And the best use of his time is to concentrate on the job at hand, the agenda, the State of the Union, the budget, and that's what he's doing.

Q Is he making the assessment that that's the best use of his time or that it's important that the public perceives that that's how he's using his time?

MR. LOCKHART: I'll leave you to make an assessment of the public -- he's making an assessment that's the best use of his time, that he's got a job to do and the public has a right to expect him to do his job. And that's what he's doing.

Q Joe, aside from the lawyers who will be representing the President at the table tomorrow, what kind of a posture do you all plan to take here as the prosecution unfolds over the next three days --

MR. LOCKHART: Let me deal with this in kind of a logistical way. I think, from my understanding of the calendar, most of the days that the House managers go on start in the afternoon. So I think I'll probably have very little to say from here about that, because it won't have happened yet, because we meet around this time every day.

I think -- we have a team that will be up on the Hill and if, as appropriate, at the end of the day, if they all have something to say, I think the Senate has arranged for a place where all sides can go and make comments at the end of the day about what happened that day. So from a logistics point of view, what I would expect on most days probably more of the action to be up there, rather than here.

Q And would that reaction come on the days when not just the administration's case is being presented, but whether, for instance, the House managers --

MR. LOCKHART: Sure, potentially -- if there is something that I think our legal team believes is relevant to say after the proceedings, they're certainly able to do that from there.

Q Could I ask a question? One of the fundamental points in the trial brief is the unfairness, actually, the unconstitutionality of bundling several different allegations. For those of us who aren't lawyers, could you explain more specifically what example you can show us of where several allegations have been bundled?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes. I think if you look at the perjury charge, they outline four different areas that they charge on perjury. And the problem with stacking those all in one article is the Constitution is clear that they believe two-thirds of the Senate has to vote that the President of the United States should be removed from office based on a charge, based on a high crime or misdemeanor.

But when you stack them all in together in sort of a general way, you have the potential of less than two-thirds believing that one charge is true and the others aren't; and then less than two-thirds believing another part of the charge is true, but the others aren't. And when you add that all up you have the potential for a Senate where two-thirds of the Senate does not believe that the President should be removed for these actions, but you could have a vote that is two-thirds. So it's a constitutional argument that the articles should be specific and should not all be bundled in together in one article.

Q Would you prefer separate votes on each charge?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, our preference has very little to do with anything. The House chose to move forward the way they did and you'll have to ask them why they put these together. I think if they believed these charges were strong and true that they should have put them on the floor of the House in the very specific articles, and went through them one by one and let the will of the House and the will of the Senate -- they didn't do that. They chose to bundle them all up together. And I think it's more appropriate for them to explain why they did it that way.

Q But, Joe, isn't it reasonable to assume that you could put together a bunch of statements which, taken as a whole, constitutes some sort of perjury?

MR. LOCKHART: These aren't a bunch of statements. Read the article. These are areas of perjury. It's kind of a new piece of law here, which is you don't look at particular statements, like you would in any case you'd see in a courtroom in this country, you have sort of areas. And they have things -- and there are things like -- they accuse him of committing perjury because he said "on occasion," as opposed to "I did something 11 times," or "I had these many calls," or "this many" -- and "certain instances" is a perjurious statement.

I think that's dealt with very directly in the trial brief, and I would recommend that you concentrate on that, because it's an important part of the case.

Q But they do cite specifics and then say "these together constitute perjury."

MR. LOCKHART: Again, that is one area -- there's also the area of obstruction where there are several different things. You do have the constitutional issue of whether, at the end of the day, the American public will be certain if two-thirds voted in a positive way on one of the articles, whether they really were -- it really was two-thirds. And I think it's a constitutional argument and it is included in this brief for the Senate to consider.

Q Joe, the document today says that the President misremembered the date that the affair began. Are they now acknowledging that that bit of his testimony was inaccurate?

MR. LOCKHART: No. I think as I understand it, you have two different recollections. I think --

Q But the document says the President misremembered the --

MR. LOCKHART: Again, I didn't spend a lot of time on that bit, so let me come back to you on that specifically, or let me have Jim look into it. But I think on the broader point, the point that's being questioned is that they are accusing him of perjury based on the fact that one witness testified that it started in one month and another witness testified it started in a different month. I think the case they make there is that it's a recollection issue rather than a question of willfully misleading.

Q Joe, at a stakeout earlier, Lautenberg said that there are possibilities all around, spectrums how things could happen as a result of this impeachment trial, but he said what was probable, he didn't want to talk about because he was a juror. Now, that left kind of an impression that there was already a foregone conclusion of what's going to happen. Do you think that that's already the case in the Senate now, that many of them already have plotted out what they want to do, they're just not saying it?

MR. LOCKHART: I think it's up to senators to articulate what their views are. I'll tell you that based on the legal brief that was introduced today to the Senate, based on the presentations that I think will largely track that, I think senators at the end of this process will understand that there isn't a factual, a legal, a constitutional foundation for this and it doesn't reach the standards of an impeachable offense.

Q Joe, what I'm saying is, and I'm looking for an answer, that it seems to be a foregone conclusion of what's going to happen. Is the White House concerned that that is the case, that they've already made up their minds and it's going down party lines or --

MR. LOCKHART: No, I think the White House believes that the Senate's going forward in good faith and that they will carefully consider the evidence placed before them. And we believe that with arguments that are like the ones set forth in the document or the trial brief today, they'll see that there isn't a factual, legal or constitutional foundation for the removal of the President.

Q Is he going to do a rehearsal of the State of the Union address today?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know that he'll do that today, but he's certainly got a couple of them planned between now and next Tuesday. I'll let you know afterwards if they actually get to the point that they're into the theater and practicing.

Q One side applauding and one side sitting on their hands? (Laughter.)

MR. LOCKHART: I'm glad you brought that up, because we need a few extra stagehands. We've got the people to boo, we just need people to clap.

Q I'll go. I'll volunteer.

MR. LOCKHART: Helen, you're in. I saw that, Mara.

Q Joe, has the President ruled out voluntarily testifying before the Senate?

MR. LOCKHART: The question has not been put to him in a formal way, but I have no expectation that he'll testify, he'll testify to the grand jury and that they have all of those documents.

Q Any thought that he might go up there and watch any of the proceedings?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm sorry, I'm just trying to read a note here. Okay, let me read this. "The brief doesn't say we believe he misremembered, it says sub-Part I of the Article alleges he misremembered."

Q Sub-part one alleges the President committed perjury before the grand jury about the details of his relationship with Ms. Lewinsky, including apparently such insignificant matters as misremembering the precise month -- that's not in quotes, those are the words of your attorneys, correct?

MR. LOCKHART: It is the allegation made by the House managers.

Q The House managers allege that he misremembered?

MR. LOCKHART: No, they allege that he committed perjury, not that he misremembered.

Q And you're casting it as misremembering? This is a small point, but I was interested in knowing whether you were reeling this back in. The President gave a range of dates for the beginning of the affair, and he says, well --

MR. LOCKHART: I don't believe that's the case, but let me check with the lawyers. I think Jim's interpretation is correct, but there's always the chance that even Jim makes a mistake from time to time, and we'll find out.

Q There's now -- we have daily skirmishes now with Iraq. Is the United States effectively at war with Iraq?

MR. LOCKHART: No, the United States is continuing to follow a policy they followed since the end of the Gulf War federal containing the threat of Saddam Hussein.

Q I mean, we're having these daily --

MR. LOCKHART: My first answer was really good.
(Laughter.)

Q I didn't hear it.

MR. LOCKHART: Okay. Trust me. (Laughter.) Let me go through the answer and then you can follow up. We've had a policy of containing Saddam Hussein since the end of the Gulf War, and that policy is based on crippling economic sanctions that have cost him $120 billion at least since the end of the war; degrading his ability to threaten his neighbors and to reconstitute or deliver weapons of mass destruction. And that's the policy we're going to continue to pursue until we see some positive change and some indication that Saddam Hussein is willing to disarm.

Q But we're seeing it going in the opposite direction, aren't you? Every day he is sort of escalating what is --

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think the policy towards Iraq has moved back and forth over the last six or seven years. That doesn't mean we're any less resolute. There's a credible and robust threat of force in the region; should we determine that that needs to be used, where our pilots vigorously enforce the no-fly zone and take the necessary steps in order to protect themselves to do that -- it's important work that they do in the region; it's important to the neighbors that are threatened by Saddam Hussein, and to his own people, and we'll continue to do it.

Q You're going to continue this back and forth where they shoot at a plane, we fire back -- you're going to let that go on without taking any further action?

MR. LOCKHART: You can fully understand why I'm not going to get into what options may or may not be available to our force there. But what I will say is that we will continue to pursue a policy that contains the very real threat in the region and to the world of Saddam Hussein's regime.

Q Well, Joe, has Saddam been put on notice that if he continues to paint and target American pilots that he will face serious repercussions for that, or are we just going to wait until a pilot gets shot down and then try and figure out what to do?

MR. LOCKHART: Again, I'm not going to get into what options are before us or not, but he should understand that the risks he takes in violating the no-fly zone or violating any of the agreements that he made at the end of the Gulf War.

Q Joe, as the limited response the U.S. has taken -- there have been several incidents in the past few weeks -- does this have anything to do with the fact that were still in the period of Ramadan?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I think what's happened here is the fact that Saddam Hussein has chosen to test our resolve in enforcing the no-fly zone. So I think you should ask him about --

Q Every time he does we give him the same response.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, that may be your view.

Q I think the question that he is asking is, is the U.S. holding back from resuming sustained air strikes because of Ramadan?

MR. LOCKHART: We will respond as we deem appropriate to the threat; the pilots in the region will enforce the no-fly zone vigorously; they will take the steps they need to take to protect themselves. And I'm not going to get into what options may or may not be available to us in the future.

Q Joe, there's a new poll out today, it happens to be an NBC poll -- but it seems to show --

MR. LOCKHART: Did you guys get that?

Q Yes -- an erosion of support for the President. A month ago, more than two-thirds of Americans surveyed said that they didn't think that he should be convicted and removed. Now it's a little over half. Do you think that that's anomaly? Do you see any evidence of support for him eroding?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't. As anecdotal as our information is, who knows what it's attributed to -- margin of error, fatigue -- I don't know. I saw up on the screen and without any explanation the poll numbers; I don't know what it means.

Q But you haven't seen anything that suggests to you --

MR. LOCKHART: No. No.

Q What do you mean, as anecdotal as our information is? Are you saying you're not polling?

MR. LOCKHART: No. But I don't talk about that. I talk to people in the street and they tell me he's doing a great job and they want him to stay.

Q -- his remarks as they appeared to be, that he has no plans to mention impeachment in the State of the Union?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, there's no plans that I know of. If that changes, I'll let you know.

Q Joe, can I follow up on Wolf's earlier question about the State of the Union and the timing? Would the White House like to see a one-day pause in the trial so the State of the Union can be delivered?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm going to leave the discussions of Senate scheduling in the Senate and I'm sure they'll let you know, and I'm not going to express an opinion one way or the other on that.

Q But the possibility is being discussed, then?

MR. LOCKHART: Talk to the people in the Senate.

Q You're not involved?

Q If you're asking for it, why can't we talk to you?

MR. LOCKHART: And I'm saying I'm not talking about any stance we may or may not be taking in our discussions with the Senate. It's appropriate for the Senate to make these decisions. We'll keep our discussions with them private.

Q Joe, if the President is subpoenaed to appear, would he fight the subpoena or would he appear before the --

MR. LOCKHART: Ask me when you don't have "if" at the beginning of that sentence.

Q Joe, Larry Flynt's investigator, Dan Moldea, says that he has uncovered information on additional Republicans, but is going to withhold it as long as they don't criticize the President. Does this strike you as blackmail and will the White House call for him to cease and desist?

MR. LOCKHART: Listen, the President has been as clear as possible that he thinks the politics of personal destruction should cease and desist, and should have ceased and desisted a long time ago. I don't know anything about this gentleman you're talking about. I believe, as the President agrees, that all of this kind of sleazy politics ought to stop and it ought to stop from the right, from the left and from the people who create the market in this stuff. And it's our hope that it does.

Q Joe, we talked a little bit about this on Monday, but the new document raises the question again. The President's brief today embraces Lewinsky's testimony throughout. Are you suggesting she's an entirely credible witness or an occasionally credible witness?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm suggesting that that's how she testified and I don't have anything more to add than I talked about on Monday.

Q Joe, the House managers are now saying that the President orchestrated an attempt to discredit Monica Lewinsky. Do you have any response to that?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know what their evidence is, but I'm not aware of any attempt. And I think if there was an attempt to orchestrate any campaign to discredit her you would have reported on it long ago and extensively, and I don't think you have.

Q Did the President telephone Michael Jordan, and is there any connection between Mrs. Clinton's trip to Chicago today and the timing of his announcement? (Laughter.)

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I know of. I don't think he's called him, but I don't want to rule that out. It would be the kind of call I think he'd love to make.

Q Joe, to follow up on that previous question, you do acknowledge that the President was involved in trying to discredit Ms. Lewinsky when he told Sid Blumenthal that she came on to him and was a stalker and all of that?

MR. LOCKHART: I haven't talked to either of those about whether that testimony -- what the veracity of that testimony or what that's all about. So I don't know anything.

Q You don't doubt the testimony of those --

MR. LOCKHART: But let me add that if there was an orchestrated campaign, you guys would have noticed it. And I think that when you look at this and you look at people here at the White House who talk to you on a regular basis -- and I think you have to recognize that over the last 12 months that that sort of stuff hasn't gone on and that needs to be recognized.

Q Joe, what do you have on Haiti? The developments down there seem to indicate the attempt to establish democracy through the occupation and so forth is now on the brink of failure.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I know Tony Lake, the President's former National Security Advisor, was there, trying to move -- trying to break the logjam that has existed there for some time. We note with concern the shooting of President Preval's sister. She is now in stable condition; her driver was killed in the incident. And we hope that those responsible for this crime are identified and quickly brought to justice.

We will continue to work with the parties, both through Mr. Lake and continuing to work with all sides there to try to break the impasse. And we continue to stress the importance of the continuity of all of Haiti's democratic institutions.

Q Joe, Lieberman also said today that public opinion -- that the Senate should take notice of public opinion, but that it shouldn't control their deliberations. What does the White House think? Does the White House think that public sentiment plays any role, should play any role in their --

MR. LOCKHART: Yes. I think Senator Lieberman wisely articulates the balance that needs to be struck.

Q Is the White House planning any intervention in Brazil?

MR. LOCKHART: I'll leave that to Mr. Sperling's comments. I think he went about as far as we're going to go.

Q Well, he said to expect a Treasury announcement. Can you say anything about that?

MR. LOCKHART: Expect a Treasury announcement.

Q Has the President talked to President Cardoza today? Has he spoken --

MR. LOCKHART: I don't think the President has. I know that as he said earlier today, there have been administration officials who have spoken to their counterparts both in Brazil and at the IMF.

Q Did you mean to leave open the possibility that Sid Blumenthal lied under oath when he said --

MR. LOCKHART: No, I did not. I just said I'm not familiar with the circumstances of that and I'm answering a broader question here.

Q Will you take the question of whether the President disputes Sid Blumenthal's testimony?

MR. LOCKHART: No, because I'm not going to try to try the case from here. You've got plenty of action that's going to happen starting on Capitol Hill tomorrow; that's the right place for it.

Q In the check in the Paul Jones settlement, do you know whether President physically had to sign the check --

MR. LOCKHART: No. It was -- I think routinely in cases like this, law firms have escrow accounts, checks are put in there and processed, so it was, I assume, signed by some person with check writing authority --

Q Do you know who it was addressed to? Was it a single check, although it came from two different accounts?

MR. LOCKHART: You know, I'd refer you over to Mr. Bennett for confirmation. I have no reason to dispute the newspaper accounts that it was written to a series of lawyers, but I don't know myself.

Q Did the President have to take any action to have money taken from his and Mrs. Clinton's blind trust?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't think it would be any different than if they needed the money to buy a new house or go and spend money.

Q But he would have to --

MR. LOCKHART: There is a process by which money is transferred out of that account, and I'm sure they followed it.

Q Is he disappointed, Joe, that he had to spend some of his own money on this?

MR. LOCKHART: I think it would make him inhuman if he didn't have some disappointment that that much cash had to come out of his account.

Q Is it true that the bulk of that money was earned by Mrs. Clinton?

MR. LOCKHART: I think, given the pay scale here at the government, it's probably true.

Q Is Secretary Cohen, being a former senator, playing any role in the impeachment matter, talking to senators?

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I'm aware of. I think he's got quite a full plate at the Pentagon.

Q Are you aware of The New York Post story?

MR. LOCKHART: Which one?

Q Concerning an actress?

MR. LOCKHART: Oh, I did see that this morning. I, first off, know nothing at all about that story. But I can tell you categorically that no one here at the White House or no one who works in any way with this government would ever seek to use the IRS in a political way. And I think that story, as inaccurate as it is, is instructive in telling us there are people on Capitol Hill, in the House, who have argued that somehow, some of the things the President has done is a grave offense to the state.

Using the IRS and using government is a grave offense in the state, and you all remember the last time we went through an impeachment where Richard Nixon used the FBI, the CIA, the IRS, elements of the government in order to obstruct justice. So I think it's instructive in the sense that it reminds us of what impeachment and what the Constitution had in mind when the framers of the Constitution wrote it, again as -- I'm not even quite certain from reading the article whether a direct charge is made, but I can assure you that if the charge is that somehow the White House is involved and that someone in the government is involved in this, it's not accurate.

Q Joe, could you give us a little preview of what the President's going to be doing in New York tomorrow? The Wall Street --

MR. LOCKHART: Yes. As those of you who traveled with the President last year, it will be the second time he's attended this gathering. And it's a group headed by Reverend Jackson and some partners on Wall Street. As a general overview, this group is trying to extend some of what's great about American capitalism and Wall Street to all sectors of our society.

The President will attend a gala dinner Thursday night, which will be actually on the floor of the Exchange -- Thursday night -- and then will speak at the conference Friday morning.

Q Is he speaking Thursday night, Joe? At the gala?

MR. LOCKHART: I expect he might have some brief remarks. There will be an expanded pool in there, so -- but I expect his substantive remarks to be Friday morning and not Thursday night.

Q Joe, one of the new seminars at that Wall Street meeting that Reverend Jackson is running is about African investment issues. In light of all the troubles in Africa these days, what does the President have to say about the troubles in Africa and how it is derailing his African initiative?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, there certainly are a series of destabilizing problems in Africa, and this administration is working hard to defuse them. I was just talking about Tony Lake -- he leaves today, right, or tomorrow -- today or tomorrow to go and try to help in the Ethiopia-Eritrea dispute. There are certainly problems going on in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, that all make difficult -- but we're going to continue to work to try to work these disputes out in a peaceful way. And the President will continue to try to promote economic prosperity as a way towards moving toward democratic and market institutions on the continent.

Q Joe, the brief today points out the fact that the President was twice elected by the American people, and that he is now under assault by charges that, the brief points out, are fatally flawed and even unconstitutional. I'm just wondering, on the eve of a Senate process that threatens that office, what business of the American people could possibly be more important to the President than preserving his office and defending the will of the people.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think that, if you go out and you talk to Americans, they have a real understanding of what went on in the House and what's about to go on in the Senate. And what they expect the President to do is to focus on their problems, their interests, their issues -- whether they be education, Social Security -- things that impact their lives. And I think they'd have every right in the world to be disappointed if the President didn't do that.

Q "What's about to go on in the Senate," Joe? You said, what's gone on in the House, what's -- were you suggesting that something untoward was going to happen in the Senate?

MR. LOCKHART: No, no. I'm suggesting that most Americans have, I think -- to go back to someone's polling, that people think that what went on in the House was partisan, but a substantial majority think that the Senate can do this fairly.

Q Joe, I don't know if you spoke about this earlier in the week. If you did, you can forget about it. But --

Q Probably did.

MR. LOCKHART: Forget about it, Wolf.

Q I wonder if you want to comment on, now that that Star tabloid's report has been thoroughly debunked, what your thoughts are about the way various news organizations reported that.

MR. LOCKHART: I think it was an instructive piece of experiment that separated -- that sought to separate some of the responsible media from the irresponsible media. Those of you who reported know who you are; those of you who didn't know who you are.

Q In your brief, as you try to make the point about this not being high crimes and misdemeanors, even if it's true, you cite Alexander Hamilton from the Federalist Papers, talking about how impeachment is supposed to be "abuse or violation of some public trust."

MR. LOCKHART: Right.

Q If the President lies to the American people, and then lies under oath -- and I'm not saying he did lie under oath, but I'm saying if he did lie under oath -- that's not abusing a public trust?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think if you go on and look at -- we cite George Mason and Alexander Hamilton, he goes on and talks about "injuries done to the society itself." So I think the arguments that the framers were trying to make was, they wanted to set a different standard for a duly elected President of the United States that said, you'd need to subvert the republic or do a grave injustice to the state.

So, separating the fact that this legal brief argues that they haven't made the case, and that the President denies those, there's nothing here that does that damage or does that harm to the state. And that's what our brief is. And compared to -- you can look back over other cases -- if you look at the case of President Nixon, there I think the majority of the House -- or excuse me, the committee, because the process was ultimately short-circuited -- believe that this was -- that the government was harmed, the state was harmed.

Q So the President enjoys a different standard than the common man?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I think the President is the only person -- there is only one President, and I think you can argue round and round on this, and you can probably have a lot of disingenuous sessions about "above the law," "below the law." I think if this case was brought in a courtroom, this case would be over pretty quickly, for arguments that we made here. It's not a courtroom. This is the United States House of Representatives and the Senate, and it's a process unique in and of itself.

But the Constitution we believe is clear about the standards that need to be applied. And based on those standards, this doesn't reach that level.

Now, this is a theory argument. It's a constitutional argument because this brief today also argues strongly that there is no factual or evidentiary case made on either of the articles of impeachment.

Q Joe, on the question of witnesses, one of the House managers has just said in a television interview that the House managers are in touch with Monica Lewinsky to try to obtain her testimony as a witness. Do you think that's appropriate? Have the White House lawyers been in touch with any witnesses?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I think -- I'm not aware that anyone at the White House has been in touch with any witnesses. I think what would be appropriate is for the Senate to work its will. We're two weeks, three weeks away from the Senate making a decision on this, and I'll leave it for the House managers to decide what's appropriate for them.

Q Would that statement also cover them not being in touch with any of the witnesses' attorneys, Joe?

MR. LOCKHART: As far as I know. I'm just not aware that there's been any work done on that.

Thanks.

CLIMATE CHANGE BUDGET PAPER -- OUTLINE

I. CCTI

- R&D Investments
 - Buildings
 - Transportation
 - Industry
 - Electricity

[Bullets written by agencies; edited by WHCCTF]

- Tax Incentives

[Bullets written by agencies; edited by WHCCTF]

II. USGCRP -- Buenos Aires Fact Sheet on USGCRP should be used as template for this section. Include general description of program; major research projects; specific funding increases, including:

- Carbon Cycle Research Initiative (both Forest Service & ARS)

III. Budget Items w/Significant Climate Co-Benefits

- Clean Air Partnership Fund
- Advanced Coal Research
- DOE State Grants
- Ag Conservation Programs
 - Conservation Technical Assistance
 - Forestry Incentives Program
 - EQIP
 - Farmland Protection
 - Wildlife Habitat Incentives
 - Conservation Farm Option
 - CRP
 - PL-586
 - Stewardship Incentives Program
 - Forest Legacy
 - Wetlands Reserve Program
- CMAQ (congestion management)

Writing and Editing: It is proposed that initial drafts of the above sections be written by:

- I. DOE, EPA, Ag to provide bullets; Randy Steer, Bob Tuccilo & Henry Kelly to provide charts.
- II. OSTP -- contact: Peter Backlund
- III. Clean Air Fund -- Brad/Linda
Coal Research -- DOE
State Grants -- DOE
Ag -- Margot Anderson/Linda Delgado or person designated by them
CMAQ -- ???

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release January 13, 1999

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
ON DISABILITY INITIATIVE

The East Room

12:58 P.M. EST

THE PRESIDENT: Wow. Wasn't she great? Let's give her another hand. She was great. Thank you. (Applause.)

On behalf of all of us in our administration, many of whom are here, I want to thank all the advocates for persons with disabilities in our audience. I thank especially Tony Coelho; Becky Ogle; Paul Marchand; my great friend, Justin Dart; Paul Miller and others. I want to thank all the people in the administration, those in the Cabinet who are here with me and the agency heads and the others in the White House who have done so much to help to sensitize me and the Vice President and others to the challenges and our obligations.

I say a special word of thanks to Tom Harkin, who has personally taught me a lot about the issues we discuss today; to Senator Ted Kennedy and to Senator Jeffords. I knew if I listened long enough that Republican rhetoric would finally sound good around one issue. (Laughter.) And you did it today, and I thank you. You were just great. It was great.

I'd also like to thank two great friends of this cause who are in the audience: Senator Jack Reed from Rhode Island, and Congressman Ben Cardin from Maryland. We thank them for being here. (Applause.)

You know, a lot of things have already been said, and I would like to say something not in my notes. I hope nobody will take this the wrong way, because everybody knows what a great enthusiast I am of athletics. Most of the cameras at this hour are somewhere else, and I want to say, on behalf of my wife -- from Chicago -- and myself, that we wish Michael Jordan well. We admire him, we like him very much, and we thank him for years of thrilling exploits.

In my life, I don't know that I ever saw another athlete with such a remarkable set of qualities of mind, body and spirit -- not only somebody who had a body that would do things no one else's would do, but who always expected to do whatever it was he tried to do. And I think it's appropriate that the sports fans around America take a day or two to "ooh" and "aah" and hold their breath again, and be glad again. But the courage of Karen Moore, and all the people like her, is greater still by far. (Applause.)

I remember once, many years ago, after I lost an election and became the youngest former governor in American history -- (laughter) -- with very dim future prospects, a wise old country lawyer wrote me a letter. And he said, Bill, you know, it takes a little bit of strength to sustain a terrible setback; but the real courage in life is living through the grind of day-to-day existence with dignity and nobility and charity.

How much more true is that for people with disabilities, for whom daily existence can be a greater grind, for whom charity is harder to muster of the spirit because so many of the rest of us have been so blindly insensitive to things which would enable all of us to get through that daily life better.

A lot of good things have happened since the '70s -- Senator Kennedy talked about it -- since these gentlemen and others passed the Americans With Disabilities Act. We did have a great renewal of the IDEA a year or so ago. But 75 percent of Americans with disabilities are still unemployed. You just heard why. Millions are forced to make the impossible choice between going to work and keeping their health insurance. Millions more lack the tools and services that could make the difference between dependence and independence.

We all know working is a fundamental part of what we say is the American Dream. Maya Angelou once said that work is "something made greater by ourselves, and in turn, that makes us greater." You heard Karen, you heard what she said -- how I'm working, how I love being at work, oh, by the way, my family life is better and I don't get sick as much. That is not an accident. Every single one of us, we want to be fully engaged in life. And we ought to have the chance to do so.

I like what Senator Jeffords said about how the Congressional Budget Office might or might not estimate this initiative, and I had that argument before and lost it, so I'm not going to get into that. But let me ask you this. When we've got the largest surplus in our history, the longest peacetime expansion in our history, perhaps the strongest economy we've ever had, if we cannot address this issue now, then when will we ever address it? Now is the time. (Applause.)

So here is what we propose to do. First, you've already heard about the landmark legislation by Senators Jeffords, Kennedy, Roth, and Moynihan, to assist millions of Americans with disabilities who want to work. Today I am pleased to announce that the balanced budget I will present to Congress fully funds this vitally important initiative. (Applause.) Americans should never have to choose between the dignity of work and the health care they need. With this legislation they'll have a ticket to work, not an impossible choice.

I will also continue to work with Congress to pass legislation I know is very important to the disability community, a strong, enforceable patients' bill of rights. (Applause.) And to strengthen Social Security for the 21st century, not just for retirees, but also for people with disabilities -- and we ought to do it this year, with no excuses. (Applause.)

Second, we must make it easier for people with disabilities to get to work. As anyone with a disability can tell you, it takes more than a job to enter the work force. Often, it takes successful transportation, specialized technology or personal assistance. And the cost can be prohibitively high. Today, I am pleased to announce a new $1,000 tax credit so hundreds of thousands of people with disabilities will be helped to meet these critically important expenses. (Applause.)

Finally, we have to give people with disabilities the tools they need to succeed -- we all need that. I hope all of you had a chance to experience and see the amazing displays out there in the Grand Foyer -- from a portable computer kiosk that helps people with disabilities vote or find a job, to the latest , voice recognition software that lets you use a computer without touching a keyboard, to a new generation of mobile telephones that connect directly to hearing aids, to a device to immediately translate music into braille.

This kind of "assistive technology," as it is called, will empower people as never before. Today, I am pleased to announce that my budget will double our investment in this sort of technology, to make it more available to people with disabilities. (Applause.)

We also will help states to expand low-income loan programs to help more people afford these promising products. The federal government will become a model user of assistive technology; we will increase our commitment to research and development to continue our progress.

Increased access to health care, more assistance at home and in the workplace, remarkable new technologies made more available: This is how we can make sure that all Americans can take their rightful place in our 21st century workplaces.

Last summer the Vice President announced our plan to build at the FDR Memorial a new statue of President Roosevelt in the wheelchair, from which he led our nation -- the wheelchair he then felt compelled to hide because of the negative attitudes of his time. Well, we've come a long way since those days and, even though we in public life get to make the speeches, I think it's clear to all of us that you deserve the credit -- all of the work you have done. (Applause.)

People with disabilities are increasingly a powerful presence in America, from our schools to our businesses to the halls of government -- but maybe equally important, increasingly a welcome, comfortable, normal presence. President Roosevelt said, "No country, no matter how rich, can afford to waste its human resources." This is really all about living up to that objective.

Thank you, Karen. Thank you, ladies and gentlemen.
Let's go out and pass this legislation. Thank you. (Applause.)

END

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

January 13, 1999

REMARKS BY THE VICE PRESIDENT
AT ANNOUNCEMENT OF 20 NEW EMPOWERMENT ZONES

Old Executive Office Building

9:47 A.M. EST

THE VICE PRESIDENT: Thank you. I appreciate your warm welcome. Thank you for coming. Welcome to the White House. Priscilla Hill Ardoin, thank you for your kind introduction. I want to thank you, and in thanking you I also want to express gratitude to all of the business partners who have been so instrumental in making these winning plans possible here today. The teams that are here in this audience have done an extraordinary job.

This is a little bit like the play-offs or the Super Bowl -- these winning teams have made it all the way. And congratulations to all of you. And key members of your teams have been from the business community and I want to thank all of the businesses that have stepped up to the plate, so to speak, and have made a lot of these winning applications possible.

I want to thank my colleagues, Secretary Cuomo and Secretary Glickman -- Rhoda Glickman is here today -- and Assistant Secretary Cardell Cooper, Under Secretary of Agriculture Jill Long Thompson, and other members of the HUD and Agriculture teams. These guys have worked incredibly hard. They're close friends, they're close friends of one another, and you can see their teamwork in the way this whole program has worked so smoothly. And Agriculture and HUD as agencies have done a fantastic job.

I'm going to acknowledge the individual Senators and members of the House and mayors and other leaders at the conclusion of my remarks, when we invite each group up for the award ceremony, so forgive me for not mentioning all of you at the beginning.

Also, there are a lot of enterprise communities that are going to be happy with the awards that are announced. We will not be presenting each one of them individually, but I want to express my congratulations to all of the enterprise community winners. And I know Senator Susan Collins, from Maine, has worked hard on the enterprise community that will be winning from Maine.

I want to thank my colleagues, Mickey Ibarra and Lynn Cutler, here in the White House; and Julian Potter, who has been the principal staff person heading up our empowerment zone and enterprise community initiative; and all of the local officials who are present -- congratulations and welcome.

This really is an extraordinary time for our country, because the excitement that you feel and the communities that have won here today is matched in communities all across the United States of America. Even in those communities that competed for these coveted awards, but did not receive the awards today -- they've come together in order to apply for the award and they found out a lot about themselves in the process. We tried to design the application process in a way that would encourage communities to come together and develop a common vision of what the brightest future for that community might be.

I remember those early meetings six years ago, and I recall in one of those first meetings a little children's story that Disney came up with years ago -- you remember the story of Dumbo, the Elephant, with the big ears -- but he could only fly with his magic feather. And then in a moment of crisis, the feather was nowhere to be found and, of course, the feather was not ultimately necessary at all.

In a sense, the communities that have won these awards could have done most of what you have done without the award -- you could fly, so to speak, toward this brighter future even without this process. But the process, in many cases you've told us, has made it easier for you to get some of the sectors of the communities, some of your partners to come to the table and really pay close attention to what the whole community has at stake. And I think really the biggest success of this whole Empowerment Zone Enterprise Community program has been the way it has encouraged communities to come together. It's been a privilege for me to be a part of it and I am very excited at these awards today.

You know, I do want to say this -- both my colleagues had some kind words about the way the White House has steered this -- I want to make it very clear. A few days ago we passed an historic milestone in America. This is now the longest and strongest economic recovery in the entire history of the United States of America. (Applause.) And there's one man principally responsible for it, and that is President Bill Clinton. (Applause.) And we want to thank President Clinton for his leadership and policies that have made it possible. (Applause.)

And from the beginning the President and I have tried to design policies that not only would give our country a chance to have this strong, sustained economic growth, but would also make it possible for those communities that have been left out in the past, left behind during previous economic booms, to fully participate and to be a part of the prosperity. And the Empowerment Zone Enterprise Community program has been one of the central components of a whole set of policies that have been designed to make sure that people are not left behind.

The good news is that these policies are working. We're allowing everyone to participate. We can see our shining success in neighborhoods and communities and schools across America. We can see it in parents who are hopeful, who dream of a better future for their children and then for their grandchildren -- people who refuse to accept that the way things are is the way they will always be in the future. We see it in local residents, who are bridging the barriers that have divided neighborhoods and groups in the past instead of reaching out their hands across those barriers and joining in common dreams for a brighter future.

It's true that when President Clinton and I first took office there were many willing to throw in the towel on our distressed communities. There were a lot of reasons for that -- prejudice played a role; historic development patterns played a role -- there are many causes. But we knew that if America is going to be strong, our cities and distressed rural communities have to be strong, as well.

Today, in a world more connected than ever before, we really do need the talent and the skill of every single American if we're going to succeed as a nation. We really cannot afford to leave anybody behind.

Time and again we heard from mayors and community leaders who told us that one of the keys to a successful formula was to avoid what the federal government has sometimes done in the past, and that is to come into cities and tell the cities what to do. Instead, what we heard was, listen to us and work with us and give us what we need to do -- in the way that we know how to do it. And so we designed this whole program as a partnership catalyzing program, to help bring jobs back to distressed communities, to help bring private business partners in and get them involved and prideful and committed to the kind of progress that they want to help produce in the communities that they serve.

We wanted, also, to make sure that rural communities would no longer be abandoned. There are so many rural communities where you can go into the high school senior class and ask how many of them are going to stay there, and practically none plan to. We want to change that. And new development patterns make it possible to create hope right in those rural communities. We wanted to encourage entrepreneurs to come back into the community and build their futures there.

Well, we know that there are a lot of other pieces to the puzzle and we've worked on community policing and bringing the crime rate down, transportation policies that make it possible for people going off welfare to get to jobs and back and forth; child care; strong family policies; an effective battle against drugs -- all of the parts of the puzzle do fit together. But economic opportunity and moving communities in the right direction is really at the heart of it.

And I'm proud to tell you today that of the first round winners in our Empowerment Zone and Enterprise Community competition, virtually all of them have shown tremendous progress; tens of thousands of jobs have been created. And now for the first time in more than a generation, our central cities and rural communities are sharing in America's success.

One reason is that this program does work in partnership with other efforts to bring money back to where it needs to be invested -- such as the Community Reinvestment Act, which has inspired the private sector to pledge more than $1 trillion in loans to distressed communities, more than 95 percent of which have been made since 1993. That is why President Clinton and I are going to make sure that the Community Reinvestment Act remains strong for the 21st century.

I have personally been to every single one of these empowerment zones, several of them repeatedly. I've been to quite a few of the enterprise communities, and I've seen what's happening with my own eyes. I recognize a lot of faces in this room from people who have been at our annual White House conferences on empowerment zones. And, indeed, in the last one the applicant communities were invited to come in and have an intensive dialogue with the first round winners, so, as Secretary Glickman said, we could learn from what happened before -- and Secretary Cuomo emphasized this.

And if you go to some of these zones you'll be astonished. If you go to Detroit, Mayor Archer will tell you about the $2 billion in new private investment that has been leveraged right into the heart of the Detroit zone because of the empowerment zone process.

Go to Keyville, Georgia, and they'll tell you quickly about their innovative computer network that links small towns to promote the entire region with stunning success. Go to Kansas City, and Mayor Cleaver will show you how the incentives have helped to renovate the historic jazz district. All across America communities are even reconnecting to their neighboring communities -- not just to bring jobs and opportunity back, but to find common solutions to shared problems, to build more liveable communities and to improve their quality of life.

So now we're about to spark even more growth in jobs, because today we are awarding 20 brand new empowerment zones, 15 urban zones and 5 rural zones all across our country. The second round builds on the first round by providing new opportunity in new and creative ways. At a time when many communities across America are reaching across borders to come up with regional solutions to problems, more than one-third of the urban zones are being awarded to cities that came together to form regional partnerships. And also for the first time, round two allowed

Indian tribes with high poverty to qualify for and receive designation. And we're awarding one today.

And that's just the beginning. I'm pleased to announce that in the budget we will submit to Congress next month we are seeking an additional $1.6 billion in grants to help create jobs, leverage private investment, and bring businesses back to these 20 award winning communities today. We'll need your help. (Applause.)

And let me say, we need your help in building upon the strong bipartisan base of support in the Congress, by magnifying the message that this is a bipartisan approach. There was zero consideration given to whether these communities have been led by Democrats or Republicans or what areas they were in. This is about people, not politics. This is about the future of our country. And you can help us deliver that message loudly and clearly, and that the program works, in order to secure approval of that particular provision I just mentioned. Because if Congress approves full funding for our new empowerment zones, it will help create and retain about 90,000 jobs and stimulate more than $20 billion in new private and public investment. That's a down payment on extending the American Dream to millions of Americans.

I mentioned that we're going to have 20 rural enterprise communities. This, too, is an investment that pays off; 11 of the empowerment zones that we're naming today started out as enterprise communities four years ago. We estimate that they will create and retain 16,000 jobs and stimulate $500 million in public and private investment. And, incidentally, these estimates are not pie-in-the-sky figures, they're based on the real experience that we've already had with the winning communities. These are real numbers.

And there are no losers, because the communities that have gone through this process have felt that it has been a very, very successful one, because groups that have never talked to one another came together for the first time and real progress was made. And that's why I'm proud to announce, as Secretary Cuomo mentioned, that we're going to seek $45 million in special grants to be awarded to the 15 runner-up communities, and we're going to call them strategic planning communities that were finalists in the competition for urban empowerment zones.

The more we can invest in the dreams that are nurtured in these communities, the more we can give them the tools to reach those dreams and reach their goals, turn their dreams into reality. And the stronger our communities will be and the stronger our nation will be.

Now, ladies and gentlemen, I want to thank all of you for being the dreammakers. And now it's my pleasure to present the 20 award winners here today. I'm going to ask each delegation to join me on stage as I read off their names. We're going to go with the urban awards first, and then the rural awards. And then I'll make some very brief concluding comments.

(The awards were presented.)

THE VICE PRESIDENT: Now, ladies and gentlemen, just a brief closing comment. Again, I want to congratulate all of the award winners here today. The only way we're going to meet the challenges of our distressed urban and rural communities is if we work together, and that is exactly what we are doing.

Now, one final word. This award today is the beginning of a new era in these communities. I want you to know that our role as your partner is not over with the giving of this award and the resources that go along with it. We will continue to have our regular White House conferences, with the detailed break-out sessions on how to address and solve all the various problems that you've come across that you would like us to be teammates with you in solving. And we will continue to be available to you on a regular ongoing basis to facilitate communication with your peers and colleagues, and to identify other opportunities. As many of you know, along with this award designation comes not only the resources and the prestige, but also some extra help in various programs and the identification of opportunities.

So I want you to know that this is just the beginning and it's just the beginning for our efforts to be good partners with you, as well.

To one and all, once again, congratulations.
(Applause.)

Yes and no. Here's where we are.

After meeting internally on possible labor provisions, we deployed Bill Samuels to get a quiet "gut check" from labor on our ideas before airing them in a formal meeting. After getting that intelligence, he was to set up a meeting w/ a set of labor leaders and our team.

Monday, he completed the first step w/ IBEW. It went well enough for him to get the larger meeting together, and I know we need to move fast. We'll make it happen ASAP this week.

On substance, Bill says they like a couple of our ideas, but they've got at least one concern that he believes isn't adequately covered by our current set of options (deals w/ reliability -- we're checking on possible responses as I write -- I'm not sure his idea works, but we should be able to construct something that will).

On schedule, Ron Minsk has slated labor issues for discussion in the NEC process -- we're on one week from today.

TEXT:

I suspect this is Hagel spouting off, but we need to find out. I talked to Julie. We should set up a mtg with Lisa immediately and use the hook of budget/sotu as reason for immediacy. We should raise the issue directly, but not as purpose of the meeting. It should be along the lines of -- we have heard what hagel said, it is obviously of tremendous concern to us and it only makes us more intent on addressing your concerns and getting the Senator comfortable with what we are doing. In that regard, we need Dirk ready to discuss and say something positive about coal, and we may want Elgie or someone else to discuss budget. This meeting will deserve an all-star cast.

FIRST LADY HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON,S SCHEDULE
FOR THURSDAY, JANUARY 14, 1999

WASHINGTON, DC -- First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton will visit the National Air & Space Museum to announce the Mars Millennium Project, an official White House Millennium Council youth initiative, on Thursday, January 14, 1999. The new program will challenge kindergarten through high-school students across the nation to imagine and design the first community on Mars. The Mars Millennium Project is a partnership between the White House Millennium Council, the U.S. Department of Education, the National Endowment for the Arts, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) and the J. Paul Getty Trust.

The First Lady will tour the National Air & Space Museum,s What,s Next exhibit and talk to a group of children from the Anne Beers Elementary School in Washington, DC, who are participating in a collaborative project with NASA,s Goddard Space Flight Center. In addition, Mrs. Clinton will address students, teachers, Mars Millennium Project agency and corporate partners in the Einstein Planetarium. U.S. Secretary of Education Richard W. Riley, NASA Administrator Daniel Goldin, National Endowment for the Arts Chairman Bill Ivey, Vice President for Education at the J. Paul Getty Center Theodore Mitchell and former director of the 1997 Mars Pathfinder Project Dr. Donna Shirley, will participate in this event.

EVENT: Launch of the Mars Millennium Project
DATE: Thursday, January 14, 1999
TIME: 1:30 p.m.
LOCATION: National Air & Space Museum
(What,s Next Exhibit Room and Einstein Planetarium)
6th & Independence Ave., SW
Washington, DC

Press Notes:

Space will be limited in the What,s Next exhibit and a pool may need to be created on-site. The speaking program in the Planetarium is open press. Press should use the Independence Avenue entrance to the National Air & Space Museum and proceed to the press check-in table. Press must bring standard press identification to gain access to this event. Press parking is available on Independence Ave. or at the Colonial Parking lot at 6th and C Streets. Lighting and a mult is provided in both rooms.

Pre-Set: 11:00 a.m. - 12:00 p.m.
Final Access: 1:00 p.m.

The on-site contact is Jack Murray.

Editor,s Note: Following the event, Dr. Donna Shirley, former director of the 1997 Mars Pathfinder Project, Ellen McCulloch-Lovell, Director of the White House Millennium Council and Val Marmilion, President of Pacific Visions Communications, will be available in the Planetarium for press questions about the Mars Millennium Project.

I'm free until 2:30, then in meetings until 6:00. Page if you get this before 2:30, and I'll come down.

In the meantime, following are the topics Frank would like to discuss Saturday, as related to Nigel over the lunch hour.

- *Reinvigorating Framework Conv creating third way for Argentina act & review process (pledging round)

- *Defining meaningful participation

- *Economic uncertainty impact on Senate ratification

- *Trading caps
how to resolve issue hot air
need for domestic action

FYI George suggests you, me, he and Frank get together for a small meeting Friday.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

January 12, 1999

PRESS BRIEFING BY JOE LOCKHART

The Briefing Room

1:40 P.M. EST

MR. LOCKHART: Let's see. I have one travel announcement to make before we get to questions. As the President has done in past years, he will travel the day after the State of the Union to amplify on the themes and policies of that speech. This year, the President will travel to Buffalo, New York and to Montgomery County, Pennsylvania on January 20th.

The Vice President and the First Lady will accompany the President on this trip. It's a one-day trip. We'll be back by the evening.

Q What are the events?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, it would be hard to sort of amplify on themes we haven't articulated yet. We plan to deliver the speech.

Q Is he going because Buffalo was declared a local emergency this morning? They've had 41 inches of snow since January 1st, they've called out the National Guard. (Laughter.)

MR. LOCKHART: I am personally now offering my staff to go up and shovel off the site. (Laughter.)

Q Who is going with him?

MR. LOCKHART: The Vice President and the First Lady.

Q Why are they going? Is that part of the theme or what?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes. No, the Vice President and First Lady went last year when we went to University of Illinois and to Wisconsin.

Q Where in --

MR. LOCKHART: I don't have a city yet.

Q Joe, why does the President think it important that he deliver the speech as scheduled on Tuesday?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think as we've said before, what's going on in the Senate right now is important. The Senate needs to take care of the business before them; but the agenda and the policies that the President pursue, the people's business, also has to go forward, and the President believes that it's proper that he give the speech on the 19th and lay out his agenda for this year.

Q Does he find it awkward?

MR. LOCKHART: I think that there are certainly issues -- the issue before the Senate, as I've said, is important. It's certainly not something that the President or anybody here looks , forward to, but I don't think the President has the ability to be distracted. The public expects him to stay focused on his work and he intends to do that.

Q Do you think he will acknowledge the proceedings during his speech?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know.

Q Is the decision to go ahead on the 19th firm, or is the White House still open to changing it if it need be?

MR. LOCKHART: The decision is firm.

Q I understand what you say, it's not something the President looks forward to -- it's the impeachment trial or the speech in the uncomfortable circumstances?

MR. LOCKHART: The President always looks forward to the State of the Union speech as a chance to lay out his agenda. He has enjoyed the work he's done to date on it, which has been rather extensive, and I think he'll look forward to the evening.

Q Despite the uncomfortable circumstances?

MR. LOCKHART: Despite them.

Q Joe, is the President going to keep out of the limelight for the duration of the trial? Is he not going to hold any direct formal news conferences? I mean, he is a criminal defendant. Is he going to speak out?

MR. LOCKHART: If holding a formal news conference was the criteria for keeping out of the limelight, we would have kept a pretty low profile here lately.

Q Once it starts?

MR. LOCKHART: But the answer is no, the President will continue on a bigger schedule of events as he has over the last few months.

Q And you don't preclude a formal news conference?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't preclude anything. I'm certainly not giving any guidance on that front, though.

Q Just for the record, what do you make of the House brief on the impeachment articles, and could you give us some insight as to what you plan to file tomorrow?

MR. LOCKHART: I think what we'll file tomorrow is a longer version of the answer to the charges; it's actually the trial brief that will go through the factual and evidence -- the facts and the evidence that have been put forward, and the constitutional and legal issues and a much more expanded version of what you saw yesterday.

As far as the House brief, I think, as I told you this morning, that it is, at times, a hallmark of what is a weak factual and constitutional case, that the allegations continue to shift and that the rhetoric continues to be overblown. And I think those are the two things that come out of that document.

We have a new bundling and interpretations of the allegations against the President, at this late date. I think -- as someone who is trying to defend themselves, you have a point where you should understand what the charges are, and where you should understand how they are put together and what the bases of them are. And I think we saw some shifting in the documents, , just yesterday.

Q Joe, the articles haven't changed since they were voted on by the House. Why do you say they are being rebundled?

MR. LOCKHART: The articles haven't changed, but if you look at the legal brief, they have now sought to bring back in the article that failed to get a majority vote. You have members telling the media that, we've got a whole bunch of new stuff that we're ready to spring on them. I think we're beyond the point of playing those kind of games, and they should just argue their case.

Q Given this limiting of the charges, do you still stand by what you stated this morning of how the brief reads?

MR. LOCKHART: Sure. I think there is overblown rhetoric in there about sinister plots, and I think that it detracts from the argument they're trying to make.

Q And "cheap mystery" as well?

MR. LOCKHART: That's a good phrase. (Laughter.)

Q How would you describe the administration response to that, that has got to be in by, I think, 10:00 a.m. tomorrow morning?

MR. LOCKHART: Detailed, well-argued and compelling.

Q But what kind of tone would it have, compared, for instance, to the --

MR. LOCKHART: I think it will be based on the facts and the law. I think those of you who have followed our submissions over the last few months will see things that you've seen before. But it will basically make the case that, on the facts and the evidence, the articles are not supported, based on the facts. They're not supported based on the Constitution, or do they have a sufficient legal foundation.

Q Were any Senators consulted for their opinions on the document?

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I'm aware of.

Q Joe, what was the President doing today vis-a-vis the State of the Union, and preparing?

MR. LOCKHART: He's got a meeting this afternoon, I believe. I think sometime in the next hour or so, I think he's got a couple of hours blocked off for a meeting with his team.

Q What's going to be new, Joe, in the submission? What are we likely to see that we haven't heard before?

MR. LOCKHART: If I told you what was going to be new today, it wouldn't be new tomorrow.

Q All right, then let me come at it a different way. Is there likely to be anything in this submission that we have not seen before?

MR. LOCKHART: I am not going to signal what's in the submission, just to give you a broad outline of what I expect it to look like. You can wait until tomorrow, it will be out tomorrow morning.

Q Well, I mean, you've said it will be an expanded version of what the President has submitted so far --

MR. LOCKHART: Correct.

Q -- which, to the President's critics -- granted, they're his critics -- has been totally insufficient, so what's the point?

MR. LOCKHART: The point is, is there's a process here. And the process calls for you to answer the charges formally and then to file a trial brief formally. And we intend to respond in a way that conforms with the rules and procedures of the Senate trial.

Q And you expect it to be effective?

MR. LOCKHART: I do.

Q You still don't know who is going to argue for the President?

MR. LOCKHART: I still don't. I know the universe of people; I don't know how it's all going to be done.

Q Is it the President's decision to dodge reporters and duck us,
to run off stages and so forth, for the millennium?

MR. LOCKHART: You can blame it on me.

Q Or is it your decision and the spinmeisters who are keeping him away from us?

MR. LOCKHART: Is that a pejorative term? Spinmeisters?

Q Yes. It is pejorative.

MR. LOCKHART: I thought so. I know.

Q Whose is it?

Q To what extent, at this point in the proceeding, is the White House making its case to individual Senators? In other words, as the question came up this morning, the House prosecutors gave individual copies of their presentation to individual Senators. Is the White House going to that extent --

MR. LOCKHART: Yes, I didn't look into the logistics, but I'm sure that our documents will get into the hands of all the Senators, either through the leadership structure or directly. We believe that all of them will read it and hope that they will find it to be a persuasive document.

Q Does that go for everything that you're going to send up there, like the rebuttal tomorrow?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes.

Q Are you anticipating anything in the State of the Union that touches on impeachment?

MR. LOCKHART: I think I answered that before in saying that I didn't know.

Q Joe, to follow up the earlier question, is Senator Mitchell playing any role behind the scenes -- in an advisory capacity, a consultative capacity?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes. A behind-the-scenes advisory and in a consultative basis.

Q Is he talking to other Senators on your behalf?

MR. LOCKHART: I have not talked to Senator Mitchell. I wouldn't preclude that he is talking to his old friends. I know that his advice on how to proceed here has proved invaluable to the legal team and the political team here, based on his knowledge of the Senate.

Q Anyone else?

Q Will he be on the team that is before the Senate --

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I'm aware of.

Q Joe, is the President talking to individual Senators even now about impeachment?

MR. LOCKHART: I know that the President talks to Senators. I know he spoke to -- he had Senators at the State Dinner last night, but I haven't checked into the details of any of the conversations.

Q Does the President consider it appropriate for him to talk to Senators about impeachment?

MR. LOCKHART: I think the President believes that the Senators are sophisticated enough to not engage in an inappropriate conversation.

Q Joe, is Mitchell -- I'm going to clarify this -- is he consulting with the legal team, is he consulting directly with the President?

MR. LOCKHART: I'd say he's consulting -- I'm certain that he's spoken to the President -- I don't know when the last time was. But it's mostly the legal and political team that are charged with this.

Q And this is mainly on Senate procedures and his knowledge of the individual personalities up there, or what?

MR. LOCKHART: It's basically moving on the Senate trial. He's an accomplished and gifted lawyer, as well as someone who probably knows as much about how the Senate works as anybody in town.

Q Anyone else in that category?

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I know -- I mean, it is informal, but I know that they talk to him on a pretty regular basis. I don't know if there's other people. There are other former senators who have called to inquire as to what they could do to help. But I don't know that there's anything on any basis that's going forward there.

Q Any Republicans that you've been able to enlist to help you?

Q Bumpers?

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I'm aware of. I know that there have been a variety of former Republican senators who have made public statements about trying to shorten the process and find some way to short-circuit this, but I don't know that we're in any way in touch with them.

Q So Senator Dole isn't involved in this at all anymore?

MR. LOCKHART: No.

Q Joe, now that you've had the House brief, what motions are you considering?

MR. LOCKHART: If we have motions, we will discuss them at the appropriate time, which is not until the end of the Q&A session.

Q What kind of reception do you feel yesterday's filing received?
Joe, what's your sense of how it was received by the Senate?

MR. LOCKHART: I will leave that up to the 100 senators who have to decide that. I haven't gotten any feedback one way or the other.

Q Is that to say that you all are not gauging the reception of your filing? Surely you are.

MR. LOCKHART: I'm going to leave it up to the 100 senators who will sit in judgment of this to render an opinion. I've seen a lot of them on a lot of your channels, so you can ask them directly.

Q Joe, yesterday's submission said that the charges were vague.
After reading the House response or the House game plan, do you still feel like the charges are vague, or did they answer the questions that you had?

MR. LOCKHART: That actually would probably be a better one to put to the lawyers. I didn't ask them that specifically. I was not made aware that anyone feels that they're any more specific than they are now. It does go a little bit to the point that I said before, that with each submission the charges change, and it's difficult enough to defend yourself against a set of charges in these circumstances; but when they change consistently, it makes it even more difficult.

Q Joe, you said this morning that the Republican brief read like a bad mystery novel.

MR. LOCKHART: I did.

Q And what's the mystery? (Laughter.)

MR. LOCKHART: I think it was more the language that was employed.

Q Joe, can you explain to us the press arrangements for today's speech? I understand it took place in a rather large auditorium, but it was pool press --

MR. LOCKHART: No, I can't, because I wasn't involved in those arrangements. You should ask my staff that does --

Q Well, I thought you said to blame you for the fact that he wasn't --

MR. LOCKHART: Listen, if you all are sitting out there thinking that I sit and decide whether something is pool or isn't, you know that isn't the case, so ask the people who know. Is that not clear, Josh?

Q No, it's not entirely.

MR. LOCKHART: Okay, then follow up.

Q I'm not clear. Who is making the decisions, then? Apparently, it was a rather elaborate thing where there was a plastic shield where people couldn't see the President.

MR. LOCKHART: Apparently? I don't know, I wasn't there. Were you there?

Q I wasn't there. It was pool only, Joe. What am I supposed to tell you?

MR. LOCKHART: Okay. I think you should, if you have a problem, take it up with the Correspondents Association and we'll be glad to look at it.

Q The Correspondents Association doesn't make these arrangements.

MR. LOCKHART: Listen, you're asking me a question I don't know the answer to. If you'd like, we'll take a filing break, I'll go talk to my staff and come back with information. Is that what we want to do?

Q Joe, let me just ask a general question, which is, is there a decision here, or has the press operation or others here made a decision that until the impeachment matter is resolved the President won't get into a back and forth with the press corps?

MR. LOCKHART: No.

Q No, no decision, or no what?

Q That's bad.

MR. LOCKHART: What's bad?

Q It's bad to keep reporters away from the President.

MR. LOCKHART: Listen, if you seriously want to have a serious conversation, come up to my office, we'll talk about it. If you want to stand there and try to talk to me about something you know I don't have knowledge of
in a way to embarrass me, I don't think that's productive. So let's move on.

Q You have no control over whether something is pool or open?

MR. LOCKHART: I do; it's my office. But I'm telling you that I don't make these decisions on a case-by-case basis. And if you're asking me to look into this, I'll be glad to look into it.

Q We are trying to say to you that the President --

MR. LOCKHART: I understand what you're trying to say to me.

Q -- that the President is being kept away from reporters.

MR. LOCKHART: I take your point. I take your point.

Q For those of us who have covered this man since the day he arrived in the White House, there has been a distinct lack of access -- not just for the time that you've been press secretary, but starting before that -- where the chance to regularly engage the President in questions and answers, either informally in the Oval Office or in the Roosevelt Room has been gone, and it's not just by coincidence.

MR. LOCKHART: That is a different question than asking me about an event I didn't go to and whether we purposely took a big auditorium and made it pool. I will look into it. I will address that question because that's,

I believe, a legitimate question -- which is, we try to make the President available, there are times when we, either through news conferences or in pool spray settings that he is available. There are times that we go sometime where he's not. And we have to make that judgment on a day-by-day basis -- which is,
I think, a different thing than whether he's in a room that should be pool or not.

Q Would you acknowledge that for the last several weeks access to the President has been non-existent.

MR. LOCKHART: Certainly I'll acknowledge --

Q Why? Can you explain why?

Q When you said, you can blame me -- when asked whether the President was trying to dodge the press and you said, you can blame me -- we want to know whether this was a specific incident in which we can blame you.

MR. LOCKHART: It was not. It was not. Okay, "the entourage proceeded to a small" -- the pool report reports -- "a small, as in about 100 seats, auditorium with a pale terrazzo floor and a dark wood-slatted walls."

Q Joe, have the President's attorneys advised him specifically that he should not take questions from reporters, especially vis-a-vis the impeachment trial?

MR. LOCKHART: No, they have not.

Q They have not advised him to keep quiet about the trial?

MR. LOCKHART: They have not.

Q He is free to talk?

MR. LOCKHART: He is free to talk.

Q Has he said he is not interested in talking? Has he given any instructions?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I think he has said to you on numerous occasions that he doesn't know anything more productive he can say on this subject. He'd love to talk about some other subjects, some important things he's doing. It's hard for me to remember when the last question like that was posed to him, but that's not our job. Your job is to pose the questions; our job is to try to answer them in the best way we know how.

Q Joe, is he afraid of answering questions at this point?

MR. LOCKHART: No.

Q But I guess what you said to Wendell was that it's clear that in the last couple of weeks there's been less access and you're aware of that, and then I guess you would be responsible for that, at least in part.

MR. LOCKHART: That's how we started this conversation.

Q What is the thinking behind that? Is the sense that it's just --

MR. LOCKHART: As I said yesterday, it's unproductive right now to get into -- for the President to get into a long Q&A on this subject, which I think is self-evident. But if it's not, then we'll have to agree to disagree.

Q Joe, I know you're asked periodically about his health and his mood. From what we see on television, he doesn't look very good. Can you give us an idea of his mood, and is he taking any sort of medication? (Laughter.) Seriously --

MR. LOCKHART: That's not a serious question, that's --

Q It's a very serious question, he's the leader of the free world.

MR. LOCKHART: Yeah, but I don't think you have any basis to ask that question, so we'll move on.

Q Well, why can't you tell us --

MR. LOCKHART: We'll move on.

Q -- if he's taking any sort of medication?

MR. LOCKHART: We'll move on.

Q Is the President well?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes, he's very well. He had a very energized and animated conversation on the way over to the event with the Vice President about both the event the Vice President did yesterday and the event that the President did today, about how important these initiatives are, and how it really is a kind of fundamental shift in the way the government is going to approach growth out in this country, as we move into the next millennium. So he's, again, focused on what he is supposed to be doing.

Q Are there plans for the President to undergo any medical procedures in the next few weeks?

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I'm aware of.

Q I'm dead serious.

MR. LOCKHART: I have no reason to doubt you're not, Wendell.

Q Do you think it's at all hypocritical, for example, to announce the President's going to go on this long trip after the State of the Union to see the public and travel around and be seen as being out in the public, and yet, at the same time, you're saying you're keeping him isolated from us?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not saying I'm keeping him isolated. The President goes out and speaks in public, through you, every day. It's not every day that the President decides to enter a Q&A with you, and that's a decision we make.

Q But it was fairly regular until recently.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, so be it. I don't view it as hypocritical, though.

Q May I ask you an international question --

MR. LOCKHART: Sure.

Q -- there's been nothing on this. Since the APEC

Conference is in New Zealand next year and the Prime Minister of New Zealand is here for two days starting tomorrow, does the President have any intention of meeting with her? She's going to be with Al Gore.

MR. LOCKHART: As David informs me, the Secretary of State plans a meeting, as does the Vice President.

Q But the President has no plans --

MR. LOCKHART: No. If that changes, I'll let you know.

Q I'd appreciate it.

Q Joe, Larry Flynt says he's a supporter of the President, says he just wants to help the President. Are these revelations helping the President's case at all?

MR. LOCKHART: Absolutely not. I think the President has been very clear, from before he even came to Washington -- I think, on one of the Sunday shows from last week, they played a clip from '92 of the President railing against the politics of personal destruction -- the President's been very clear the whole time he's been here that there's no place in this town for this kind of politics, and it ought to come to an end. And I think that there is responsibility to go all the way around on this and, frankly, if the news media stopped covering some of this stuff -- I'm not arguing about one story in particular, because judgments have to be made on a case-by-case basis -- that maybe there wouldn't be such a market for it. But the President doesn't believe that this has any place in our politics, and has said so.

Q Has he talked to Larry Flynt?

MR. LOCKHART: No. I'm not sure he's ever spoken to Larry Flynt.

Q Well, I thought he might want to convey that message.

Q The RNC is saying that the White House is helping Mr.
Flynt.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, the RNC ought to stop practicing the politics of innuendo, which is just about as sleazy as the politics of personal destruction.
If they've got evidence, they ought to bring it forward. If not, they ought to knock it off. And people should stop carrying their water by printing things without any foundation.

Q Has the White House talked to the RNC about that?

MR. LOCKHART: No. We don't have an open line of communication to that organization.

Q Joe, you've been clear that the President's State of the Union
address is firm and going forward. Has the senior staff or the President spoken to the Senate leadership in the last few days about their feelings, whether it's appropriate?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes, I think we've made it clear, both on the staff level and whatever contacts we've had with senators, that we plan to go forward.
There are certainly different opinions, even among the parties, about whether the President should go forward, but we believe that the appropriate thing to do is go forward and give the speech.

Q He was invited, wasn't he?

MR. LOCKHART: That's correct.

Q Not to put too fine a point on it, Joe, but I -- has some scenario similar to Podesta calling Lott and saying, look, we're coming, we're firm on this -- has there been some communication back to the Senate, other than
from the podium, that sort of thing?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not aware that there's been any formal communication.
I don't know that anyone has spoken to Senator Lott in the last few days.
But I think, in the conversations, the informal conversations we have had with staff and Senate and -- I think most of those are with Democratic staff, but not exclusive -- we've indicated that it's our intention to accept the invitation and come up on the 19th.

Q Is there any chance at all that he could change his mind,

Joe?

MR. LOCKHART: I think I have said several times here that we intend to be there on the 19th.

Q Your comments on the Flynt news interview and news conference and such -- did the President say anything to you, specifically, about Larry Flynt and what he's been doing?

MR. LOCKHART: No.

Q Or the senior staff --

MR. LOCKHART: He has said to us repeatedly, on the broader subject, that he has no tolerance for this kind of activity, won't tolerate it with anybody on his staff, and believes that we have come to a point where somebody has to stand up and try to put an end to this. And we can't condone this kind of politics.

Q But he hasn't said anything specifically about this?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I haven't talked to him about this in the last day or so. Certainly not in relation to any specific news or any specific event in the last day.

Q Well, Joe, do you think that if the President issued, perhaps, a very specific statement -- didn't pick up the phone but issued a very specific public statement, addressing Flynt, that perhaps Flynt would be shamed into stopping it?

Q "Dear Larry" -- (laughter.)

MR. LOCKHART: It's hard for me to understand or to calibrate what it would take to shame him into doing something. (Laughter.) But let me say this, that I've said repeatedly from here where the President is, and I think that if you go back over the last 10 years, you will not find a political figure in this country who has been more consistent and more outspoken on this subject than the President.

Q Joe, you said that the President is not afraid to answer questions, but it's not prudent, or whatever word you used, to do it at this time --

MR. LOCKHART: "Productive" was the word I used.

Q -- so can't we infer that during the course of the trial it's not going to be productive as well, and that we won't get a question in?

MR. LOCKHART: No, maybe we'll change our minds.

Q It's a concern that he might say something that would antagonize the jurors?

MR. LOCKHART: Listen, I think we've done enough on this. I understand your concern, I understand where you're all coming from. I am not trying to be contentious here. We make our decisions, we live with them, and I don't think it would be productive to keep going around and around on this.

Q Joe, what does the President hope these sanctions that Sandy Berger announced against Russian institutions accomplish?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think we have a broad and wide-ranging non-proliferation regime, particularly when it comes to working with the Russians on moving technology or expertise on weapons of mass destruction. This is one part of it, where he can take administrative action, and it will put these three companies out of business as far as dealing with the United States government. We continue to work with the Russians on a broader range of issues. They've enacted some tough new laws, but there's more work that they need to be doing, and we will continue to work with them.

Q Well, isn't the U.S. argument really with the Kremlin and not with three individual companies or institutions?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I think that we continue to work with the Russian government. They have taken some steps; we believe they need to take further steps. I can't get into the details of these particular companies and what they may or may not have been doing, but these companies, we believe, were taking steps that made it impossible for the United States government to work with them.

Q Joe, what's the latest development on the situation over the incident over Iraq this morning?

MR. LOCKHART: I would actually defer to the Pentagon -- let me see if I have something on that -- as I think they reported this morning, there was an F-16 that was tracked by early-warning radar. The pilot of that plane took the appropriate response of firing a HARM missile, and returned safely to base.

Q Is the U.S. sending more planes to Iraq, I mean, to the area?

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I'm aware of. I'd put that question to the Pentagon, though. It's not something that I've been briefed on.

Q Joe, many people at the White House say that James Carville is his own person and he does his own thing. Is the White House standing firm that, while it did not aid Larry Flynt in --

MR. LOCKHART: I've never been asked the question. I have no idea what James is doing. The President has been clear on this subject. You'd have to ask that question of James.

Q The RNC has strictly said -- well, it's specifically saying that Carville is the one, on advice of the White House to put this out --

MR. LOCKHART: That's an absolutely baseless charge and at some point there ought to be a price to pay for making baseless charges and practicing the politics of innuendo.

Q And what's that price?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know. I think you are all in a better position to decide whether these are credible news sources that you get your information from.

Q Joe, once the President's budget comes out in early February, is it the administration's assumption that the individual proposals will not be able to run on a simultaneous track with the Senate trial and that everything is basically going to be held hostage until that trial ends? I mean, are you running under that assumption?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't think we've made any firm assumptions. We plan to put forward an agenda and hope that the House and the Senate will move forward as quickly as they see possible in implementing that agenda.

Q Is it possible to do that on an abbreviated schedule, when from noon on every day there would be a trial?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think that's a question better put to the Senate. I mean, it is still our hope that we can wrap the trial up in the Senate in an expeditious way and that this won't -- that the two won't necessarily conflict.

Q Thank you.

MR. LOCKHART: Thank you.

PRESIDENT CLINTON AND VICE PRESIDENT GORE UNVEIL NEW INITIATIVE TO IMPROVE ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITIES FOR AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES

January 13, 1999

Today, President Clinton will unveil a historic new initiative that will remove significant barriers for people with disabilities to go back to work. This three-part budget initiative, which invests more than $2 billion over five years, includes: (1) full funding of the Work Incentives Improvement Act which will be introduced by Senators Jeffords, Kennedy, Roth, and Moynihan next week; (2) a new $1,000 tax credit to cover work-related costs for people with disabilities; and (3) expanded access to information and communications technologies. With these new proposals, the Administration will have taken action on every recommendation made in the report of the President's Task Force on the Employment of Adults with Disabilities, which the Vice President accepted last month. Justin Dart, one of the foremost leaders of the disability community, stated in response to today's proposals: "The Clinton-Gore Administration has a long history of supporting the disability community. This policy initiative is one of the boldest since the landmark passage of the ADA."

CRITICAL NEED TO REMOVE BARRIERS TO WORK

Since President Clinton took office, the American economy has added 17.7 million new jobs, and unemployment is at a 29-year low of 4.3 percent. The unemployment rate among all working-age adults with disabilities, however, is nearly 75 percent. According to current estimates, about 1.6 million working-age adults have a disability that leads to functional limitations and 14 million working-age adults have less severe but still significant disabilities.

People with disabilities can bring tremendous energy and talent to the American workforce, but institutional barriers often limit their ability to work. Most critically, people with disabilities often become ineligible for Medicaid or Medicare if they work. This means that many people with disabilities are put in the untenable position of choosing between health care coverage and work. In addition, advances in technology and communications are often not accessible to people with disabilities.

THREE-PART INITIATIVE TO IMPROVE ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITIES FOR AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES

Funding the Work Incentives Improvement Act in the President's budget. Health care -- particularly prescription drugs and personal assistance -- is essential for people with disabilities to work. Today, the President is announcing that his FY 2000 budget will fund the full cost of the Work Incentives Improvement Act. This proposal, which costs $1.2 billion over 5 years, would:

- Improve access to health care by:
 - Expanding states' ability to provide a Medicaid buy-in to people with disabilities who return to work. This provision would enable states to offer the buy-in to people whose assets and/or income exceed current limits. It also would give states the option of offering the buy-in to people with medical conditions, such as rheumatoid arthritis, who do not meet the current disability standard, but who can work only because of medical treatment. Finally, this provision would give health care grants to those states that do so.
 - more-
 - Extending Medicare coverage, for the first time, for people with disabilities who return to work. Although Medicare does not provide as comprehensive a benefit as Medicaid, this aspect of the proposal ensures that all people with disabilities who return to work have access to health care coverage, even if they live in a state that does not take the Medicaid option.
 - Creating a new Medicaid buy-in demonstration to help people with a specific physical or mental impairment that is not yet severe enough to qualify for health care assistance, but that is reasonably expected to lead to a severe disability in the absence of medical treatment. This demonstration could help people with muscular dystrophy, Parkinson's Disease, HIV or diabetes who are able to work with appropriate health care.
- Modernize the employment services system by creating a "ticket" that will enable SSI or SSDI beneficiaries to go to any of a number of public or private providers for vocational rehabilitation. If the beneficiary goes to work and achieves substantial earnings, providers would be paid a portion of the benefits saved.
- Create a Work Incentive Grant program to provide benefits planning and assistance, facilitate access to information about work incentives, and better integrate services for people with disabilities working or returning to work.

Providing a $1,000 tax credit for work-related expenses for people with disabilities. The daily costs of getting to and from work, and being effective at work, can be high if not prohibitive for people with disabilities. Under this new proposal, workers with significant disabilities would receive an annual $1,000 tax credit to help cover the formal and informal costs that are associated with employment, such as special transportation and technology. Like the Jeffords-Kennedy-Roth-Moynihan Work Incentive Act, this tax credit, which will assist 200,000 to 300,000 Americans, will help ensure that people with disabilities have the tools they need to return to work. The credit will cost $700 million over 5 years.

Improving access to assistive technology. Technology is often not adapted for people with disabilities and, even when it is, people with disabilities may not be able to afford it. This new initiative would accelerate the development and adoption of information and communications technologies that can improve the quality of life for people with disabilities and enhance their ability to participate in the workplace. The initiative would: (1) help make the Federal government a model user of assistive technology; (2) support new and expanded state loan programs to make assistive technology more affordable for Americans with disabilities; and (3) invest in research and development and technology transfer in areas such as text to speech for people who are blind, automatic captioning for people who are deaf, and speech recognition and eye tracking for people who can't use a keyboard. It would provide $35 million in FY 2000, more than double the government's current investment in deploying assistive technology.

With these steps, the Administration has taken action on all Task Force Recommendations. In December, the Vice President accepted the report of the President's Task Force on the Employment of Adults with Disabilities, took action on some of their recommendations, and pledged that the Administration would review others in the budget process. With the new steps taken today, as well as an announcement that Mrs. Gore will make tomorrow, the Administration has taken action on all the Task Force formal recommendations:

- Work to pass the Work Incentive Improvement Act.
- Work to pass a strong Patients, Bill of Rights.
- Examine tax options to assist with expenses of work.
- Foster interdisciplinary consortia for employment services.
- Accelerate development and adoption of assistive technology.
- Direct Small Business Administration to expand outreach.
- Remove Federal hiring barriers for people with mental illness -- Mrs. Gore will unveil this tomorrow.
- Direct OPM to develop model plan for Federal hiring of people with disabilities.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

January 12, 1999

PRESS BRIEFING BY JOE LOCKHART

The Briefing Room

1:40 P.M. EST

MR. LOCKHART: Let's see. I have one travel announcement to make before we get to questions. As the President has done in past years, he will travel the day after the State of the Union to amplify on the themes and policies of that speech. This year, the President will travel to Buffalo, New York and to Montgomery County, Pennsylvania on January 20th.

The Vice President and the First Lady will accompany the President on this trip. It's a one -day trip. We'll be back by the evening.

Q What are the events?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, it would be hard to sort of amplify on themes we haven't articulated yet. We plan to deliver the speech.

Q Is he going because Buffalo was declared a local emergency this morning? They've had 41 inches of snow since January 1st, they've called out the National Guard. (Laughter.)

MR. LOCKHART: I am personally now offering my staff to go up and shovel off the site. (Laughter.)

Q Who is going with him?

MR. LOCKHART: The Vice President and the First Lady.

Q Why are they going? Is that part of the theme or what?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes. No, the Vice President and First Lady went last year when we went to University of Illinois and to Wisconsin.

Q Where in --

MR. LOCKHART: I don't have a city yet.

Q Joe, why does the President think it important that he deliver the speech as scheduled on Tuesday?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think as we've said before, what's going on in the Senate right now is important. The Senate needs to take care of the business before them; but the agenda and the policies that the President pursue, the people's business, also has to go forward, and the President believes that it's proper that he give the speech on the 19th and lay out his agenda for this year.

Q Does he find it awkward?

MR. LOCKHART: I think that there are certainly issues -- the issue before the Senate, as I've said, is important. It's certainly not something that the President or anybody here looks forward to, but I don't think the President has the ability to be distracted. The public expects him to stay focused on his work and he intends to do that.

Q Do you think he will acknowledge the proceedings during his speech?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know.

Q Is the decision to go ahead on the 19th firm, or is the White House still open to changing it if it need be?

MR. LOCKHART: The decision is firm.

Q I understand what you say, it's not something the President looks forward to -- it's the impeachment trial or the speech in the uncomfortable circumstances?

MR. LOCKHART: The President always looks forward to the State of the Union speech as a chance to lay out his agenda. He has enjoyed the work he's done to date on it, which has been rather extensive, and I think he'll look forward to the evening.

Q Despite the uncomfortable circumstances?

MR. LOCKHART: Despite them.

Q Joe, is the President going to keep out of the limelight for the duration of the trial? Is he not going to hold any direct formal news conferences? I mean, he is a criminal defendant. Is he going to speak out?

MR. LOCKHART: If holding a formal news conference was the criteria for keeping out of the limelight, we would have kept a pretty low profile here lately.

Q Once it starts?

MR. LOCKHART: But the answer is no, the President will continue on a bigger schedule of events as he has over the last few months.

Q And you don't preclude a formal news conference?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't preclude anything. I'm certainly not giving any guidance on that front, though.

Q Just for the record, what do you make of the House brief on the impeachment articles, and could you give us some insight as to what you plan to file tomorrow?

MR. LOCKHART: I think what we'll file tomorrow is a longer version of the answer to the charges; it's actually the trial brief that will go through the factual and evidence -- the facts and the evidence that have been put forward, and the constitutional and legal issues and a much more expanded version of what you saw yesterday.

As far as the House brief, I think, as I told you this morning, that it is, at times, a hallmark of what is a weak factual and constitutional case, that the allegations continue to shift and that the rhetoric continues to be overblown. And I think those are the two things that come out of that document.

We have a new bundling and interpretations of the allegations against the President, at this late date. I think -- as someone who is trying to defend themselves, you have a point BOTTOM ODD where you should understand what the charges are, and where you should understand how they are put together and what the bases of them are. And I think we saw some shifting in the documents, just yesterday.

Q Joe, the articles haven't changed since they were voted on by the House. Why do you say they are being rebundled?

MR. LOCKHART: The articles haven't changed, but if you look at the legal brief, they have now sought to bring back in the article that failed to get a majority vote. You have members telling the media that, we've got a whole bunch of new stuff that we're ready to spring on them. I think we're beyond the point of playing those kind of games, and they should just argue their case.

Q Given this limiting of the charges, do you still stand by what you stated this morning of how the brief reads?

MR. LOCKHART: Sure. I think there is overblown rhetoric in there about sinister plots, and I think that it detracts from the argument they're trying to make.

Q And "cheap mystery" as well?

MR. LOCKHART: That's a good phrase. (Laughter.)

Q How would you describe the administration response to that, that has got to be in by, I think, 10:00 a.m. tomorrow morning?

MR. LOCKHART: Detailed, well

-argued and compelling.

Q But what kind of tone would it have, compared, for instance, to the --

MR. LOCKHART: I think it will be based on the facts and the law. I think those of you who have followed our submissions over the last few months will see things that you've seen before. But it will basically make the case that, on the facts and the evidence, the articles are not supported, based on the facts. They're not supported based on the Constitution, or do they have a sufficient legal foundation.

Q Were any Senators consulted for their opinions on the document?

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I'm aware of.

Q Joe, what was the President doing today vis

-a

-vis the State of the Union, and preparing?

MR. LOCKHART: He's got a meeting this afternoon, I believe. I think sometime in the next hour of so, I think he's got a couple of hours blocked off for a meeting with his team.

Q What's going to be new, Joe, in the submission? What are we likely to see that we haven't heard before?

MR. LOCKHART: If I told you what was going to be new today, it wouldn't be new tomorrow.

Q All right, then let me come at it a different way. Is there likely to be anything in this submission that we have not seen before?

MR. LOCKHART: I am not going to signal what's in the submission, just to give you a broad outline of what I expect it to look like. You can wait until tomorrow, it will be out tomorrow morning.

Q Well, I mean, you've said it will be an expanded version of what the President has submitted so far --

MR. LOCKHART: Correct.

Q -- which, to the President's critics -- granted, they're his critics -- has been totally insufficient, so what's the point?

MR. LOCKHART: The point is, is there's a process here. And the process calls for you to answer the charges formally and then to file a trial brief formally. And we intend to respond in a way that conforms with the rules and procedures of the Senate trial.

Q And you expect it to be effective?

MR. LOCKHART: I do.

Q You still don't know who is going to argue for the President?

MR. LOCKHART: I still don't. I know the universe of people; I don't know how it's all going to be done.

Q Is it the President's decision to dodge reporters and duck us, to run off stages and so forth, for the millennium?

MR. LOCKHART: You can blame it on me.

Q Or is it your decision and the spinmeisters who are keeping him away from us?

MR. LOCKHART: Is that a pejorative term? Spinmeisters?

Q Yes. It is pejorative.

MR. LOCKHART: I thought so. I know.

Q Whose is it?

Q To what extent, at this point in the proceeding, is the White House making its case to individual Senators? In other words, as the question came up this morning, the House prosecutors gave individual copies of their presentation to individual Senators. Is the White House going to that extent --

MR. LOCKHART: Yes, I didn't look into the logistics, but I'm sure that our documents will get into the hands of all the Senators, either through the leadership structure or directly. We believe that all of them will read it and hope that they will find it to be a persuasive document.

Q Does that go for everything that you're going to send up there, like the rebuttal tomorrow?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes.

Q Are you anticipating anything in the State of the Union that touches on impeachment?

MR. LOCKHART: I think I answered that before in saying that I didn't know.

Q Joe, to follow up the earlier question, is Senator Mitchell playing any role behind the scenes -- in an advisory capacity, a consultative capacity?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes. A behind

-the

-scenes advisory and in a consultative basis.

Q Is he talking to other Senators on your behalf?

MR. LOCKHART: I have not talked to Senator Mitchell. I wouldn't preclude that he is talking to his old friends. I know that his advice on how to proceed here has proved invaluable to the legal team and the political team here, based on his knowledge of the Senate.

Q Anyone else?

Q Will he be on the team that is before the Senate --

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I'm aware of.

Q Joe, is the President talking to individual Senators even now about impeachment?

MR. LOCKHART: I know that the President talks to Senators. I know he spoke to -- he had Senators at the State Dinner last night, but I haven't checked into the details of any of the conversations.

Q Does the President consider it appropriate for him to talk to Senators about impeachment?

MR. LOCKHART: I think the President believes that the Senators are sophisticated enough to not engage in an inappropriate conversation.

Q Joe, is Mitchell -- I'm going to clarify this -- is he consulting with the legal team, is he consulting directly with the President?

MR. LOCKHART: I'd say he's consulting -- I'm certain that he's spoken to the President -- I don't know when the last time was. But it's mostly the legal and political team that are charged with this.

Q And this is mainly on Senate procedures and his knowledge of the individual personalities up there, or what?

MR. LOCKHART: It's basically moving on the Senate trial. He's an accomplished and gifted lawyer, as well as someone who probably knows as much about how the Senate works as anybody in town.

Q Anyone else in that category?

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I know -- I mean, it is informal, but I know that they talk to him on a pretty regular basis. I don't know if there's other people. There are other former senators who have called to inquire as to what they could do to help. But I don't know that there's anything on any basis that's going forward there.

Q Any Republicans that you've been able to enlist to help you?

Q Bumpers?

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I'm aware of. I know that there have been a variety of former Republican senators who have made public statements about trying to shorten the process and find some way to short -circuit this, but I don't know that we're in any way in touch with them.

Q So Senator Dole isn't involved in this at all anymore?

MR. LOCKHART: No.

Q Joe, now that you've had the House brief, what motions are you considering?

MR. LOCKHART: If we have motions, we will discuss them at the appropriate time, which is not until the end of the Q&A session.

Q What kind of reception do you feel yesterday's filing received? Joe, what's your sense of how it was received by the Senate?

MR. LOCKHART: I will leave that up to the 100 senators who have to decide that. I haven't gotten any feedback one way or the other.

Q Is that to say that you all are not gauging the reception of your filing? Surely you are.

MR. LOCKHART: I'm going to leave it up to the 100 senators who will sit in judgment of this to render an opinion. I've seen a lot of them on a lot of your channels, so you can ask them directly.

Q Joe, yesterday's submission said that the charges were vague. After reading the House response or the House game plan, do you still feel like the charges are vague, or did they answer the questions that you had?

MR. LOCKHART: That actually would probably be a better one to put to the lawyers. I didn't ask them that specifically. I was not made aware that anyone feels that they're any more specific than they are now. It does go a little bit to the point that I said before, that with each submission the charges change, and it's difficult enough to defend yourself against a set of charges in these circumstances; but when they change consistently, it makes it even more difficult.

Q Joe, you said this morning that the Republican brief read like a bad mystery novel.

MR. LOCKHART: I did.

Q And what's the mystery? (Laughter.)

MR. LOCKHART: I think it was more the language that was employed.

Q Joe, can you explain to us the press arrangements for today's speech? I understand it took place in a rather large auditorium, but it was pool press --

MR. LOCKHART: No, I can't, because I wasn't involved in those arrangements. You should ask my staff that does --

Q Well, I thought you said to blame you for the fact that he wasn't --

MR. LOCKHART: Listen, if you all are sitting out there thinking that I sit and decide whether something is pool or isn't, you know that isn't the case, so ask the people who know. Is that not clear, Josh?

Q No, it's not entirely.

MR. LOCKHART: Okay, then follow up.

Q I'm not clear. Who is making the decisions, then? Apparently, it was a rather elaborate thing where there was a plastic shield where people couldn't see the President.

MR. LOCKHART: Apparently? I don't know, I wasn't there. Were you

there?

Q I wasn't there. It was pool only, Joe. What am I supposed to tell you?

MR. LOCKHART: Okay. I think you should, if you have a problem, take it up with the Correspondents Association and we'll be glad to look at it.

Q The Correspondents Association doesn't make these arrangements.

MR. LOCKHART: Listen, you're asking me a question I don't know the answer to. If you'd like, we'll take a filing break, I'll go talk to my staff and come back with information. Is that what we want to do?

Q Joe, let me just ask a general question, which is, is there a decision here, or has the press operation or others here made a decision that until the impeachment matter is resolved the President won't get into a back and forth with the press corps?

MR. LOCKHART: No.

Q No, no decision, or no what?

Q That's bad.

MR. LOCKHART: What's bad?

Q It's bad to keep reporters away from the President.

MR. LOCKHART: Listen, if you seriously want to have a serious conversation, come up to my office, we'll talk about it. If you want to stand there and try to talk to me about something you know I don't have knowledge of in a way to embarrass me, I don't think that's productive. So let's move on.

Q You have no control over whether something is pool or open?

MR. LOCKHART: I do; it's my office. But I'm telling you that I don't make these decisions on a case

-by

-case basis. And if you're asking me to look into this, I'll be glad to look into it.

Q We are trying to say to you that the President --

MR. LOCKHART: I understand what you're trying to say to me.

Q -- that the President is being kept away from reporters.

MR. LOCKHART: I take your point. I take your point.

Q For those of us who have covered this man since the day he arrived in the White House, there has been a distinct lack of access -- not just for the time that you've been press secretary, but starting before that -- where the chance to regularly engage the President in questions and answers, either informally in the Oval Office or in the Roosevelt Room has been gone, and it's not just by coincidence.

MR. LOCKHART: That is a different question than asking me about an event I didn't go to and whether we purposely took a big auditorium and made it pool. I will look into it. I will address that question because that's, I believe, a legitimate question -- which is, we try to make the President available, there are times when we, either through news conferences or in pool spray settings that he is available. There are times that we go sometime where he's not. And we have to make that judgment on a day

-by

-day basis -- which is,
I think, a different thing than whether he's in a room that should be pool or not.

Q Would you acknowledge that for the last several weeks access to the President has been non -existent.

MR. LOCKHART: Certainly I'll acknowledge --

Q Why? Can you explain why?

Q When you said, you can blame me -- when asked whether the President was trying to dodge the press and you said, you can blame me -- we want to know whether this was a specific incident in which we can blame you.

MR. LOCKHART: It was not. It was not. Okay, the entourage proceeded to a small -- the pool report reports -- a small, as in about 100 seats, auditorium with a pale terrazzo floor and a dark wood -slated walls.

Q Joe, have the President's attorneys advised him specifically that he should not take questions from reporters, especially vis

-a

-vis the impeachment trial?

MR. LOCKHART: No, they have not.

Q They have not advised him to keep quiet about the trial?

MR. LOCKHART: They have not.

Q He is free to talk?

MR. LOCKHART: He is free to talk.

Q Has he said he is not interested in talking? Has he given any instructions?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I think he has said to you on numerous occasions that he doesn't know anything more productive he can say on this subject. He'd love to talk about some other subjects, some important things he's doing. It's hard for me to remember when the last question like that was posed to him, but that's not our job. Your job is to pose the questions; our job is to try to answer them in the best way we know how.

Q Joe, is he afraid of answering questions at this point?

MR. LOCKHART: No.

Q But I guess what you said to Wendell was that it's clear that in the last couple of weeks there's been less access and you're aware of that, and then I guess you would be responsible for that, at least in part.

MR. LOCKHART: That's how we started this conversation.

Q What is the thinking behind that? Is the sense that it's just

--

MR. LOCKHART: As I said yesterday, it's unproductive right now to get into -- for the President to get into a long Q&A on this subject, which I think is self

-evident. But if it's not, then we'll have to agree to disagree.

Q Joe, I know you're asked periodically about his health and his mood. From what we see on television, he doesn't look very good. Can you give us an idea of his mood, and is he taking any sort of medication? (Laughter.)
Seriously --

MR. LOCKHART: That's not a serious question, that's --

Q It's a very serious question, he's the leader of the free world.

MR. LOCKHART: Yeah, but I don't think you have any basis to ask that question, so we'll move on.

Q Well, why can't you tell us --

MR. LOCKHART: We'll move on.

Q -- if he's taking any sort of medication?

MR. LOCKHART: We'll move on.

Q Is the President well?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes, he's very well. He had a very energized and animated conversation on the way over to the event with the Vice President about both the event the Vice President did yesterday and the event that the President did today, about how important these initiatives are, and how it really is a kind of fundamental shift in the way the government is going to approach growth out in this country, as we move into the next millennium. So he's, again, focused on what he is supposed to be doing.

Q Are there plans for the President to undergo any medical procedures in the next few weeks?

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I'm aware of.

Q I'm dead serious.

MR. LOCKHART: I have no reason to doubt you're not, Wendell.

Q Do you think it's at all hypocritical, for example, to announce the President's going to go on this long trip after the State of the Union to see the public and travel around and be seen as being out in the public, and yet, at the same time, you're saying you're keeping him isolated from us?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not saying I'm keeping him isolated. The President goes out and speaks in public, through you, every day. It's not every day that the President decides to enter a Q&A with you, and that's a decision we make.

Q But it was fairly regular until recently.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, so be it. I don't view it as hypocritical, though.

Q May I ask you an international question --

MR. LOCKHART: Sure.

Q -- there's been nothing on this. Since the APEC Conference is in New Zealand next year and the Prime Minister of New Zealand is here for two days starting tomorrow, does the President have any intention of meeting with her? She's going to be with Al Gore.

MR. LOCKHART: As David informs me, the Secretary of State plans a meeting, as does the Vice President.

Q But the President has no plans --

MR. LOCKHART: No. If that changes, I'll let you know.

Q I'd appreciate it.

Q Joe, Larry Flynt says he's a supporter of the President, says he just wants to help the President. Are these revelations helping the President's case at all?

MR. LOCKHART: Absolutely not. I think the President has been very clear, from before he even came to Washington -- I think, on one of the Sunday shows from last week, they played a clip from '92 of the President railing against the politics of personal destruction -- the President's been very clear the whole time he's been here that there's no place in this town for this kind of politics, and it ought to come to an end. And I think that there is responsibility to go all the way around on this and, frankly, if the news media stopped covering some of this stuff -- I'm not arguing about one story in particular, because judgments have to be made on a case

-by

-case basis -- that maybe there wouldn't be such a market for it. But the President doesn't believe that this has any place in our politics, and has said so.

Q Has he talked to Larry Flynt?

MR. LOCKHART: No. I'm not sure he's ever spoken to Larry Flynt.

Q Well, I thought he might want to convey that message.

Q The RNC is saying that the White House is helping Mr. Flynt.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, the RNC ought to stop practicing the politics of innuendo, which is just about as sleazy as the politics of personal destruction. If they've got evidence, they ought to bring it forward. If not, they ought to knock it off. And people should stop carrying their water by printing things without any foundation.

Q Has the White House talked to the RNC about that?

MR. LOCKHART: No. We don't have an open line of communication to that organization.

Q Joe, you've been clear that the President's State of the Union address is firm and going forward. Has the senior staff or the President spoken to the Senate leadership in the last few days about their feelings, whether it's appropriate?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes, I think we've made it clear, both on the staff level and whatever contacts we've had with senators, that we plan to go forward. There are certainly different opinions, even among the parties, about whether the President should go forward, but we believe that the appropriate thing to do is go forward and give the speech.

Q He was invited, wasn't he?

MR. LOCKHART: That's correct.

Q Not to put too fine a point on it, Joe, but I -- has some scenario similar to Podesta calling Lott and saying, look, we're coming, we're firm on this -- has there been some communication back to the Senate, other than from the podium, that sort of thing?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not aware that there's been any formal communication. I don't know that anyone has spoken to Senator Lott in the last few days. But I think, in the conversations, the informal conversations we have had with staff and Senate and -- I think most of those are with Democratic staff, but not exclusive -- we've indicated that it's our intention to accept the invitation and come up on the 19th.

Q Is there any chance at all that he could change his mind, Joe?

MR. LOCKHART: I think I have said several times here that we intend to be there on the 19th.

Q Your comments on the Flynt news interview and news conference and such -- did the President say anything to you, specifically, about Larry Flynt and what he's been doing?

MR. LOCKHART: No.

Q Or the senior staff --

MR. LOCKHART: He has said to us repeatedly, on the broader subject, that he has no tolerance for this kind of activity, won't tolerate it with anybody on his staff, and believes that we have come to a point where somebody has to stand up and try to put an end to this. And we can't condone this kind of politics.

Q But he hasn't said anything specifically about this?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I haven't talked to him about this in the last day or so. Certainly not in relation to any specific news or any specific event in the last day.

Q Well, Joe, do you think that if the President issued, perhaps, a very specific statement -- didn't pick up the phone but issued a very specific public statement, addressing Flynt, that perhaps Flynt would be shamed into stopping it?

Q "Dear Larry" -- (laughter.)

MR. LOCKHART: It's hard for me to understand or to calibrate what it would take to shame him into doing something. (Laughter.) But let me say this, that I've said repeatedly from here where the President is, and I think that if you go back over the last 10 years, you will not find a political figure in this country who has been more consistent and more outspoken on this subject than the President.

Q Joe, you said that the President is not afraid to answer questions, but it's not prudent, or whatever word you used, to do it at this time --

MR. LOCKHART: "Productive" was the word I used.

Q -- so can't we infer that during the course of the trial it's not going to be productive as well, and that we won't get a question in?

MR. LOCKHART: No, maybe we'll change our minds.

Q It's a concern that he might say something that would antagonize the jurors?

MR. LOCKHART: Listen, I think we've done enough on this. I understand your concern, I understand where you're all coming from. I am not trying to be contentious here. We make our decisions, we live with them, and I don't think it would be productive to keep going around and around on this.

Q Joe, what does the President hope these sanctions that Sandy Berger announced against Russian institutions accomplish?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think we have a broad and wide -ranging non

-proliferation regime, particularly when it comes to working with the Russians on moving technology or expertise on weapons of mass destruction. This is one part of it, where he can take administrative action, and it will put these three companies out of business as far as dealing with the United States government. We continue to work with the Russians on a broader range of issues. They've enacted some tough new laws, but there's more work that they need to be doing, and we will continue to work with them.

Q Well, isn't the U.S. argument really with the Kremlin and not with three individual companies or institutions?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I think that we continue to work with the Russian government. They have taken some steps; we believe they need to take further steps. I can't get into the details of these particular companies and what they may or may not have been doing, but these companies, we believe, were taking steps that made it impossible for the United States government to work with them.

Q Joe, what's the latest development on the situation over the incident over Iraq this morning?

MR. LOCKHART: I would actually defer to the Pentagon -- let me see if I have something on that -- as I think they reported this morning, there was an F

-16 that was tracked by early

-warning radar. The pilot of that plane took the appropriate response of firing a HARM missile, and returned safely to base.

Q Is the U.S. sending more planes to Iraq, I mean, to the area?

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I'm aware of. I'd put that question to the Pentagon, though. It's not something that I've been briefed on.

Q Joe, many people at the White House say that James Carville is his own person and he does his own thing. Is the White House standing firm that, while it did not aid Larry Flynt in --

MR. LOCKHART: I've never been asked the question. I have no idea what James is doing. The President has been clear on this subject. You'd have to ask that question of James.

Q The RNC has strictly said -- well, it's specifically saying that Carville is the one, on advice of the White House to put this out --

MR. LOCKHART: That's an absolutely baseless charge and at some point there ought to be a price to pay for making baseless charges and practicing the politics of innuendo.

Q And what's that price?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know. I think you are all in a better position to decide whether these are credible news sources that you get your information from.

Q Joe, once the President's budget comes out in early February, is it the administration's assumption that the individual proposals will not be able to run on a simultaneous track with the Senate trial and that everything is basically going to be held hostage until that trial ends? I mean, are you running under that assumption?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't think we've made any firm assumptions. We plan to put forward an agenda and hope that the House and the Senate will move forward as quickly as they see possible in implementing that agenda.

Q Is it possible to do that on an abbreviated schedule, when from noon on every day there would be a trial?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think that's a question better put to the Senate. I mean, it is still our hope that we can wrap the trial up in the Senate in an expeditious way and that this won't -- that the two won't necessarily conflict.

Q Thank you.

MR. LOCKHART: Thank you.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

January 13, 1999

PRESS BRIEFING BY
SECRETARY OF LABOR ALEXIS HERMAN ,
DOMESTIC POLICY ADVISOR BRUCE REED, AND GENE SPERLING, NATIONAL ECONOMIC COUNCIL

The Briefing Room

1:37 P.M. EST

MS. WEISS: Just moments ago, the President unveiled a three-part budget initiative to improve the economic opportunities for Americans with disabilities. To further outline this proposal, we have Bruce Reed, the President's chief Domestic Policy Advisor; Gene Sperling, the President's National Economic Council Advisor; and Secretary of Labor Alexis Herman. We also have in the audience former Congressman Tony Coelho and Becky Ogle, who is the Executive Director of the task force.

SECRETARY HERMAN: Thank you very, very much, Amy. I would just like to briefly outline the mission and work of the task force that put forward the recommendations that resulted in the policy announcements that the President just unveiled in the East Room; and then, of course, ask my colleagues to join me for any questions and answers that you may have.

The recommendations that were put forward to the President were the result of a task force that was created by the President last March in an executive order on the employment of adults with disabilities. The specific mission of the task force was to have a coordinated federal policy to do all that was possible to remove the barriers to the employment of people with disabilities, and to do it in a way so that we would have a Cabinet-led, Cabinet-level task force that would engage in this work.

I've been pleased to have served as the chair of this task force. The vice-chair is with me, Tony Coelho, who is here today. And together we have worked at the direction of the President and the Vice President to work with our Cabinet colleagues to examine what we can do to remove those barriers.

This is an effort that is a four-year effort, that was commissioned in this executive order by the President. We made eight recommendations at the conclusion of last year; the announcements that the President made today included five of those recommendations. The highlight, of course, includes the fact that in these policy recommendations today, no longer will people with disabilities have to choose between work and their health care. Secondly, they will have the opportunity to receive a tax credit in order to get, oftentimes, the assistance that they need to go to work. That could involve everything from transportation to someone to assist them with dressing in the morning for work. And thirdly, the other aspect of this proposal, of course, is all of the increased funding that the President is proposing for new assistive technology in the workplace that can make a difference.

We are very excited by the fact that the President and the Vice President accepted all of the recommendations in this first interim report of the task force to the President, and we look forward to further action, to further work, in the months and the years ahead.

At this time I will be happy to entertain any questions that you have and ask the head of our Economic Council, Gene Sperling, and Bruce Reed, the leader of our domestic policy team, to please join me.

Q Do you expect this to go through, do you think it will pass?

SECRETARY HERMAN: I believe, with the strong bipartisan support that was announced this morning -- Moynihan and Roth, Senators Kennedy and Jeffords -- that the likelihood for passage is very strong. And I think, as we talk today about the fact that we don't have a single person to waste in this economy, that we need everyone, that certainly doing all that we can to give adults with disabilities the proper tools and skills they will need to become gainfully employed is in the nation's best interests.

Q And the insurance companies and so forth will go along with all of this?

SECRETARY HERMAN: I believe that once we have the opportunity to lay out our proposals, to make the case of why this is a benefit and why in the end this is really a significant return on investment, that we will have the support of the insurance industry as well.

Q Have you identified how you're going to pay for it?

SECRETARY HERMAN: That is something that obviously will be a part of the President's budget proposals, but I will certainly turn that, as well, to my colleague.

MR. SPERLING: The Kennedy/Jeffords/Moynihan/Roth portion will be within the budget paid for with other offsets on the mandatory side. On the tax cut that we have here, the tax credit for workers with disability will be part of an overall package we have and will give out the details of when we release our budget February 1st. What you'll see is a package of some of the tax credits we had last year with this and a few other new ones, and then there will be a package that will include various corporate loophole closers, corporate subsidies.

So you will see revenue offsets paying for this and other of the tax cuts so that the overall package is revenue-neutral, and the Kennedy/Jeffords/Moynihan/Roth portion will be paid for within the mandatory side of the budget.

Q Secretary Herman, have you undertaken any investigation about why it's the second time in just a few months the labor statistics were released a day earlier than they should have been?

SECRETARY HERMAN: Yes. As a matter of fact, we do have an ongoing investigation that is still tied to the first glitch that we uncovered in the system; we have now added to that the early release of the PPI date, and I expect to be briefed on that.

Q As far as you've been able to tell, what happened the last time?

SECRETARY HERMAN: As far as we've been able to tell, we do know that it was a computer glitch; it was not related to our Y2K effort. We're trying to ascertain at this point all of the facts related to just what was involved in the operations of that.

Q Do you have any expectation about when those results will be released or that report will be --

SECRETARY HERMAN: I've asked for that report within 30 days.

Q Today, or --

SECRETARY HERMAN: Thirty days today.

Q Mr. Sperling, can you address on a different issue what the White House is doing today in terms of the problems in Brazil, how you're trying to address them?

MR. SPERLING: Obviously, there has been a lot of activity monitoring this situation, particularly since yesterday evening. Secretary Rubin and others of us briefed the President this morning, around 9:30 a.m.-10:00 a.m., on this. The Treasury officials are in close contact with Brazilian authorities, with IMF authorities, as well as G-7 partners and, indeed, have also been in contact with other emerging markets.

At this point I would just say that we're monitoring it very closely. I would expect, within the next couple of hours, that Secretary Rubin will have a written statement that will be out. We're discussing at this moment. There is active efforts on all of those fronts. Obviously, we think it's important that Brazil implement strong policies and I'll leave it to the statement from Treasury that should be coming out shortly.

Q But, Gene, you say at this point it's just monitoring, there's no intervention contemplated or being --

MR. SPERLING: As I said, I believe we are going to have a statement out from the Secretary of Treasury, the Treasury Department, within the next couple of hours. So I think I'll let that be our next substantive statement.

Q Share with us your assessment of why it is that the $40-some billion bail out package that was put together just a few months ago wasn't able to do the job? What's your assessment?

MR. SPERLING: Again, this is obviously a sensitive time. I think the best thing for us to do right now is to be doing just what we are doing, which is to be gathering information on all fronts, looking at what the implications of their action concerning their currency has been. And at this point, I think the best thing to do would be to wait until we put together a more specific written statement, which, again, should be out within an hour or two.

Q Is there a Deputy G-7 Finance Ministers' meeting this Saturday on the subject in Frankfurt?

MR. SPERLING: I know that there have been G-7 calls and discussions going on today. I do not know whether a specific meeting on -- you mean on what's happened today or yesterday?

Q Perhaps on some other subject where this will come up.

MR. SPERLING: I'd have to get back to you.

Q Back on the budget, if I could. There was talk that the Clinton administration plans again to introduce a proposal of taxing cigarettes at between 50 cents and 75 cents a pack to provide some of the revenue for the 2000 spending. Could you or Bruce either address this issue directly?

MR. SPERLING: We're not going to comment a lot, but since it's really Bruce's area -- I'll let him not comment.
(Laughter.)

MR. REED: Well, again, without answering the question -- (laughter) -- as the President said last fall when the states reached agreement on their settlement, we still believe that Congress needs to finish the job of passing legislation to reduce youth smoking; that will be one of our top priorities in the new Congress, and the President's budget that comes out February 1st will show some of the details.

Q Will he be mentioning this in the State of the Union as he normally tries to?

MR. REED: Yes, I suspect he will.

Q Can you tell us a little bit more about how you're going to close -- which corporate loopholes may be closed in the 2000 budget as part of sort of the revenue projections and revenue generation?

MR. REED: Quite specifically, the way that -- the process that we went through because we've had target attacks -- credits that we pay for -- is that we put forward some of the tax credits that we proposed last year that were not passed; most specifically, the school construction, which will be part of our new budget. We also then had processes where we developed some additional tax credits.

At the same time, we go through the list of offsets and do what any wise budgeting would do; see if the benefits of new proposals are worth the cost of the raisers. I think what you'll see is that you will see some measures that we tried last year that were not passed that we think we could still pass in the target tax credit. And I think there will be some new measures that we think fit the mode of being loophole close and reductions in corporate subsidies that we think are justified on economic basis in order to have some additional tax incentives that we're announcing today. And there will be another one that we'll be talking about concerning getting capital into underserved areas, that we'll be talking about on Friday, and a few others that we'll roll out between now and the budget.

Q If you can't be more specific, can you tell us what the sort of general size of the total --

MR. SPERLING: Again, this will be highly specific. It's just that we will put it out with the whole package. It will be mind-numbingly specific and you will see the exact package of tax cuts that we have, what the total cost of them are and then you will see what the loophole closers and revenue raisers we have. And you'll see that it will be a targeted tax cut package as we have that is fully offset with revenue raisers in areas that we feel are economically justifiable in the sense that they are closing what we think are unjustified subsidies or loopholes.

Q Any examples?

MR. SPERLING: Not at this point.

Q Gene, Social Security was at the cornerstone of the President's State of the Union address last January. How big of a part of this speech will it be? And would you raise or lower our expectations that the President would lay out some specific formula, guidelines or ideas about reforming Social Security in the State of the Union address?

MR. SPERLING: It's certainly going to be an important part of his State of the Union, as it was last year. Truthfully, we are working, have been working and, in fact, have a meeting within the next day or two specifically to talk about what our strategy is for the State of the Union. I believe that as we have talked with people about what is the best way for the President to help lead in getting a partisan Social Security reform, we feel that he needs to continually make efforts to move the ball forward, but, on the other hand, that we need to make sure that we have a framework that we can work with members of Congress in looking for areas of consensus. So I would not expect a detailed, comprehensive plan or anything of that sort, but I think you can also expect that the President will address the issue in a serious way.

Q Why do you want Wall Street to get a bite of a program that's worked for so many years, especially considering what Wall Street is?

MR. SPERLING: What I said following the White House Social Security Conference is that one of the things the President was exploring is how Social Security could get some of the higher returns that virtually any pension or state pension plan does, and that means having a system that would allow for some form of investment in --

Q At a cost of stability that it's had?

MR. SPERLING: No, no. In fact, the President's principles are very clear, that one of this clear principles is that Social Security reform must have a clear guaranteed benefit that is not based on the ups and downs of the market.

Q Have you decided to include some form of individual retirement account -- whether it's voluntary or supplemental?

MR. SPERLING: I'll let the President speak on January 19th. I think there is obviously a question of how we move forward, how much we talk about in the State of the Union. Those are still issues that the President's working on and we're discussing right now, as -- over these next few days critically.

Q So you don't rule that out?

Q Just to be clear, when you said that you would not expect a detailed plan on Social Security, do you mean for the State of the Union, or you mean that there's been a fundamental decision that the President's not going to offer his own --

MR. SPERLING: He asked me, at the State of the Union. I was responding -- he asked what the expectation should be for the State of the Union. What the President has said is that he will do whatever he feels is most productive in leading to a bipartisan Social Security reform package. If at some point we feel that the President putting forward more details, more specific principles, guideposts, any of those things we feel are most helpful in moving the ball forward, and that is what we will do.

I do think that the broad number of members of Congress that we have talked to feel it's very important that the President take the time over the next couple of months to work closely with members to find out what their views are, what their concerns are, so that as he does go forward he has a strong sense of where the basis for support and, ultimately, bipartisan consensus can be.

Q Was there support for individual retirement accounts in the President's meeting today with labor union leaders?

MR. SPERLING: I'll let them express, but I think if anybody following the debate knows that their position --

Q You were there. Did it come up in the discussions between the labor union leaders?

MR. SPERLING: Yes, there was some -- it wasn't necessarily the predominant issue, but it was one of the major issues that was discussed there. And, again, the President is going to look at things that fit his five principles and is keeping an open mind. But as time goes by I think he will start to give more and more indication of what he thinks would be the best basis for having a strong Social Security reform that modernizes and protects the solvency of Social Security, but also ensures that the basic guarantee benefit that people have counted on is still a basic guaranteed benefit that is not contingent on the ups and downs or volatility of the market.

That does not mean one can close down the door in a safe and prudent and non-political way looking for Social Security to get some of the higher returns that virtually every pension plan in the United States is able to achieve.

Q What's impeachment going to do with the President's initiatives? Have you had any soundings on the Hill, because there are many statements made that your programs won't go anywhere as long as this prevails.

MR. SPERLING: If I've learned anything over the last year it's that I don't see why anybody has any confidence they can predict anything that's going to happen. And what that really means for us is that we just go forward with our policy proposals. There has always been serious interest in Social Security on both the Democrat and Republican side, and that's for a simple reason: Because our constituents, the people who elected the President and elected the members of Congress feel this is one of, if not the most critical, domestic issue facing this country over the next few decades, and I think there will be a strong demand for us to deal with this in a productive and comprehensive and bipartisan fashion.

Q As far as timing goes, would it be productive to introduce any details to a proposal prior to the ending of the Senate trial, or should something like that wait until the conclusion of the process?

MR. SPERLING: I really have nothing to add to what I've already said.

Q Gene, there's been articles recently that the President might favor using the surplus, tying the surplus directly to private savings accounts. How is that being viewed at this point?

MR. SPERLING: Again, I'm going to do what any good staffer should do, which is I'll let the President speak on the issue in the State of the Union on January 19th. I think what has been reported is that we are certainly looking comprehensively and certainly we have -- as we have always done for the last few years, are looking not only at Social Security reform, but ways to strengthen the other two legs of the retirement policy stool, which certainly include strengthening an increase of access of pensions and individual savings, but that has been a policy we have had for several years, just to look across the board. So there are a number of things that the President is reviewing now.

Q Thank you.
