THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

January 18, 1999

PRESS BRIEFING BY JOE LOCKHART

The Briefing Room

12:42 P.M. EST

Q This is Martin Luther King's birthday, so it should be a holiday.

MR. LOCKHART: It is, so I'll be very brief.

Q It's a day off.

MR. LOCKHART: No, it's a day on, not a day off.

Q What made you change your mind?

MR. LOCKHART: On briefing? I'm happy -- I figured you all would want to see me today. Everyone made such a fuss about the fact that they wouldn't see me for a couple days, I thought I'd come out and see you.

Let me do one piece of business first. I have in front of me that lists those who will be joining the First Lady, Hillary Rodham Clinton, in the box tomorrow night.

Q Is Helen on it?

MR. LOCKHART: No, sorry. Once again. Next year maybe. The people chosen to sit with Mrs. Clinton that daily exhibit what is best about America -- they range from students participating in the AmeriCorps program to parents who are active in their local communities to some locally-elected officials.

I'll just briefly run through some of the people, for those who have an interest. Ashley Dumas is an AmeriCorps member, with the Notre Dame Mission Volunteers program, a 1998 graduate of Wellesley College. She's currently serving at Project Hope in South Boston, a shelter for single mothers. She teaches GED classes and helps provide child care assistance.

Loc Truong is an AmeriCorps member with the San Luis Obispo AmeriCorps program. Serves as a full-time mentor to high-risk teenage boys. He and his family were political refugees from Vietnam. I'll read you a brief quote from him on why he does AmeriCorps: "The main reason I joined AmeriCorps is because of my passion to repay society for what they've done for my family. When we came to the U.S. we had nothing. People gave us food, clothing, and shelter. Now I would like to help those who are less fortunate, those who were once in my situation."

Joanna Quintana Barroso is a third-grade teacher at Coral Waya Elementary School in Miami, Florida. She's been involved in curriculum based gun safety programs and is known in the community for turning around lives. She recently participated in the White House Conference on School Safety, where she spoke about the successful anticrime efforts at her school, including school uniforms, gun safety curriculum and DARE officers.

Suzann Wilson, some of you will remember, is the mother of an 8-year-old girl who was killed in Jonesboro, in that shooting. She has been here and spoken here at the White House before. She's currently working to pass child access prevention gun laws that will require gun owners to keep loaded firearms out of the reach of children.

Officer Chris Lonsford is a COPS funded community police officer from Fontana, California, Police Department, where, in 1998, received the police department's highest honor, the Medal of Valor. He exhibited extraordinary bravery and judgment in assisting in the arrest of three heavily-armed robbers without any -- despite their heavy weaponry -- without any collateral casualties in the community.

Maurice Lim Miller is the Executive Director of Asian Neighborhood Design, a program that was recently cited in San Francisco, California, as part of the President's initiative on race -- the promising practices for racial reconciliation.

Captain Jeffrey B. Taliaferro is presently chief of wing weapons for the 28th Operations Support Squadron; played an important role in Operation Desert Fox. So he will be there.

Elam Hill, age 15, is the winner of the Bayer National Science Foundation Award for a community. He is someone, along with some of his classmates, developed a communications program to help homeless families when they shifted between shelters, and not lose school time in moving from school to school. It's a program that has now been picked up by the Georgia State Department of Education.

Two more. Dr. Rita Colwell --

Q Where is he from?

MR. LOCKHART: Atlanta. From the Walden Middle School.

Dr. Rita Colwell is the first woman to head the National Science Foundation. She is doing a lot of fine work there, including a five-year initiative on information technology, which will ultimately speed the pace of scientific discovery.

Finally, Mayor Wellington Webb, the Mayor of Denver, a longtime friend of the President and First Lady and a well-recognized and distinguished public servant for three decades, leading Denver in many surveys to being one of the most highly acclaimed cities in the country.

Q There was a story that they were trying to put together Michael Jordan and Sammy Sosa and Mark McGwire -- was there any truth to it?

MR. LOCKHART: Oh, there's lots of stories about --

Q Were you trying to get them?

MR. LOCKHART: If I've got any more to say on that, I'll say it.

Q The answer is yes, I take it.

MR. LOCKHART: No.

Q The answer is, no, you are not?

MR. LOCKHART: Maybe, could be. There are stories.

Q I want to know why the pool that leaves with the President is not allowed to go on the floor, as they have been for many, many years.

MR. LOCKHART: Helen, I don't really know what you're talking about, so let me look into it. That's the first I've heard of this.

Q Does the White House agree with Senator Daschle's

statement this morning that witnesses now appear to be inevitable?

MR. LOCKHART: I think the White House believes that the senators, in a bipartisan fashion, deferred the decision of any witnesses until both sides had a chance to make their case and the senators had a chance to do their own questions. I don't think we believe that any judgment should be made at this point. We have, again, not had a chance to present a single minute, second, hour of our case. We'll start that tomorrow. We're looking forward to that. And the senators should, as their agreement indicated, wait until both sides have had a chance to make their case to decide on this issue.

Q If I could just follow up on that, Joe, do you believe that the momentum for witnesses will be slowed by the defense presentation?

MR. LOCKHART: The senators will have to make their own judgments. We believe that we have a compelling case to make based on the laws, the facts, and the Constitution. We will do that. We look forward to that, starting tomorrow. And the issue of witnesses will be deferred.

I'll make a comment that I think I've made before, which is what was remarkable about the House prosecutors, the floor managers, was their almost single-mindedness on the issue of witnesses and it being the most important priority for them. And I think that is a stunning admission that they don't believe that the case that they sent over from the House and the case that they presented to the Senate is strong, and is strong enough to do what they set out to do from the beginning, which is remove the President.

Q But you have suggested, and others have certainly said, that witnesses might help the President's case. They might be exculpatory about these accusations, or they certainly might throw some doubt on several questions. Mr. Hutchinson said yesterday that he didn't think he could get a conviction in a criminal court at the moment without witnesses.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think that witnesses certainly could help the case, there could be exculpatory information -- there is exculpatory information. But I'll repeat again, the one thing that bringing witnesses into this case will definitely do is extend and delay this process.

We've had more than, I believe, 150 witnesses over a year that have gone before the grand jury. We have tens of thousands of pages of testimony and transcripts that indicate where people are. We have people who have been disposed and testified over 20 times. Asking them to do it one more time is not likely to provide any new or shocking revelations in this case. They've testified many times before. And the one thing e can be assured of if we go this route is extending and delaying this process.

We think -- I think the American people believe that the process has gone on long enough and we ought to find a way to bring it to a conclusion.

Q Joe, given what most people have heard about President Clinton over the last many months is -- these allegations, this impeachment, now the Senate trial, what do you hope that people tuning into the State of the Union speech tomorrow night will see and hear from the President? What message do you hope that they'll take away?

MR. LOCKHART: In the State of the Union?

Q Yes.

MR. LOCKHART: Oh, I think the public largely knows that the President has remained focused on their business. But I think tomorrow's speech will promote a very forward-looking agenda for the 21st century, will be an ambitious agenda to build on the success we've had over the last seven years -- the unprecedented economic expansion in this country allows us to really look forward and look to give people the tools they need to balance family and work in the 21st century.

I think at the end of the speech people will look not at an administration that has entered the last two years of office and is slowing down, but an administration that is energized and is looking forward to moving into the 21st century with an ambitious and activist agenda.

Q Why isn't he mentioning impeachment? Does he think it would hurt him as a personal plea, or does he think it would intervene with the trial?

MR. LOCKHART: I think the President believes the appropriate place for those comments are in the Senate --

Q But they won't have his personal comments.

MR. LOCKHART: They certainly have his comments and his testimony. His lawyers I think will do an excellent job of presenting a compelling case based on the facts and the law.

Q He's not going to mention impeachment?

MR. LOCKHART: I think this is probably the fifth day running that I've answered in the affirmative there.

Q But you could be wrong.

MR. LOCKHART: That's right. I've been --

Q Joe, the Congressional Budget Office indicated a larger surplus than forecast. Does the White House acknowledge that and will the President talk about the budget surplus tomorrow, and is he going to reorient any of the priorities?

MR. LOCKHART: Barry's not here, but Barry is more of an expert on this than me. But I think if you go back over the last seven years, you'll find that the OMB estimates are traditionally slightly more conservative than the Congressional Budget Office. I think we talked about new surplus numbers that will be used as far as putting our budget together. They do show a large surplus and a growing surplus.

But as we've said before, we believe that the surplus needs to be reserved until we figure out the long-term solution to Social Security. The President will address that tomorrow, will address those issues, and I'll leave it to him.

Q Even more money is still not enough until Social Security is taken care of and there are other things that can be taken care of?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think I'll leave it to the President to discuss tomorrow.

Q How uncomfortable will it be for the President to stand in the chamber where he was impeached and deliver his speech, talking to an audience that impeached him and is now judging him?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I would say that the President is speaking more -- will be speaking to members of the House and the Senate, but he's also speaking to the American public, and I believe the President is always comfortable when he's dealing with issues, dealing with issues that impact real people's lives, dealing with how the government can help provide the tools that people need in home and work.

Q Joe, what are the lawyers going to emphasize tomorrow? Will there be a point-by-point rebuttal of the House prosecutors' case?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not going to get into how they're going to do what they're going to do. I'll tell you that Mr. Ruff -- I expect Mr. Ruff to open tomorrow and give you an overview based on the facts, the evidence, and the Constitution, and the constitutional standards that should be applied. And I think, at the end of the three days, people will have a different view of the case that's been laid out and the facts that have been laid before them.

Q What comes after Ruff? Can you give us a schedule?

MR. LOCKHART: I'll tell you, tomorrow I expect Mr. Ruff to take whatever he needs in the afternoon to open and do this overview, and I expect that will be the only presentation for tomorrow. And we'll move into Wednesday.

Q What do you mean, facts --

Q He'll be the only presentation tomorrow?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes.

Q Will you use all your time, Joe?

MR. LOCKHART: We'll use as much of the time as we believe is appropriate.

Q What do you mean, based on facts? It's going to have a different story than the one we've already heard?

MR. LOCKHART: Sure. Let me just give you one example, which is for three or four months -- we have filed several hundred pages of briefs, talking about the evidence in the 60,000 pages, including a lot of exculpatory evidence. But there is still, based on published polls, three-quarters of this country who believe that the President refused to acknowledge that he had an inappropriate relationship with Monica Lewinsky in the grand jury. Somehow that message hasn't gotten out there.

So we look forward to this opportunity to use the time that the Senate has allowed us to make the case, based not just on standards and the Constitution and the law, but based on the facts in this case.

Q The House managers played the President's portion of his grand jury testimony in which he said that, acknowledged that.

MR. LOCKHART: Yes, that is correct.

Q Well, why do you think people don't know it?

MR. LOCKHART: And it's one of the first times that that got any significant attention, so we appreciate the help they provided to us.

Q He acknowledged an inappropriate relationship and said he then would not answer any further questions about that relationship.

MR. LOCKHART: That's right. That's right.

Q Well, are you abandoning the argument that it's not an impeachable offense?

MR. LOCKHART: Absolutely not. Absolutely not. Our argument is going to closely track what you've already seen as far as what the facts are in this case, what the evidence is in this case, and what the constitutional standards should be in this case.

Q Joe, if you don't enter the facts in a detailed way and don't go into the interpretation of those facts, will that not require witnesses and prolong the proceedings?

MR. LOCKHART: No, because there has already been 150 witnesses. I think -- George Mitchell said something yesterday that was very interesting, which is, witnesses don't provide clarity, they provide disputes. It's the tryers of facts that try to clarify these things. Everyone who has had something to say in this case, according to the Independent Counsel and according to the House Judiciary Committee -- and we'd argue that maybe there are some other people that might have something to say, but they have not spoken, but we don't think it's necessary to bring anyone else in at this point -- has had their chance to make their case. And I think it boggles the mind a bit to try to understand how someone testifying for the 10th time or the 23rd time or the 9th time might provide any more clarity.

Q Given that argument, Joe, are you saying that the White House would not call witnesses, even if the prosecution does?

MR. LOCKHART: No. What I think I said, and I'll repeat again here, is the White House, even though the record that exists is probably the most prejudicial that could exist, we're willing to go forward and argue this case on that record. If the House managers insist on witnesses and if the Senate approves them, certainly I would think that we would look at calling witnesses. Either way we're looking at a process that is extended and delayed.

Q The President is now making his second State of the Union address under the shadow of the scandal. Talk to me about what he was able to accomplish in 1998 that makes you think he'll be able to accomplish the agenda he's about to lay out in the State of the Union address in 1999.

MR. LOCKHART: I think that if you look back on last year's State of the Union, we got an awful lot accomplished. The President laid out two central economic challenges and I think we've met both of them. The first was Social Security and reserving the surplus for Social Security. And think back -- I mean, it seems like it was a long time ago, but there was a very healthy debate -- okay, the man upstairs doesn't like this argument, I'm going to change it. (Laughter.)

Okay, let's go to IMF. No, seriously -- there was a very healthy debate among Democrats and Republicans about what the surplus should be used for. The Republicans argued very forcefully and strenuously that we ought to immediately turn around and have tax cuts. That's a pretty viable political option, but the President and the Democrats held firm. The surplus has been reserved, it's there and it's going to be important to how we go forward with Social Security.

The second main economic area was the international financial crisis. And it was like pulling teeth at times, but we got the IMF funded and have made important steps towards stabilizing economies around the world. And that has a direct impact on the American economy and American workers.

Clearly, the President talked about 100,000 teachers, and that's something we took the important first step on this year. We talked about the High Hopes mentoring program and that went through. We talked about continuing to move towards -- adding a million children in Head Start. He got the full request for assistance on that. We got a dramatic increase in after-school care, on his child care initiative. Education standards and Title I and Goals 2000 went through. Three thousand new charter schools -- I've got a longer list here -- the G.I. Bill for American workers; the support for Americans dislocated by changes in the economy; the 25 percent increase in research and science; important efforts on welfare reform; and also, on the foreign policy front, the expansion of NATO.

Q Can I follow up on that? Yesterday, the Speaker and Senator Lott sent the President a letter, asking him to get Social Security reform legislation to them by March 1st. Will he meet that deadline?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm sorry, say again.

Q The Speaker and Senator Lott sent the President a letter about the State of the Union address, listing several things they'll be listening for. They said they would like to have his reforms as soon as possible, but surely before March 1st, when Finance and Ways and Means starts work. Will the President present a plan?

MR. LOCKHART: The President will present a lot of ideas on how we move this country forward and we look forward to, beginning Wednesday morning, working with Congress in order to effect that.

Q And they also say they're looking for an across-the-board tax cut and --

MR. LOCKHART: You know, this is coming from a leadership that has still not passed a budget for 1998. So we look forward to working with them in a bipartisan way and beginning that at the earliest point possible. On the issue of tax cuts, we have said -- as we said for the last year and our position hasn't changed -- that we need to take steps to ensure the long-term viability of Social Security before we start moving down the road to tax cuts.

Q Joe, the Coalition for National Referendum, in Concord, New Hampshire, has sent invitations to hundreds of radio stations, including ours, to join in trying to stop the President's removal from office. And my question is, did you or anyone else in the White House have anything to do with this?

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I know of. But let me reassure you that it's okay with me if you don't join the team.
(Laughter.)

Q Is this just a Carville/Flynt/Lear operation?

MR. LOCKHART: Who?

Q Carville/Flynt/Lear.

MR. LOCKHART: I don't have the slightest idea what you're talking about.

Q People for Norman Lear's way -- Carville and his friend, Flynt.

MR. LOCKHART: And what is your basis for the question?

Q Is this an operation by these people?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't have the slightest idea. Go ask them.

Q Joe, could I turn you into Kosovo and the situation there?

MR. LOCKHART: Turn me into Kosovo? You would like that, wouldn't you?

Q A battleground -- you're already there. What action does the White House plan in the wake of the massacre over there over the weekend?

MR. LOCKHART: Those of you who were around over the weekend will remember the President issued a strong statement condemning the barbaric atrocity that occurred in Kosovo over the weekend. I think there have been a series of statements over the last 24 to 36 hours that indicate -- both from the North Atlantic Council, from the OSCE -- we expect the U.N. to discuss today that the international community is united in sending a strong message to President Milosevic both condemning this atrocity, demanding access of the International War Crimes Tribunal to go in and bring to justice those who are responsible for this. and demanding further that President Milosevic come into compliance with the agreements he made with the U.N. Security Council.

I think we expect the United Nations to take this up later this afternoon and we believe that the Council is united on this. Further, General Clark Naumann will go to Belgrade tomorrow to deliver this strong message.

Q Joe, is it fair to say that at this point the OSCE has failed in its monitoring effort, that they didn't know this happened until it was all over.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, they certainly were able to go in and quickly verify who they believe is responsible for this, and that's important. I think there's been some important work that has been done. We've averted a humanitarian crisis that was facing us as we moved into this winter.

Q Who is going tomorrow?

MR. LOCKHART: General Clark, who is the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, and the head of the Military Committee of the North Atlantic Council.

Q And who else?

MR. LOCKHART: It's those two: General Naumann and General Clark.

Q I have two follow-ups --

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not finished yet, because I think that's an important question.

Certainly, we have seen troops that have pulled back in the area. But we've, obviously, in the case of this weekend, seen a brutal atrocity that has to be dealt with; and now non-compliance. So I think a strong message will be brought to President Milosevic about bringing those to justice who should be punished for this and coming into compliance with the agreements that he made.

Q Two follow-ups. Do you think there's any will among the American people to become more deeply involved in the Kosovo situation. And, secondly, why hasn't Milosevic been arrested? I don't understand what the problem is there?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, on the second question, I'll leave it to others to detail the difficulties in that. But on the first, I don't think the United States, the people of the United States are anxious for further involvement in issues around the world. But I don't think this country is made up of people who can turn a blind eye to the kind of atrocity that they saw in the middle of Europe that not only defies the progress that we've made as we move to the 21st century, but actually harkens back to an earlier, more brutal time in Europe -- something that Europeans, Americans and the rest of the international community won't tolerate.

Q So where does that leave us then?

MR. LOCKHART: That leaves us at the Generals going to Belgrade tomorrow and delivering a very strong message about what the international community demands.

Q So the NATO threat to use force is still on the table?

MR. LOCKHART: The ACT ORD remains in effect.

Q Bob Dole said this morning, on "Good Morning America," that the administration still hasn't done enough to get tough with Milosevic. Do you think the American line will harden, will the American treatment of Milosevic toughen?

MR. LOCKHART: I think our line -- both the American's and the international community's -- is quite tough. And while we took some steps in the right direction, this is clearly a step in the wrong direction. That message will be delivered to President Milosevic, as well as the demand that he comply and allow access to those who are responsible for this and can be brought to justice. And it is certainly our hope that he gets that message.

Q Does the President feel that he's been able to devote enough attention to Kosovo in recent weeks? Has he been distracted by the problems here?

MR. LOCKHART: No. I think any objective analyst over the last year will see that the President has not been distracted. He has not wavered in his leadership, as far as America's responsibilities around the world and will not be.

Q Joe, I apologize if this came up earlier, but is there a role here for Richard Holbrooke?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think he has been playing an important role throughout, if you go back and look at this in a longer context. As far as his role over the next few days, I don't have any specifics on that. No plans at this point to send him there.

Q What's he doing on the impeachment today? What's he doing on State of the Union?

MR. LOCKHART: State of the Union, he's going out -- let me give you a little weekend flavor, because that can answer, sort of, both of those questions.

The President spent a good deal of time on the State of the Union over the weekend, both Saturday and Sunday, spent some time in the family theater practicing the speech, making changes as they went along -- with both his -- the team that's been working with him on the speech as well as some of the policy people who have been providing ideas for the speech. He probably spent three or four hours each day on that, as well as some time alone just working with the speech draft.

I expect him, upon returning from the service event today, to go back and take another session, a couple hours maybe -- but it could extend or detract, depending on how things go.

Q How long is it going to run? And how much trouble are you having cutting it down --

MR. LOCKHART: Well, it's always a difficult process, with so many good ideas, to highlight the best ones and talk about them in a way that leads to an effective presentation. I think they've made a lot of progress on that over the last few days.

On impeachment, the President, as far as I know, has nothing on his schedule today. He spent about 30 minutes yesterday with his lawyers and legal team. They sort of outlined how they plan to present their side of the case over the week and the session lasted probably 30 minutes.

Q Joe, at one of the House hearings, Chuck Ruff said that he thought a reasonable person could conclude that the President had lied at prior proceedings. And then I think --

MR. LOCKHART: Well, not in prior proceedings. The question was specific to the grand jury deposition.

Q To the deposition or the -- that was my question.

MR. LOCKHART: I'm sorry, I didn't mean -- to the civil deposition. I'm confusing myself here.

Q The concession was simply that there were some times in the civil deposition that a reasonable person could conclude that he lied -- not necessarily what we're talking about now, in his grand jury --

MR. LOCKHART: That is correct. That is correct.

Q Joe, actually the question included both. I went back and read it. It included both --

MR. LOCKHART: Right. But if you look at the answer, the answer clearly was talking about the issues involved in the civil deposition. And if you go down a little bit further in the transcript you'll see that the direct question about the grand jury was put to him and he answered it directly several times.

Q And then you later said the President agreed -- if I remember correctly --

MR. LOCKHART: I said that the President thought his counsel made a strong presentation to the House and agreed with the points he made.

Q Joe, has the President spent any time at all over the weekend -- Saturday, particularly -- looking at the summation of the prosecutors, read a transcript?

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I'm aware of.

Q Is he unaware of what they said about him in the House -- I mean, the Senate?

MR. LOCKHART: No. It's certainly -- most newspapers have done a fair job of devoting significant space to their testimony, as well as television and radio.

Q So he's been reading newspaper accounts and watching news broadcasts about it?

MR. LOCKHART: He is certainly aware of what their case was, based on a variety of mediums, including briefings, you know, from his staff and reading accounts or watching TV.

Q Have the major elements of the President's initiatives that he'll talk about in the State of the Union already been announced, or are there new initiatives that we'll hear tomorrow night?

MR. LOCKHART: There are some things that you haven't heard yet and will knock your socks off.

Q What does that mean?

MR. LOCKHART: No, not everything -- we're going to let the President make a few of the announcements.

Q Are you kidding or are you --

Q Well, he's the one who has already -- did all these leaks.

Q Are you kidding?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I'm not kidding. There will be parts of the speech that have not been previewed that I think you'll find very interesting.

Q Will knock our socks off?

Q Has he done anything on Brazil today, Joe?

MR. LOCKHART: No. I mean, he's gotten his daily national security briefing, which has become a standard part of -- but nothing in particular. I'd refer you over the Treasury for news of some meetings that went on over the weekend with Brazilian officials.

Q Has the President ever talked to President Cardoso about this?

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I know of, not directly. I know Secretary Rubin has had some conversations with his counterparts and with G-7 and IMF officials.

Q Beyond Ruff's summary tomorrow, will you be able to tell us about the rest of the time at all?

MR. LOCKHART: Maybe tomorrow.

Q Were you saying before that if there were witnesses you would reserve the right to call -- some of your allies have suggested that they'd like to see Ken Starr and Linda Tripp called. Do you share that view?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not going to preview what our strategy may be for something that hasn't been decided yet. I think those who want to speculate are free to speculate and it should be viewed as speculation.

Q Joe, if the President were not on trial in the Senate, would he be coming forward with all these initiatives that he'll be talking about tomorrow?

MR. LOCKHART: Absolutely. I think anyone who has spent time covering the President and who knows the President, knows, like he told his Cabinet several months ago, this President wants to make sure that on the last day of the last term that he's in office he's still pushing forward and putting out policy ideas. And I think that is significant.

I think, again, if you look back, sort of the 7th year of a presidency, there have been some in the past that have proposed things that are less ambitious. That won't happen with this President. In fact, if you look from a purely policy point of view, this one is probably as ambitious as the very first one he gave.

Q Joe, if he's going to knock our socks off, is that going to be in addition to all the things that have leaked out so far, and there's going to be applause. So would you figure it's a 90-minute or two hours?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not going to predict.

Q I mean, a lot of applause, that takes time, Joe. Particularly the Democrats.

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not going to predict. Will someone remind me not to use the sock allusion again? (Laughter.)

Q Is the President aware of the House managers -- the President is aware of all the presentation of managers?

MR. LOCKHART: Not in any great detail, but I think he's got a general awareness.

Q What was his assessment?

MR. LOCKHART: That the time has certainly come for his team to put on our side.

Q Joe, what does he have on his schedule tomorrow that would prevent him from watching some of his lawyer's presentation?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know that there's anything on his schedule that would prevent him from --

Q Does he plan to watch?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't think so. I'll check with him tomorrow.

Q Can you tell us what else he has on his schedule tomorrow?

MR. LOCKHART: Hold on.

Q And will you brief?

MR. LOCKHART: I think not. I think the tradition on State of the Union day is not to, and I know I have to go up to the Hill in the afternoon for a meeting.

Q Is it impeachment-related?

MR. LOCKHART: No, no, no.

Q It's a job interview.

MR. LOCKHART: Yes, a job interview -- very good. Very good. (Laughter.) Very funny, Steve. See if you get invited to another state dinner. (Laughter.)

Week ahead: Tuesday, the President will remain at the White House to prepare for the State of the Union; will deliver the speech on Capitol Hill later that night.

Q And where will Lockhart be?

Q Darning socks.

Q Do you know what time you will have --

Q You'll have a briefing in the morning, gaggle?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes, we'll do the gaggle in the morning. And then I think traditionally we don't brief. You all can bring an appeal to the gaggle if it's something you feel that strongly about.

Q And then you're going to put out a summary of his State of the Union?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes. I expect that throughout -- as we get late into the afternoon there should be some excerpts available, and then a text.

Q Speech in advance?

Q Text about 6:00 p.m.?

MR. LOCKHART: Oh, don't tie me down.

Q 5:00 p.m., 4:00 p.m.?

MR. LOCKHART: When do you want it?

Q Noon.

MR. LOCKHART: Okay. It will be noon, or shortly thereafter. Thank you.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Vice President

For Immediate Release Contact:
Monday, January 18, 1999 (202) 456-7035

VICE PRESIDENT GORE TO SPEAK AT ANNUAL MEETING OF WORLD ECONOMIC FORUM

Will Travel from Davos to London to meet with Blair

Washington, DC -- Vice President Gore today announced that he will travel to Davos, Switzerland to speak at the annual meeting of the World Economic Forum on January 28. The Vice President will be the featured speaker at the Forum's opening session on Thursday night, where he will address the challenges of globalization.

The Vice President will spend Friday in Davos, participating in conference activities and meeting with foreign leaders. On Saturday, the Vice President will travel to London where he will join Prime Minister Tony Blair and Deputy Prime Minister John Prescott for afternoon meetings. The Vice President will return to the U.S. Saturday night.

The World Economic Forum, founded in 1971, is an international membership organization of business, government and academic leaders seeking solutions to global issues. Some 2000 business executives, heads of state, senior government officials and experts from various fields will participate in the 1999 annual meeting.

The Vice President has recently spoken on the international financial situation in speeches to the annual meeting of the TransAtlantic Business Dialogue in Charlotte, North Carolina and the annual meeting of APEC (Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation) in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia.

TEXT:
PRESIDENT CLINTON AND VICE PRESIDENT GORE ANNOUNCE
LARGEST LENDING DISCRIMINATION SETTLEMENT IN AMERICAN HISTORY AT 1999
MARTIN LUTHER KING DAY SERVICE PROJECT
January 18, 1999

Today, President Clinton and Vice President Gore will announce the largest lending discrimination settlement in American history -- $6.5 billion in mortgages and special programs designed to help 78,000 minority and low-to moderate-income families become homeowners.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development negotiated the record settlement with Columbia National Inc., based in Columbia, MD. The mortgage lender, which operates in 28 states, was accused of violating the Fair Housing Act by discriminating against minorities seeking home mortgages. Under the settlement, Columbia agreed to make $6 billion in home mortgage loans to minorities and low- to moderate-income families over the next five years.

The lender also agreed to spend $529 million over the five years on the following programs:
$489 million in closing cost assistance programs and bond programs that subsidize interest rates for minority families and low- to moderate-income families;
$36.5 million in home rehabilitation loans that will be available through HUD,s Federal Housing Administration (FHA) 203k program;
$2.6 million to advertise the availability of its home mortgages in minority oriented media; and
$1 million to train its staff to deal with fair lending and diversity issues.

The settlement closes HUD,s investigation of the lending discrimination charges, which grew out of a November 1997 complaint against Columbia by the Fort Worth Human Relations Commission. It is the eighth and final settlement involving testing done by the commission with a $100,000 grant awarded by HUD to determine whether there was racial discrimination in lending in the Fort Worth, Texas area.

The eight settlements, including Columbia, total $10.1 billion. Previous record-high lending discrimination settlements were negotiated by HUD in 1998 growing out of the same $100,000 grant. Those record settlements were for $2.1 billion from AccuBanc Mortgage of Dallas, Texas and $1.3 billion from Temple-Inlan Mortgage of Austin, Texas, with most of the funds going for mortgages targeted to minorities and low- to moderate-income home buyers.

Congress passed the Fair Housing Act in 1968, six days after the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., who spent years working for passage of the measure to outlaw housing discrimination. Many of those voting for the measure at the time said it was a tribute to Dr. King.

The President and Vice President will make the announcement at Regency House senior health center, where they will work with 15 AmeriCorps volunteers to tear down a wall. This project marks the beginning of full scale rehabilitation of the senior health center by AmeriCorps members. Regency House is a 160-unit high-rise apartment building for low-income seniors, administered by the D.C. Housing Authority. This year, more than 700 AmeriCorps members will serve with more than 8 projects across the District of Columbia.

NOTE CHANGE IN CHILD'S AGE AND NUMBER OF CASUALTIES, AS WELL AS ADDITION OF CHILD'S LAST NAME IN BIOGRAPHY OF SUZANN WILSON

OFFICE OF FIRST LADY HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON
GUESTS SEATED IN THE FIRST LADY,S GALLERY
FOR THE STATE OF THE UNION ADDRESS
JANUARY 19, 1999

First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton will be joined tomorrow evening, January 19, 1999, for President Clinton,s State of the Union address by ten citizens who through their public activities have made an impact in their communities. The people chosen to sit with Mrs. Clinton daily exhibit what is best about America. They range from students participating in the AmeriCorps program to a parent activist to a locally elected official. The following people make up the list of guests in the First Lady,s Gallery:

Ashley Dumas, AmeriCorps volunteer

Loc Truong, AmeriCorps volunteer

Joanna Quintana Barroso, teacher

Suzann Wilson, parent of slain daughter

Officer Chris Lonsford, community police officer

Maurice Lim Miller, executive director of Asian Neighborhood Design

Captain Jeffrey B. Taliaferro, served in Operation Desert Fox

Elam Hill, 15 year-old winner of Bayer/National Science Foundation

Award

Dr. Rita Colwell, head of the National Science Foundation
Mayor Wellington E. Webb, mayor of Denver

Biographies are attached.

List of Guests Seated in First Lady,s Gallery
State of the Union Address
January 19, 1999

ASHLEY DUMAS. Ashley Dumas, an AmeriCorps member with the Notre Dame Mission Volunteers Program, is a 1998 graduate of Wellesley College. After receiving her degree in Cognitive Science, Dumas signed up for the AmeriCorps program and is currently serving at Project Hope in South Boston, a shelter for single mothers. Dumas teaches GED classes and helps to provide child care assistance. Her service doesn,t end, however, at the end of the day. Dumas lives in a house with six teenagers enrolled in A Better Chance, a program that places high risk young people in private and public schools so that they may have a better chance at graduating from high school. Dumas tutors the girls each night and serves as a positive role model and mentor. Dumas credits her parents for her strong ethic of service--Dumas, father is a commander in the Coast Guard and her mother is a public school teacher.

LOC TRUONG. Loc Truong is an AmeriCorps Member with the San Luis Obispo AmeriCorps Program. Truong serves as a full-time mentor to eight high-risk teenage boys. As an elementary school student, Truong, along with his parents and five siblings, came to the United States from Vietnam as a political refugee. They settled in Stockton where the entire family farmed and then scraped together enough money to open a grocery store. After graduating from Cal Poly University in San Luis Obispo, Truong joined AmeriCorps: "The main reason I joined AmeriCorps is because of my passion to repay society for what they've done for my family. When we came to the U.S., we had nothing. People gave us food, clothing and shelter. Now I would like to help those who are less fortunate, those who were once in my situation." After finishing his service, Truong plans to become a teacher and a principal.

JOANNA QUINTANA BARROSO. Joanna Quintana Barroso is a third grade teacher at Coral Way Elementary School in Miami, Florida. Following in her mother,s tradition of teaching, Barroso teaches reading and other subjects to a largely lower-income student body. She has been involved in a curriculum-based gun safety program and is known for turning around the lives of several students. Barroso recently participated in the White House Conference on School Safety, where she spoke about the successful anti-crime efforts at her school which include school uniforms, gun safety curriculum, and DARE officers. Ms. Barroso is an advocate of reducing class size to improve learning.

SUZANN WILSON. Suzann Wilson,s life was forever changed when her 11-year-old daughter Britthney Varner was shot and killed, along with four other students and a teacher, by two schoolmates in a Jonesboro, Arkansas school. Today, Wilson is working to pass Child Access Prevention gun laws that would require gun owners to keep loaded firearms out of the reach of children: "What happened at Jonesboro didn,t have to happen. It could have been prevented."

OFFICER CHRIS LONSFORD. In March 1998, Officer Lonsford, a COPS-funded community policing officer from the Fontana, California, Police Department received the department,s highest honor--the Medal of Valor. During an incident that occurred in November, 1996, Officer Lonsford exhibited extraordinary bravery and superior judgment in assisting in the arrest of three heavily armed robbers. Despite facing a barrage of fire from an AK-47, a handgun, and a shotgun, Officer Lonsford kept his cool and held his fire, fearing that return might injure residents of a nearby apartment complex. The suspects were apprehended and no civilians were injured.

MAURICE LIM MILLER. Maurice Lim Miller is the Executive Director of Asian Neighborhood Design (ASD). ASD, located in San Francisco, California, has been recognized by President Clinton,s Initiative on Race as a Promising Practice for Racial Reconciliation. ASD is a multi-service community development agency serving low income communities and families. Its services include community design and urban planning, family and youth counseling, workforce training for at-risk youth and welfare recipients, the development of affordable housing, and the operation of a furniture and cabinetmaking venture. Lim Miller immigrated to the United States from Mexico and was the first in his family to attend college.

CAPTAIN JEFFREY B. TALIAFERRO. Captain Taliaferro is presently Chief of Wing Weapons, 28th Operations Support Squadron, 28th Bomb Wing. As the chief tactician in the wing, Captain Taliaferro was deployed to Thumrait, Oman to serve in Operation DESERT FOX. During Operation DESERT FOX, Captain Taliaferro commanded the 28th Expeditionary Operations Squadron mission planning team. He not only flew during combat operations, but was the architect of the first B-1B combat mission. Captain Taliaferro,s leadership was the foundation to the successful employment of the B-1B,s first-ever combat operation.

ELAM HILL. Elam Hill, age 15, is a winner of the Bayer/National Science Foundation Award for Community Innovation. Elam lives in a public housing development in one of Atlanta,s poorest neighborhoods. Everyday, on his way to Walden Middle School, Elam saw homeless people and wanted to help. After months of research, Elam and three classmates came up with a solution to a problem many homeless children face. They developed a communications center for homeless families with school children to help alleviate the difficulty parents have in transferring school records as they search for shelter and thereby, reduce the number of children who are forced to miss weeks and months of school. The State of Georgia Department of Education has agreed to use this information system throughout the state. Elam never thought he,d go to college; now, he wants to attend Georgia Tech.

DR. RITA COLWELL. Dr. Rita Colwell, the first woman to head the National Science Foundation (NSF), personifies a passion for discovery and a sense of adventure. Prior to her appointment to the NSF, Dr. Colwell served as president of the University of Maryland Biotechnology Institute, was a former professor at Georgetown University, and is recognized as an internationally respected microbiologist. In her current position at NSF, Dr. Colwell will help direct a new five-year initiative in information technology, emphasizing the importance of making significant increases in computing and communications research. These technologies will dramatically quicken the pace of scientific discovery.

MAYOR WELLINGTON E. WEBB. Mayor Wellington E. Webb is currently serving his second term as Mayor of the City of Denver. Mayor Webb began his distinguished public service career in 1972 when he was elected to the Colorado House of Representatives and in 1996, was named by Newsweek Magazine as one of the Top 25 Mayors in the Nation. For the past four years, Fortune Magazine has named Denver as one of the Top Five American Cities in its annual survey. He has played a leading role in establishing Denver as a Millennium Community to launch local projects to save our history and prepare children for the 21st Century.

GUESTS SEATED IN THE FIRST LADY!,S GALLERY
FOR THE STATE OF THE UNION ADDRESS
JANUARY 19, 1999

First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton will be joined tomorrow evening,
January 19,
1999, for President Clinton!,s State of the Union address by ten citizens who through their public activities have made an impact in their communities.
The
people chosen to sit with Mrs. Clinton daily exhibit what is best about America. They range from students participating in the AmeriCorps program to a parent activist to a locally elected official. The following people make up

the list of guests in the First Lady's Gallery:

Ashley Dumas, AmeriCorps volunteer
Loc Truong, AmeriCorps volunteer
Joanna Quintana Barroso, teacher
Suzann Wilson, parent of slain daughter
Officer Chris Lonsford, community police officer
Maurice Lim Miller, executive director of Asian Neighborhood Design
Captain Jeffrey B. Taliaferro, served in Operation Desert Fox
Elam Hill, 15 year-old winner of Bayer/National Science Foundation Award
Dr. Rita Colwell, head of the National Science Foundation
Mayor Wellington E. Webb, mayor of Denver

Biographies are attached.

###

List of Guests Seated in First Lady's Gallery
State of the Union Address
January 19, 1999

ASHLEY DUMAS. Ashley Dumas, an AmeriCorps member with the Notre Dame Mission Volunteers Program, is a 1998 graduate of Wellesley College. After receiving her degree in Cognitive Science, Dumas signed up for the AmeriCorps program and is currently serving at Project Hope in South Boston, a shelter for single mothers. Dumas teaches GED classes and helps to provide child care assistance. Her service doesn't end, however, at the end of the day. Dumas lives in a house with six teenagers enrolled in A Better Chance, a program that places high risk young people in private and public schools so that they may have a better chance at graduating from high school. Dumas tutors the girls each night and serves as a positive role model and mentor. Dumas credits her parents for her strong ethic of service--Dumas's father is a commander in the Coast Guard and her mother is a public school teacher.

LOC TRUONG. Loc Truong is an AmeriCorps Member with the San Luis Obispo AmeriCorps Program. Truong serves as a full-time mentor to eight high-risk teenage boys. As an elementary school student, Truong, along with his parents and five siblings, came to the United States from Vietnam as a political refugee. They settled in Stockton where the entire family farmed and then scraped together enough money to open a grocery store. After graduating from Cal Poly University in San Luis Obispo, Truong joined AmeriCorps: "The main reason I joined AmeriCorps is because of my passion to repay society for what they've done for my family. When we came to the U.S., we had nothing. People gave us food, clothing and shelter. Now I would like to help those who are less fortunate, those who were once in my situation." After finishing his service, Truong plans to become a teacher and a principal.

JOANNA QUINTANA BARROSO. Joanna Quintana Barroso is a third grade teacher at Coral Way Elementary School in Miami, Florida. Following in her mother's tradition of teaching, Barroso teaches reading and other subjects to a largely lower-income student body. She has been involved in a curriculum-based gun safety program and is known for turning around the lives of several students. Barroso recently participated in the White House Conference on School Safety, where she spoke about the successful anti-crime efforts at her school which include school uniforms, gun safety curriculum, and DARE officers. Ms. Barroso is an advocate of reducing class size to improve learning.

SUZANN WILSON. Suzann Wilson's life was forever changed when her eight year old daughter Brittheny was shot, along with four others, and killed by two schoolmates in a Jonesboro Arkansas school. Today, Wilson is working to pass Child Access Prevention gun laws that would require gun owners to keep loaded firearms out of the reach of children: "What happened at Jonesboro didn't have to happen. It could have been prevented."

OFFICER CHRIS LONSFORD. In March 1998, Officer Lonsford, a COPS-funded community policing officer from the Fontana, California, Police Department received the department's highest honor--the Medal of Valor. During an incident that occurred in November, 1996, Officer Lonsford exhibited extraordinary bravery and superior judgment in assisting in the arrest of three heavily armed robbers. Despite facing a barrage of fire from an AK-47, a handgun, and a shotgun, Officer Lonsford kept his cool and held his fire, fearing that return might injure residents of a nearby apartment complex. The suspects were apprehended and no civilians were injured.

MAURICE LIM MILLER. Maurice Lim Miller is the Executive Director of Asian Neighborhood Design (ASD). ASD, located in San Francisco, California, has been recognized by President Clinton's Initiative on Race as a Promising

Practice
for Racial Reconciliation. ASD is a multi-service community development agency
serving low income communities and families. Its services include community
design and urban planning, family and youth counseling, workforce training for
at-risk youth and welfare recipients, the development of affordable housing, and the operation of a furniture and cabinetmaking venture. Lim Miller immigrated to the United States from Mexico and was the first in his family to attend college.

CAPTAIN JEFFREY B. TALIAFERRO. Captain Taliaferro is presently Chief of Wing
Weapons, 28th Operations Support Squadron, 28th Bomb Wing. As the chief tactician in the wing, Captain Taliaferro was deployed to Thumrait, Oman to serve in Operation DESERT FOX. During Operation DESERT FOX, Captain Taliaferro
commanded the 28th Expeditionary Operations Squadron mission planning team. He not only flew during combat operations, but was the architect of the first
B-1B combat mission. Captain Taliaferro's leadership was the foundation to the
successful employment of the B-1B's first-ever combat operation.

ELAM HILL. Elam Hill, age 15, is a winner of the Bayer/National Science Foundation Award for Community Innovation. Elam lives in a public housing development in one of Atlanta's poorest neighborhoods. Everyday, on his way
to Walden Middle School, Elam saw homeless people and wanted to help.
After months of research, Elam and three classmates came up with a solution to a problem many homeless children face. They developed a communications center
for homeless families with school children to help alleviate the difficulty parents have in transferring school records as they search for shelter and thereby, reduce the number of children who are forced to miss weeks and months of school. The State of Georgia Department of Education has agreed to use this information system throughout the state. Elam never thought he'd go to college; now, he wants to attend Georgia Tech.

DR. RITA COLWELL. Dr. Rita Colwell, the first woman to head the National Science Foundation (NSF), personifies a passion for discovery and a sense of adventure. Prior to her appointment to the NSF, Dr. Colwell served as president of the University of Maryland Biotechnology Institute, was a former professor at Georgetown University, and is recognized as an internationally respected microbiologist. In her current position at NSF, Dr. Colwell

will help direct a new five-year initiative in information technology, emphasizing
the importance of making significant increases in computing and communications research. These technologies will dramatically quicken the pace of scientific discovery.

MAYOR WELLINGTON E. WEBB. Mayor Wellington E. Webb is currently serving his second term as Mayor of the City of Denver. Mayor Webb began his distinguished public service career in 1972 when he was elected to the Colorado House of Representatives and in 1996, was named by Newsweek Magazine as one of the Top
25 Mayors in the Nation. For the past four years, Fortune Magazine has named Denver as one of the Top Five American Cities in its annual survey. He has played a leading role in establishing Denver as a Millennium Community to launch local projects to save our history and prepare children for the 21st Century.

TEXT:

FYI -- Here's the text of the speech last week by Rodney Chase, Deputy CEO of BP Amoco. Thx to Rosina for the news report on it.

Context: British interest in ghg emissions taxes-- growing out of the Lord Marshall report.

Summary: Chase prefers emissions trading, voluntary commitments and tax incentives. Within the context of a trading system, he shows openness to fees for excess emissions above target levels. If they insist on a business energy tax, he sees its primary value w/ smaller businesses that are less apt to pay attention to emissions.

Coming Soon: Watch for another speech soon by Sir John Browne (25th I think at Detroit Econ Club.)

>Speech by

>Mr Rodney Chase

>President and Deputy CEO of BP Amoco

>to a meeting of the Fabian Society

>on Wednesday, 13th January 1999

>An Energy Tax on Business?

>Any discussion on energy taxes runs the risk of degenerating into a >partisan battle of words between those with complete, and those with >little, confidence in the ability of taxes to influence consumer behaviour >and encourage energy efficiency. True to the stereotype, business is >perceived as belonging to one camp and the environmentalist to another.

>Each questions each other's motives, and everyone goes away at the end >convinced they are unloved and misunderstood.

>I would be quite prepared to run the risk of this happening this afternoon,
>if I genuinely believed that energy taxes were bad in principle, and flawed >in practice. But I don't. Let me say at the outset that I accept that >there is a limit to what firms will do voluntarily to curb their energy >emissions, and that tax can undoubtedly be a powerful instrument for >changing behaviour, particularly if it is carefully directed and if energy >users face genuine alternatives.
>But I equally believe that, in many instances, there are other economic >instruments which offer greater benefits than taxation. I also believe >that some taxes do more harm than good, and that "an energy tax on >business" could easily fall into this category if we are not very careful >with its design.
>
>So, this is not a simple case of being 'pro' or 'anti' energy taxes.
There
>are risks and uncertainties on both sides, and we need to move cautiously.
>The discussion we are holding this afternoon takes place against the >background of Lord Marshall's Report, which by no means dismissed the >potential offered by Emissions Trading but also presented very cogently
the >case for an energy tax and its constructive role. For the record, however,
>I think I should quote briefly from BP's own evidence to the Marshall >Report because it explains where we come from. We concluded:
>
>"BP is firmly of the view that Emissions Trading and Voluntary Agreements >provide the most economic and the most effective route to reduce >environmental industrial emissions. We believe they will deliver better >results and greater volumes of reductions than any alternative because the >focus is on a direct solution to the problem at hand: cutting total >greenhouse emissions. In contrast, Energy Taxes reduce greenhouse gas >emissions only indirectly, i.e. by raising energy costs in the hope of >reducing consumption."
>As many of you will know, BP - and now, BP Amoco - has done more work on >Emissions Trading than probably any other company, and we have established >our own Emissions Trading System which is already beginning to show >positive results. I do not, however, propose to abuse your hospitality by >talking about Emissions Trading this afternoon. We are here to discuss the >potential contribution of an "energy tax on business", and I won't duck
the >issue.
>Suffice to say that while I believe very strongly that there is no single >solution to the problem we are discussing, I'm convinced that Emissions >Trading has the potential of becoming one of the most effective and >lowest-cost instruments at our disposal for fulfilling our obligations at >Kyoto and Buenos Aires.

>That leads me to my final introductory point. There are some who argue >against the introduction of an energy tax because they deny the existence >of an "energy" or "climate change" problem. I am not one of them. My own >company accepts 'Climate Change' as the dominant issue of public policy >facing the oil industry. While claiming no expertise on the science, our >position is that it would be dangerous to ignore the widespread concern >which exists.

>Some say we should wait until the science is proven. But we believe that >by taking sensible steps now, we run a much lower risk of incurring the >economic disruption and hardship which would accompany panic measures taken >at a later date.

>Above all, we believe the continuing growth in the world's needs for oil >and gas can be reconciled with a responsible attitude towards climate >change and the need to reduce energy emissions. We do not believe that >energy is something to be taxed for its own sake, or that people should >feel ashamed for wanting the enormous benefits that energy provides. But >we are in favour of measures which reduce the harmful consequences of using >energy.

>And that is where energy taxes come into the picture. How effective can >they be in helping this country, and indeed other countries, meet their >environmental obligations under the Kyoto Treaty? That is the crucial >question. Other issues inevitably associated with taxation, such as how >the revenue is spent or whether one tax is less popular than another, are >important but secondary to the case in hand. Of course, in assessing the >net cost of any tax, it's necessary to take account of what is done with >the revenue. But in the context of climate change, our primary focus >should be on whether energy taxes can help in achieving our Kyoto targets >at lowest cost.

>The effectiveness of most taxes are judged exclusively in terms of their >capacity to raise revenue for the Government. But if we are to believe
the >Government, this would not be the intention behind an energy tax. Here, >there is an intention to change behaviour, and in general such taxes can >only work when those who pay them face realistic choices between options, >and when the tax in question gives them an incentive to choose one outcome >against another.

>The incentive can be in the form of 'a carrot' or 'a stick'. But as a >businessman, I have greatest faith in the former. The motivational aspect >of taxation is something which I cannot emphasise too often. So long as >revenue raising isn't the prime objective, a tax which rewards certain >behaviours is more effective than one which sets out to impose penalties >and punishments.

>It was, for example, the reward approach which was adopted in respect of >unleaded petrol, where the technical option existed to switch fuels and >where consumers paid a lower tax by doing so.

>
>But with petrol taxes in general, a different picture emerges. Here, the >whole approach is driven by the need for revenue. From the perspective of >the UK motorist, over eighty per cent of the price of a gallon of petrol is >now accounted for by tax of one sort or another. As with taxes on tobacco,
>one wonders how the Chancellor would cope if consumers finally decided that
>"enough is enough" and stopped driving or smoking.
>
>I don't want to press this argument too strongly. The European Automobile >Manufacturers have committed themselves to reduce CO2 emissions from new >passenger cars by 25 per cent over the next ten years. No doubt, petrol >taxes have been an important factor in this initiative, although I suspect >that the prime driver has been customer and political pressure for higher >environmental standards coupled with the benefits offered by new >technology.
>
>But the main lesson to be drawn from all this is that energy taxes can do >little to influence behaviour if realistic alternatives don't exist.
>Indeed, the definition of a 'good' environmental tax is always one which >both creates the incentive to change behaviour and delivers the desired >environmental outcome with certainty - and at the lowest cost.
>
>Against this criterion, how should an energy tax on business be judged?
>
>Its problem is that its focus is on industry and commerce, to the exclusion >of other sectors. It taxes energy use, rather than carbon emissions. It >does not address other Greenhouse gases.
>
>Perhaps more important, energy taxes are bound to be seen more as a penalty >than an incentive. And this is what worries me most about a business >energy tax as normally perceived, particularly when considering its >implications for competitiveness.
>An energy tax on business ought not to be discussed in terms calculated to >provoke maximum suspicion amongst the business community. Far better if we >acknowledged the business concern over the prohibitive costs assumed to be >implicit in the Kyoto targets, and the many additional problems which are >expected to follow in their wake. Instead of compounding these concerns by >talk of new taxes, we should try to persuade our colleagues that there are >ways of addressing the issue without penalising them for the use of energy >which underpins all economic and material growth.
>
>But energy taxes can have an important contribution to make here provided >they are directed at creating incentives for people to do the right thing, >as opposed to creating a revenue dependence from people doing the wrong >thing.

>So, rather than inventing a new tax, why not introduce a reduced rate of >corporate taxes for companies which actually reduce their emissions by, >let >us say, one per cent a year from an agreed baseline? Or, rather than >penalise consumption, governments could encourage conservation by agreeing >targets for emission reductions, and taxing only the quantum by which the >target is exceeded.
>
>The real benefit of this last approach is that it would concentrate >everyone's attention on the target - and since the target is a percentage, >it would not discriminate on the quantity previously consumed. Hence, it >would not be unfair in competitive terms. And if companies were allowed >rebates for over-achievement, everyone would have a real internal >incentive
>to agree stretch targets and meet them.
>
>In fact, when one thinks about it, the effect of such taxes would be >similar to emissions trading. A benefit would result from exceeding an >emissions target; and under-performance would incur a cost.
>I know there will be objections raised about the complexity of such a >system, and the level of bureaucracy required to police it. The same is >said about Emissions Trading. I think it's time to dispel this >misconception.
>The need to establish targets, monitor their achievement and police their >enforcement does not arise from the choice of economic instrument, but >from >the commitment made at Kyoto to achieve a certain level of emissions >reductions. Whether this is done through taxes, emissions trading, >voluntary agreements or regulations, is immaterial to the obligation >facing >governments to put in place transparent and auditable mechanisms to >demonstrate they are meeting their commitments. We must keep score.
>
>If governments are serious about Kyoto, this requirement is inescapable.
>It >should not be used to discredit one policy option as against another. We >need to choose the mix of policy instruments which will meet our goal most >effectively and cheaply. The targets are pre-determined, but there >doesn't >need to be a pre-determined cost as well.
>
>But of course, this is when we are drawn back to the true intention behind
>'green' taxes. Lord Marshall's working assumption was that any revenues >from an energy tax "should be recycled to business so that though >businesses' incentives would change, the impact of any new instrument >would >be fiscally neutral." But even if this assumption is acceptable to >Government, it raises a lot of questions.
>For instance, it has often been suggested that the introduction of an >industrial energy tax should be compensated for by a reduction in >Employers' National Insurance Contributions, in order to achieve revenue >neutrality and encourage employment. "Employment is good, energy is bad" >is the trite way of presenting the choice.

>
>The problem is that such an approach would introduce a fiscal bias against >investment and capital intensive industries. Firms which employ large >numbers of people and, because of the nature of their industry, record >very >low emissions would enjoy the benefit of the tax reduction without ever >having faced a higher energy tax bill in the first place. On the other >hand, energy intensive industries with inevitably higher emissions but >fewer employees would face a much higher tax bill through the energy tax >with no matching reductions in National Insurance contributions.
>So for example, you could have the ludicrous situation of supermarkets as >large employers and low energy users gaining revenue without necessarily >having done anything to increase energy efficiency, while the Chemicals >industry could be penalised even if its emissions have been significantly >reduced.
>Given that many of the UK's most successful and competitive companies are >capital intensive - the Chemicals Industry is a prime example - a further >disadvantage of this approach is that it would impose the highest penalties >on some of the United Kingdom's best-performing companies. These are not >large employers, but they provide a significant number of high value-adding >jobs. This is not the direction in which we should be heading.
>
>This is why the introduction of an energy tax on business is a complex and >delicate matter. Introduced with the best intentions, it could fail to >achieve any reduction in greenhouse gas emissions, and simply end up by >undermining the competitiveness of many British businesses and companies.
>On the other hand, if properly directed at rewarding key behaviours, the >energy tax mechanism could be an indispensable part of any government's >armoury to meet its Kyoto commitments. We have to keep remembering the >goal - which is not, I hope, to raise tax revenues but to reduce >greenhouse gas emissions.
>
>As one further example, consider the role of fiscal incentives for the >development of renewable energy supplies. I'm not talking here about price >subsidies, but by using fiscal incentives as one mechanism for helping to >create a market which is material in scale. A change in rules governing >VAT and in capital depreciation would, for example, help convert solar >power in the UK from a substitution to a desirable product.
>And while on this subject, I cannot avoid referring to the nonsense of >subsidising or protecting emission producing fuels at the expense of others >which are more environmentally friendly. An approach which protects coal >and disadvantages gas raises questions over the environmental credibility >of any energy policy.

>I am conscious that what I have said today runs the risk of satisfying >nobody. Those environmentalists who hoped to hear me offer an unqualified >acceptance of business energy taxes will have been disappointed. Equally, >some of my industrial colleagues may feel I have gone too far in conceding
>the role which industrial energy taxes could play.
>But the truth is there is no simple answer. I said at the beginning of my >remarks, and I repeat, that there is no single policy initiative which >will >achieve our objectives.
>
>I agree with Lord Marshall when he says that "voluntary approaches alone >are unlikely to deliver results on the required scale." If I were >responsible for government policy in achieving our Kyoto targets, that >would be my position too.
>But I also believe that, in many areas, there are policy initiatives which >are potentially more effective than taxes, and which deserve to be >considered as alternatives. Emissions Trading is an obvious example.
>
>I also believe that too much emphasis has been placed on business energy >taxes as instruments of penalty, and not nearly enough on their capacity >to >reward voluntary effort and enterprising behaviour. People who understand >business success know that positive motivation is by far the best way to >set and meet targets!
>
>I say this because, fundamentally, I believe it is through the ingenuity
>of >individuals and through advances in technology that our anxieties over >climate change will finally be assuaged. I promised not to talk about BP >Amoco, but if there's one thing we've learnt from our own internal trading >system it is that individuals achieve far more than expected once suitable >incentives are in place, and once their own accomplishments are recognised >personally.
>
>And talk of individuals is a final reminder that this is not a challenge >facing business alone. I have been content to talk about an "Energy Tax >on >business" without questioning the qualification suggested by the inclusion >of these last two words.
>
>But if the tax route is to be pursued, it is very difficult to see how it >will not eventually impinge upon the consumer. And however much industry >puts its own house in order, these efforts will be of little avail if >consumer behaviour is not fundamentally changed as well. The political >dilemma is that it may well be amongst individual consumers where energy >taxes have their greatest role to play - provided alternatives exist, and >provided rates are high enough to make an impact.
>
>So, it is a question of "horses for courses".
>
>For large, capital intensive industries, I am convinced that emissions >trading offers the greatest potential for achieving emission reductions at >least cost and minimum competitive disadvantage.

>
>But for smaller companies whose energy use is low and where emission levels
>receive a low priority, properly designed taxes could have a very useful >role to play in providing incentives to reduce energy costs and emissions.
>
>Very few - if any - people enjoy paying taxes, and businesses are no >exception. On the other hand, most of us accept that taxes are necessary >and are sometimes even desirable ways of ensuring that society's social >goals are achieved. Energy has no inalienable right to escape taxation.
>But there is no point in choosing an expensive instrument for reducing >energy emissions, when cheaper alternatives exist.
>Obviously, if the Government is determined to increase its revenue from >taxation, energy use is likely to be a target. But in which case, let us >be honest about the motivation and stop pretending that all this is because >of concerns over Climate Change. If, on the other hand, our objective is >really to reduce emissions - with precision, and at least cost - then tax >will have a role, but by no means the only role. And it ought to be the >last, not the first, resort.
>

TEXT: SAVING SOCIAL SECURITY NOW AND
MEETING AMERICA,S CHALLENGES
FOR THE 21st CENTURY

In His State of the Union Address, President Clinton Will Put Forward His Framework To Save Social Security Now, While Meeting America,s Challenges for the 21st Century. The President and Vice President,s framework strengthens Social Security by:

Transferring 62 percent of the projected budget surpluses over the next 15 years -- more than $2.7 trillion -- to the Social Security system.

Investing a portion of the transferred surpluses in the private sector to achieve higher returns for Social Security -- just as any state or local government, or private pension does -- after working with Congress to devise a mechanism to ensure that the investments are made independently and without political interference. We will support using a broad-based neutral approach managed by the private sector with minimum administrative costs.

Keeping Social Security solvent until 2055.

Calling for a bipartisan effort to make the hard-headed but sensible and achievable choices needed to save Social Security until at least 2075. As part of this effort, President Clinton and Vice President Gore believe that we must:

Reduce poverty among elderly women -- particularly widows, who have a poverty rate nearly twice the overall poverty rate for older Americans.

Eliminate the confusing and out-dated earnings test so that we stop discouraging work and earnings among older Americans.

After Social Security Reform Is Secured -- Consistent With the President,s "Save Social Security First" Commitment -- the President Proposes To:

Strengthen Medicare for the 21st Century. The President,s framework will reserve 15 percent of the projected surpluses for Medicare, ensuring the Medicare Trust Fund is secure for 20 years. The President believes that these new resources should be used to help achieve broader, bipartisan reforms -- which should include a prescription drug benefit.

Create New Universal Savings Accounts -- USA Accounts. The President's framework will reserve 11 percent of the projected surpluses to create new Universal Savings Accounts (USAs) so all working Americans can build wealth to meet their retirement needs. To help Americans save and to strengthen our current pension system, the government will provide an equal dollar contribution for most Americans. In addition, the government will match a portion of each additional dollar an individual puts voluntarily into his/her USA account -- with larger matches going to lower-income workers.

Prepare America for the Challenges of the Future. The President's framework will reserve 11 percent of the projected surpluses for military readiness and pressing national domestic priorities, such as education and research.

SAVE SOCIAL SECURITY NOW: STRENGTHENING SOCIAL SECURITY FOR THE 21st CENTURY

In His State of the Union Address, President Clinton Will Put Forward A Framework To Strengthen Social Security Now. Since its creation more than 60 years ago, Social Security has been a bedrock of retirement security for Americans. There are 76 million baby boomers looking ahead to retirement. By 2030, there will be twice as many elderly as there are today, putting pressure on the Social Security system. After 2032, if we do nothing, the Trust Fund will be exhausted and Social Security will have only enough resources to cover 72 cents per dollar of promised benefits. President Clinton and Vice President Gore believe we must act now to tackle this tough, long-term challenge. That is why they are proposing to:

Use the Budget Surplus To Save Social Security Now

"Saving Social Security First." Last year, in his State of the Union Address, President Clinton promised to save the budget surplus until we knew how much would be needed to save Social Security for the 21st century. This year, in his State of the Union Address, President Clinton reiterated his pledge to save Social Security first -- committing to reserve the budget surplus until Social Security reform is secured.

62 Percent of the Projected Budget Surpluses Will Be Used to Save Social Security. President Clinton proposes to transfer 62 percent of the projected budget surpluses over the next 15 years -- more than $2.7 trillion -- to Social Security.

Invest A Portion of the Surpluses To Achieve Higher Returns for Social Security

Invest Portion of Surpluses To Achieve Higher Returns, Working With Congress to Devise A Mechanism to Ensure Independent and Non-Political Investments. We want to work with Members of Congress from both sides of the aisle to craft a bipartisan Social Security plan which invests a portion of the surplus transferred to Social Security to achieve higher returns, and includes a mechanism to ensure that investments are made independently and without political interference. We will support using a broad-based neutral approach managed by the private sector with minimum administrative costs.

To achieve higher returns for Social Security, less than one-quarter of the transferred surpluses will be invested in the stock market.

Save Social Security Until 2055 -- And Work Together To Save It Until At Least 2075

President's Framework Keeps Social Security Solvent Through 2055. By transferring 62 percent of the projected surpluses for the next 15 years to Social Security and investing a portion of them in the market -- just like any private or state or local government pension does -- we will ensure that Social Security is on sound footing for 55 years -- until 2055.

Must Work Together -- Across Party Lines -- To Make Hard-Headed, But Sensible and Achievable Choices To Save Social Security for 75 Years. President Clinton's goal is to save Social Security for 75 years. To do so, he believes we must work together in a bipartisan way to make the hard-headed, but sensible and achievable choices to save Social Security through at least 2075.

Publicly Held Debt Will Fall To Lowest As Share of GDP Since 1917

Turning Around America's Fiscal Position. Under Presidents Reagan and Bush, the debt held by the public quadrupled, rising from $785 billion in 1981 to $3.2 trillion in 1993. As a share of the economy, the publicly held debt increased from 26 percent in 1981 to 50 percent in 1993. Since President Clinton took office, the publicly held debt as a share of GDP has dropped to about 45 percent.

Debt-to-GDP Ratio Will Fall to Lowest Level Since 1917. Under the President's framework, current projections suggest that the publicly held debt, as a share of GDP, will fall from about 45 percent today to less than 10 percent in 2014 -- its lowest level since 1917.

Reduce Poverty Among Elderly Women -- Particularly Widows

Poverty Rates Among Elderly Women -- Particularly Widows -- Remain High. The poverty rate for all elderly women was 13.1 percent in 1997. For widowed women, poverty rates are especially high: the poverty rate is 18.0 percent for widowed women -- nearly four times the poverty rate of married women (4.6 percent) and much higher than the poverty rate of widowed men (11.4 percent).

President's Framework Would Lower Poverty Rates Among Elderly Women -- Especially Widows. Currently, widow benefits vary from 50 to 67 percent of benefits for a married couple when both members were alive. The official poverty thresholds imply that a widow needs over 75 percent of a couple's income to maintain her pre-widowhood consumption. This is a key reason why widow poverty is so much higher than overall elderly poverty. The President is committed to reducing the loss of Social Security income at widowhood.

Eliminate the Out-Dated and Confusing Earnings Test

President Clinton Believes We Should Eliminate The Earnings Test. President Clinton believes that the earnings test has outlived its use. Today, it primarily serves to confuse people, and to discourage them from working. We want to work with Members of Congress to eliminate the earnings test as part of a comprehensive package to strengthen Social Security for the 21st century.

Earnings Test Should Be Eliminated Because It Is Out-Dated And Confusing -- And It Discourages Work and Earnings Among the Elderly. The Social Security earnings test is a confusing relic of a past era. It discourages the elderly from working. It is administratively complicated; administering the earnings test imposes significant administrative burden on the Social Security Administration. Finally, eliminating the earnings limit would have almost no effect on the long-run actuarial balance of the Social Security system.

MEETING AMERICA,S CHALLENGES FOR THE 21st CENTURY

After Social Security Reform Is Secured -- Consistent With the President,s "Save Social Security First" Commitment -- The President Proposes To Meet The Following Three Challenges:

STRENGTHENING MEDICARE FOR THE 21st CENTURY

RESERVE 15 PERCENT OF THE PROJECTED SURPLUSES FOR MEDICARE, EXTENDING THE LIFE OF THE MEDICARE TRUST FUND UNTIL 2020.

We Must Prepare for the Health Care Challenges of the Next Century. In its 30-year history, Medicare has contributed to longer lives and better lives for America,s elderly and disabled. However, Medicare -- like Social Security -- will be impacted by the tidal wave of the "Senior Boom." Its enrollment is expected to double by 2030. In addition, Medicare -- as well as the private sector -- faces escalating health care costs. As a result, the Medicare Trust Fund is expected to run out in 2008, if no actions are taken.

Reserving Nearly One in Six Dollars of Surplus to Help Keep Medicare Safe Until 2020. The President,s framework would reserve 15 percent of the projected surpluses -- $650-$700 billion -- over the next 15 years for the Medicare Trust Fund. These funds would be prohibited from being used for any other purpose, ensuring that the money will go to help the health care needs of older and disabled Americans. Even in the absence of broader reforms, the President,s framework would guarantee that Medicare can continue to provide its critical health services until 2020 -- doubling the life of the Medicare Trust Fund and providing the strongest outlook in the last 25 years.

New Funds Should Be Used To Help Achieve Broader, Bipartisan Reform. The

President believes that the Medicare Commission and Congress should utilize these new dedicated dollars as part of broader, bipartisan reforms. Such reforms, including the development of a long-overdue prescription drug benefit, are essential to provide efficient health care to the elderly and people with disabilities in the 21st century.

UNIVERSAL SAVINGS ACCOUNTS (USAs)

RESERVE 11 PERCENT OF THE PROJECTED SURPLUSES TO CREATE NEW UNIVERSAL SAVINGS ACCOUNTS (USAs) SO EVERY WORKING AMERICAN CAN BUILD WEALTH AND A NEST EGG TO MEET THEIR RETIREMENT NEEDS.

USA Accounts Will Help Americans Build Wealth for Their Retirement -- Strengthening Personal Savings and Pensions. To help supplement Social Security, the President proposes to create USA accounts to help strengthen two legs of retirement security: personal savings and pensions. Under the President's framework, we will reserve 11 percent of the projected surpluses over the next 15 years -- averaging about $33 billion per year -- to create Universal Savings Accounts (USAs), so that every working American can build wealth and a nest egg for retirement.

We Want to Work With Congress And Experts To Determine Precisely How USA Accounts Will Be Structured So That They Are Progressive And Help Working Americans Save for Retirement. President Clinton believes the government should provide most Americans with a flat contribution. In addition, the government will match a portion of each dollar an individual puts into the account -- with larger percentage matches going to lower-income workers. However, we want to work with Members of Congress and pension and personal savings experts, to ensure that USA accounts build on the current private-sector pension system, are progressive, and help working Americans save for their futures. Therefore, the exact size of the contributions, match rates, and income limits will be determined later.

MILITARY READINESS AND OTHER CRITICAL INVESTMENTS IN AMERICA'S FUTURE

RESERVE 11 PERCENT OF THE PROJECTED SURPLUSES FOR MILITARY READINESS AND PRESSING NATIONAL DOMESTIC PRIORITIES, SUCH AS EDUCATION AND RESEARCH.

Ensuring That America's Military Continues to be Ready for the Challenges of the 21st Century. Early in January, President Clinton proposed a bold, new strategy to ensure that America's military continues to be fully prepared to protect our national interests as the world's most powerful fighting force. President Clinton believes this approach will provide the resources to meet his proposed detailed blueprint for military readiness.

Ensuring We Meet Other Critical Investments In America's Future. In addition to military readiness, the setting aside of 11 percent of the projected surpluses -- nearly $500 billion -- will allow America to meet its other critical investment needs, such as education and research.
