THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release January 21, 1999

PRESS BRIEFING BY JOE LOCKHART

The Briefing Room

12:58 P.M. EST

MR. LOCKHART: Okay, I start today with an announcement. We have a new member of the NSC spokesmen team. Mike Hammer, who is a career foreign service officer who just arrived from our embassy in Reykjavik, Iceland.

Q Mike Hammer?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes. Now, for those of you who were looking forward to the Icelandic simultaneous translations, they will start immediately. Mike will be responsible for Latin America and Europe, as well as general duty questions. Did they tell you about the weekends? Oh, we'll tell you later.

He's from here in Washington and is also a distinguished fellow alumni of Georgetown University. So those of you who get tired of me regaling you about Georgetown, you now have more help.

Q Did you go to Georgetown?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes. Helen, I have a degree. (Laughter.) I went to school. (Laughter.) I studied. I've trained to take this position. Next.

Tomorrow's event. Friday morning the President will make remarks at the National Academy of Sciences at 10:00 a.m. in an effort to highlight the administration's efforts to combat the new threats posed to the American people by chemical, biological and cyber terrorism. The President will explain further the new initiatives that he mentioned in the State of the Union address to better prepare for and deter these threats.

The event is open press. Attorney General Reno, Secretary Shalala and our national coordinator for these such things, Richard Clark, will brief here at the White House after the event.

Q If the President is acquitted of the charges in the Senate, will he then stand down from these daily public events?

(Laughter.)

MR. LOCKHART: Sam, if that's the price, we'll pay it.

Q What is the White House reaction to the Justice Department investigation of Holbrooke? Because of that investigation, is there any plan to withdraw his nomination?

Department investigation of Holbrooke? Because of that investigation, is there any plan to withdraw his nomination?

MR. LOCKHART: No. I think there's been an ongoing review at the Justice Department, and I'll leave it to them to discuss. But the President believes that Richard Holbrooke is a gifted diplomat. He has made incredible contributions to our foreign policy team during this administration, particularly most recently in Kosovo and the Balkans where he has great expertise, as well as other parts of the world. I think you can see, as you look around the world, it is important that we have men and women of his caliber on the team, and we look forward to sending forward the nomination once this review is complete.

Q But would it make a difference if the Justice Department concludes that he has, in fact, broken the requirements, the regulations?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I'm not going to speculate on what they might find one way or the other.

Q I'm just saying, would it make a difference?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not going to try to speculate on what they may find. I'll be happy to answer those questions once the review is complete.

Q Do you think the prospects are greater, now, for an abbreviated trial -- or not?

MR. LOCKHART: It's certainly been our hope from the beginning that once we've had a chance to lay out our case, talk about the facts and the evidence in a factual way, rather than in a way that involves assertions and what we've seen as overblown rhetoric, that senators would have a different view of this case. But we're going to have to leave it up to senators to make a decision on how they move forward from here.

Q Do you think the prospects of that are greater now?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think it's impossible to predict from here any prospects for how it will go forward. It's our hope, as we've said all along, that we find an expeditious and fair way to bring this to a conclusion. But I think, as we've seen in the past, there have been times when the process has proved difficult to bring to an end.

Q Joe, clearly the defense raised a lot of questions about the prosecution's case. Does that make it more likely, now, that there will be depositions and witnesses? Isn't there a better case for having depositions at this point?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I don't think so, because I think you have 60,000 pages of testimony and interviews and depositions. People have been deposed and interviewed over 20 times. We're willing to have this discussion based on the record that the Independent Counsel and the House Judiciary Committee -- two groups who, we believe, did not do an adequate job of presenting a fair and unbiased account of these events -- and because we're willing to do that, because we believe that the case that they presented is so weak, we don't believe that there's any need at this point to extend this process.

Q Joe, to follow up on that, this is like -- the past couple of days, the first time that the lawyers have come out and specifically said, well, this is the time frame, this was the phone records, this and that. They are finally disputing the actually facts --

MR. LOCKHART: Let me say this once, and I won't repeat TOP ODD myself on it. This isn't the first time. The lawyers have filed briefs, and I suggest that you go back and read them because they were always there. It's the first time, though, we seem to be having an informed discussion of this case. And that's a good thing, and it's a good thing that the Senate -- that the senators have the ability to listen to this.

Q How does the President feel about the defense thus far? What's his reaction?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, he has -- he's not seen much of it, but he's gotten the various reports. And I think he believes that Mr. Ruff, Mr. Craig and Ms. Mills did a very effective job presenting a defense based on the facts and the law.

Q On that point, there has been much favorable comment about Cheryl Mills' appearance yesterday, but the radio talk show that people listen to in this town, Don Imus, complained bitterly apparently this morning that it was embarrassing and that if she had not been an African American woman that would have been the commentary. Do you have any comment on Mr. Imus --

MR. LOCKHART: Cheryl Mills has been a valuable member of the legal team here for six years. And those who believe that it had something to do with her gender or her race are grossly misinformed.

Q Joe, why wouldn't the President want to watch his defense? You stated --

MR. LOCKHART: The President has a lot of things he likes to do, but he's got a pretty important job. He spends a lot of time concentrating on that.

Q But this is his job at stake. Why wouldn't he --

MR. LOCKHART: Because one of the reasons I think the American public supports him is that he continues to concentrate on his job. We've had a very busy week here -- State of the Union. We've done -- we had a very busy and long day yesterday, as those of you who trudged around after us know. And we've got a busy week and a budget that's in its final stages of preparation.

Q Joe, do you think that the Senate should take into account the 76

-percent approval rating for the next few days of activity in the Senate Chambers?

MR. LOCKHART: I think the Senate is always wise to consider what the public believes. I think the Senate is also wise to consider what the facts are, what the law is and what the Constitution says.

Q This is not a typical trial, this is not a typical jury either, so they are responsive to their constituents. Do you really think --

MR. LOCKHART: I think I've weighed out four elements that the Senate would be wise to consider, and I think from what we've heard -- I haven't heard anyone who isn't finding some way to blend those different and weigh those different areas in trying to come to a decision. I think all of them are legitimate.

Q Joe, there's some talk among Democrats in the Senate of sort of cutting to the chase here and going right to a vote on the articles themselves. What do you guys think of that idea?

MR. LOCKHART: As we've always said, we're looking for a way that's fair and is also expeditious to find a conclusion. We are in the final day of presenting our defense today. There will be two days or so of questions and answers from the senators where they get a chance to question the two sides. And then we'll get to a period where the rules and the process dictate that motions get considered. I'm not in a position now to speculate or to advocate any particular method except for finding a way to bring this to a conclusion.

Q Well, clearly, Joe, there will be a motion to dismiss. Would the White House put that motion forward or would a member of the Senate?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think we're going to continue to put our defense forward. And when we get to the point where motions are appropriate, we'll discuss it then.

Q But it's safe to assume you would support a motion to dismiss, surely.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think it's safe to assume that if 51 senators found it in their hearts to dismiss this case, we would think that was fair and expeditious.

Q Bipartisan.

MR. LOCKHART: Bipartisan, too.

Q You're not pulling back from the comments of John Podesta just a few days ago that the White House will definitely file a motion to dismiss --

MR. LOCKHART: No, in fact, I think that we all have trouble sometimes doing morning television. I think what John was saying was that he expected as part of the process and as part of the rules that there will be a motion. I don't know where that motion will come from. I don't know whether it will come from a senator or from the White House.

Q Does the White House have any part in crafting Senator Kerry's proposal or was that done completely --

MR. LOCKHART: Not that I'm aware of, as evidenced by the fact that I didn't know what it was this morning.

Q Joe, could I change the subject to Kosovo? Could you discuss what's going on and the situation with Ambassador Walker? Is he still there?

MR. LOCKHART: Ambassador Walker is still there. He is still the Director of the KVM and the representative of the -nation OSCE. And he continues to perform his important work there.

Let me add, since it's a few days since I've been here, that we believe, the President believes, that the Serb actions are clearly unacceptable. We're consulting with allies on the next steps. It's important for the stability of the region that the international community insist on Serb compliance, through the use of force if necessary.

We continue to consult closely with our allies. There's a series of meetings -- I think the NAC meets tomorrow, there's a Contact Group meeting tomorrow. And we will continue to send the message that Ambassador Walker needs to stay and continue the important work he's doing; that we need to have access to the area of this atrocity, so that those responsible can be brought to justice; and there needs to be a return to compliance, from President Milosevic and the Serbs, for the agreements they made last fall.

Q Has there been any movement in the right direction in Kosovo? Have you seen anything that gives you reason to be encouraged?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not aware of any encouraging signs.

Q But they're allowing him to stay, apparently.

Q Yeah, there's one.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think what's important here is that we take positive, forward steps towards access and towards bringing those -- identifying and bringing those responsible to justice.

Q But have they executed this order for him to leave?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, he is still there.

Q Joe, both Russia and China reportedly object to the President's plans to go forward at least with the initial funding of the missile defense system. Any reaction to their --

MR. LOCKHART: Well, let me do one thing. I know that there are a lot of people who are interested in that, and there are a lot of people who are interested in going and watching the trial, so -- and since I so mangled that issue this morning, I've asked Bob Bell, the Senior Director at the NSC, to come in once I'm done, and those who are interested can have a hearty discussion with him.

Q Can we go back to Kosovo for a moment? Before, when you were asked about the use of force, you said the ACTORD is still in place. Now you've explicitly said, you know, talked about the use of force. Is this a solely American view, that NATO still has the requisite authority --

MR. LOCKHART: No.

Q -- to use force? Or is that shared by our allies?

MR. LOCKHART: I think if you look at what came out of the NAC meeting from last weekend, I believe it was the timing of it, NATO believes that the ACTORD remains in effect.

Q Joe, after two days of defense presentation, what's your appraisal of where the Democratic caucus in the Senate is right now, and whether you've made any inroads into the Republican caucus? What's your appraisal?

MR. LOCKHART: I think it would be folly for me to try to speculate on where particular members are. I think those who have listened to our case have found it to be comprehensive and compelling, and it has raised serious doubts and poked serious holes in the case that was presented to them just last week by the floor managers. But as far as predicting how that, in particular, has moved various senators, I just can't speculate.

Q Joe, do you expect pretty solid Democratic support when these motions are made on Monday?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm going to leave it for all the senators to vote, and we'll find out then.

Q Have you had a chance since this morning to ask the President about his reaction to Reverend Pat Robertson's declarations that it's all over and we should all go home?

MR. LOCKHART: I have not.

Q What do you think his view is?

Q Have you seen him?

MR. LOCKHART: Have I seen the President? Well, I spent about 16 hours with him yesterday, so I gave him a break from my presence this morning.

Q Well, what do you think his reaction is to Reverend Robertson?

MR. LOCKHART: Listen, I think he has joined the vast majority of Americans who believe that the time has come to put this issue behind us and get on with the country's business. We have policy differences between the Democratic Party and the Republican Party from all sides of the political spectrum. But I think the one thing that the vast majority of Americans agree with is that it's time to get back to the issues that people care about, and it's time to join these debates on Social Security, education, welfare. And I think that's what Reverend Robertson was alluding to in his comments.

Q Joe, do you think that his comments, or do you hope that his comments in some way will give cover, political cover, to Republicans, as the votes start on Monday or Tuesday?

MR. LOCKHART: Now you're asking me to speculate about a group that I don't always understand what drives them. So I think they're a better answer to that.

Q But you've commented in a couple of campaigns here or there.

MR. LOCKHART: You had to remind me of that, didn't you? Now we're going to have to talk about the '80s again, Peter. (Laughter.) No, listen, I'm not going to offer any analysis, and I think the conservative members of the Republican Party can answer that question themselves.

Q Joe, is the President seeing any of these senators? Or is there absolutely a no

-man's land --

MR. LOCKHART: No, he sees -- I think there were several at the event today. He continues to conduct business, whether -- on the State of the Union alone, there were several policy conversations with senators who had particular interests in one issue or another, so we continue to move forward.

Q Alex asked you this morning about the U.S. involvement in the Congo. Do you have an update for us?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes. Yes.

Q Can I add also, the war in Angola is now heating up, the U.N. is pulling out. Can you cover that, perhaps, as well?

MR. LOCKHART: You didn't ask me that this morning. Let me --

Q Save that for the gaggle tomorrow. (Laughter.)

MR. LOCKHART: Let me deal with the Congo. Our special envoy, former House member Howard Wolpe, is in the region now, and he, as well as others in the administration at the State Department and the NSC, are fully engaged in supporting efforts by regional leaders to bring about a cease

-fire and find a way for a regional long

-term peaceful solution. The United States government supports the regional efforts, led by the Zambian
President, to bring a cease

-fire between the two parties.

Q What's his name?

MR. LOCKHART: The Zambian President? Chiluba. We also all note --

Q I apologize. I set that trap on purpose.
(Laughter.) That was beneath me.

MR. LOCKHART: You're not sorry. You're not sorry, Sam. Nobody believes that.

Q No one believes that.

MR. LOCKHART: I suffered from that, but you'll suffer more. (Laughter.) His negatives are going up, I can feel it.
(Laughter.)

One last point. We do believe that President Kabila's recent announcement agreeing to direct talks with the rebels is a step forward. And I'll take your second question.

Q Okay, but what is the goal in terms of the Congo? Do you want to preserve it as a single entity?

MR. LOCKHART: Yes. I mean, we support the integrity of the territory there, and we're trying to work to bring about the first step being a cease

-fire, the second being a long -term

regional and peaceful solution.

Q And does that include support for Kabila?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, we certainly support the territorial integrity of the Congo, and we're going to work with the regional efforts. I mean, as you pointed out this morning, there are multiple countries that have an interest in the dispute, so we're going to continue working with regional organizations.

Q Is this sending messages to the Presidents of Zimbabwe, or maybe Namibia, Uganda, Rwanda, about this issue, saying back off or leave --

MR. LOCKHART: I think we've committed both through people like Gayle Smith here at the White House and Assistant Secretary Susan Rice, and our Special Envoy Howard Wolpe -- our commitment to working through the regional organizations and through the countries to bring about a peaceful solution.

Q Is there some acute or immediate threat to national security and to computers and threat from chemical and biological terrorists that has led the President to announce this --

MR. LOCKHART: No, I think the President has articulated over the last year, but particularly this week, that there is a growing threat to this country of chemical, biological and cyber terrorism and we need to take the steps to prepare ourselves to both again be prepared for and to deter these threats. And I think he will talk in some detail tomorrow about what the government has done. He laid out some of the things in the State of the Union, but he'll certainly talk in much more detail tomorrow.

Q Is he thinking, he and his advisors thinking more of an internal, domestic threat like Oklahoma City, or is this a rogue state type thing?

MR. LOCKHART: I think both issues are one that have taken -- are believed to be issues of concern and need to be addressed.

Q This is the first anniversary, as you know, of the Lewinsky scandal breaking in public, and the first anniversary of the original series of denials that the President made on television and on the radio. Looking back on that time a year ago, how does the President view that first series of denials?

MR. LOCKHART: I have not discussed that with him.

Q Joe, what has the reaction been on the Hill among Democrats to the President's proposal of investing part of the surplus in the Stock Market? And isn't there a certain risk, aren't you putting at risk some of these funds, given the volatility of the market?

MR. LOCKHART: I think the proposal has been generally positive. I think we've heard positive comments from some of the leadership and some of the leadership on the Ways and Means Committee. And I think that the President articulated the need to try to raise the return in Social Security, but I think if you look at the proposal you'll find that the risks are small and these are risks worth taking. I think if you look at the total breakdown of Social Security and the trust fund, that most of the funds, probably 95 percent of them, even with some of these funds in the surplus being invested, would be invested in Treasury bonds and the safest and most guaranteed of government investments. So you're looking at 5 to 6 percent, which would help raise the return, but would really limit the downside risk.

And I think -- the second point is, as part of the proposal, we will work very hard to do this through an independent agency where you have portfolio managers and experts in the field. And secondly, they will work in the context of passive index funds investments that have become very popular. So it will be highly diversified and I think the risk quite low.

Q But Chairman Greenspan doesn't seem to be that positive about it. How do you react to his testimony?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think -- to his testimony, I think the administration is very encouraged by his testimony, particularly his views that it's wise to take the approach the President has put forward to pay down the debt and reserve the surplus for strengthening Social Security and Medicare. I think there were quotes from Republicans in the paper today who were disappointed that he took that approach over the tax cuts that they've presented.

I think the Chairman has raised some concerns in the past, legitimate ones that we take seriously, about putting any money at all into the federal government. But we believe we can do that. We believe, like local and state governments with pension funds, we can do that. And we can do that in a way -- and we can create an independent body, and independent body like the Fed, because I think we all agree the Fed has been enormously useful as a monetary body and it is independent. So I think we believe that we can do that and we'll work hard to make sure we do it.

Q The proposal is still alive and well?

MR. LOCKHART: Absolutely.

Q Joe, have you heard from some critics who say that this is almost like someone taking retirement, going to Las Vegas and just blowing it in Las Vegas?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, that would be an ill

-informed

critic, because I think if you look at the Social Security trust fund, what we do here is we extend it out for 55 years, and if we can get everything done, 75 years. And you're looking at a trust fund, when you add all the numbers up, that -- and if you took the 6 or so percent maximum that could go into the Social Security fund and the stock market went to zero, and it became worthless, you would still have a 94 percent, 95 percent payout available on the Social Security system. If we do nothing -- if we do nothing and we allow -- we don't reinforce the Social Security system, you'll be looking within 20 years or so of a 70

-percent payout. So I think the risks are limited, they're small, and they're worth taking.

Q Joe, do you think you can try to get Greenspan on board with this idea, convince him that you have the right options, and let him keep at arm's length that he always like to keep from --

MR. LOCKHART: It's out hope that our ideas are compelling. I think the most important point here is on the broad policy that the President has put forward -- preserving the surplus to save Social Security and Medicare. Chairman Greenspan has had very positive remarks on it. He has commented on one of the sections of this and expressed a different view. But we believe we can make this workable and it will, in effect, raise returns within Social Security, which will benefit all of us. But I think on the broad policy, Chairman Greenspan has had very good things to say about it.

Q Joe, a lot of the index funds invest in tobacco companies; a lot of them make good returns. How are you going to deal with that issue or other types of issues that are inevitably going to be raised about whether public funds should be supporting companies a lot of people find objectionable?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think -- I'll defer to Secretary Rubin who addressed that question this morning, that these should be kept separate and should be independent, and that we can move forward on a limited basis with an independent entity or board that goes ahead and makes investment judgments; and that the federal government will pursue policy and actions that they think are in the best interests of the country. And the two don't need to collide.

Q Joe, two points on this. What about the arguments that it's better to just let individuals makes the investments themselves? And did you say you would create another entity?

MR. LOCKHART: We talked about creating an independent entity to manage the money that's reserved for investment in equities or other financial instruments.

Sorry, the other question?

Q About just letting individuals --

MR. LOCKHART: Oh, okay. We believe we've taken the best approach here, like state and county pension funds, of managing the money through an independent board. But we also think -- and I'll remind you of another part of the President's proposal with the USA accounts, where we're actually going to reserve some of the surplus so that people can set up an account where the government will match some of the money that goes into it, which is self -directed, which they can invest themselves.

So I think there's a combination here and it clearly -- the President's economic team spent a long time trying to work out what the best combination of elements were to do something that helps people create wealth, helps people save for their retirement and helps people be sure that for their children and their grandchildren down the road these systems that the government handles -- Social Security, Medicare -- will be there for them.

Q Well, where does the money come from to create the entity? Does it come out of the Social Security --

MR. LOCKHART: It comes out of the surplus.

Q Would that entity operate in sort of a blind trust to avoid these problems?

MR. LOCKHART: All of these things we will work out as we move forward with Congress. But certainly it would be an entity that is independent.

Q Joe, yesterday for the first time by my reckoning, the President's lawyers suggested that Monica Lewinsky did not tell the truth to the grand jury, particularly on the issue of the gifts. Is it the defense contention now that Ms. Lewinsky committed perjury before the grand jury, and is she now an unreliable witness in the view of the defense?

MR. LOCKHART: No. I think if you look carefully at what they said, we took some exception with the fact that on the gifts, they highlighted one statement when there were actually 10 statements which offered varying recollections.

Q So her testimony is reliable in the --

MR. LOCKHART: I think as we've said a number of times here, people can have a variety of recollections.

Q Joe, to follow up on an earlier question, what lessons do you think the President and the White House has learned in the year since the Lewinsky story first broke?

MR. LOCKHART: That's an interesting question. Let me think about that one for a while. (Laughter.) I don't even know how to approach that one, so let me think about it and we'll answer it another day.

Q Is it clear to the President, Joe, that -- I mean, in retrospect he should have told the truth at the very beginning and spared the country the last year?

MR. LOCKHART: The President has made very clear over the last several months that his deep regret for misleading the country and certainly that is a view he still holds.

Q How is the President going to pay for these new teachers that he's suggested today? It sounded in his speech like he suggested paying for it out of the surplus. I thought the surplus was being saved from Social Security.

MR. LOCKHART: I don't think so. I think you'll see that -- my understanding is that that is fully paid for in the budget, which will be released in February.

Q Does the President believe that there's a choice between setting aside the roughly two -thirds for Social Security and the broad

-based tax cuts the Republicans are proposing, that the country has to choose between those two options?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think it offers a fundamental choice. and I think the President believes that there's two ways to do this. One is to set aside this money to unburden further generations and to make sure that people can depend on things like Social Security and Medicare and to worry about the future, or there is sort of instant gratification way of just doing an across

-the

-board tax cut.

Q He doesn't believe both are possible.

MR. LOCKHART: I don't think -- certainly not on the scale that some of the Republican leaders have talked about, no.

Q Do you believe that the public doesn't necessarily want a tax cut? The polls seems to indicate that.

MR. LOCKHART: No, I think the public wants us to pursue a policy of fiscal responsibility, fiscal discipline. I think the public understands that when this President took over -- and now with hindsight, we can say in a radical way changed the way our fiscal house is run -- we have gone from an era of deficits to a era of surpluses through making some tough choices. And I think what the public wants is they want that fiscal discipline and fiscal responsibility to continue. They don't want to go back to the old ways of if there's some money or even if you don't have some money, just use it any way that makes sense on any given day.

I think the public understands is that we have an opportunity here, the surplus gives us an opportunity to make choices for the long -term. And the President, I think, has articulated in a very compelling way choices that we can take now that use this surplus to make sure that Social Security, Medicare, private retirement will be there for generations to come in the future.

Q Joe, the President also mentioned new ideas about helping elderly women and helping the elderly also work even if they're on Social Security. Aren't these new spending programs -- doesn't it run contrary to the idea of beefing up Social Security and saving the money?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I think what the President is doing is we're taking a hard and comprehensive look at how Social Security works. There's a lot about Social Security that works for millions of Americans. There are some issues that we believe don't work. We don't think we've done enough with elderly women, because the poverty rate among that group is too high. And we think that the working or earnings test that is now far too complicated and outdated and we think we can get rid of that without a significant cost. So we think as we look at the entire Social Security system, it's important to make sure that in addition to shoring up the solvency of the trust fund, we take whatever steps we need to do to reform the system so it works for people.

Q Do you think we can ever ask him how he feels and what he thinks?

MR. LOCKHART: You saw him last week.

Q She's asking about a new conference that many Presidents have held in the past. (Laughter.)

MR. LOCKHART: Sam, tell me about that ancient custom. (Laughter.)

Q Yes, it was an ancient custom of Presidents who have answered questions and sometimes --

MR. LOCKHART: Way back when we didn't have all these commentators and pundits who are on 24 hours a day. They tell us how he thinks and feels.

Q I have also opposed these cable networks have gotten in the picture, too. (Laughter.)

Q Going back to Scott's question, is it the position of the lawyers that the difference between the President's testimony and Monica Lewinsky's testimony with regard to the sexual matters is a difference of recall and not a he -said,

she

-said type of situation?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not sure I understand the legal distinction. The point you're making, though, is that the two --

Q -- is of recall and not that she perjured herself and that he didn't.

MR. LOCKHART: No, because -- and that is the entire argument about perjury. And I think it is an important legal note that perjury is not based on he -said, she

-said.

Q What he's saying is that your defense has to be one of two ways -- it's either Monica Lewinsky tells the truth and hence there's some recollection problem that she has in terms of when the affair started and the type of sex that she had; or when it comes to those two topics, she's not telling the truth. I mean, you can't have it both ways.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think if you understand the legal foundations of perjury, that is a simplistic version. But let me answer the question, which is the -- I have not heard a single word in this building utter the words that they think that anyone in this case has committed perjury.

Q So her testimony is truthful, their recollections are different.

MR. LOCKHART: I answered that question twice now. I don't need to go a third time.

Q Well, you know, her testimony is pretty graphic. How is it possible to have a different -- such a different recollection about a matter like that?

MR. LOCKHART: I have no idea.

Q To follow up on that, Joe --

Q Maybe Kendall's explaining it now.

MR. LOCKHART: We could all go watch, you'd have a better source.

Q I think you recently said that you couldn't imagine the White House would ever attack Monica Lewinsky's veracity. Do you still stand by that?

MR. LOCKHART: That's right.

Q Joe, what's the President's position on the NIH decision to fund embryo research on using the stem cells?

MR. LOCKHART: I will have to take that question. I know we've spoken about that from time to time, but if there is a new decision, I'm not aware of it.

Q Let me try on another subject briefly. Tomorrow is the 26th anniversary of the Roe v. Wade decision. A number of abortion opponents, thousands of them, are expected tomorrow. Does the President or the White House have any message to them on this day, tomorrow?

MR. LOCKHART: I think the President and the White House respects their point of view and hopes that they will respect the law of the land on this issue.

Q Joe, when does the White House plan to file, or the administration plan to file the lawsuit against the tobacco companies --

MR. LOCKHART: I think the Attorney General is the proper person to put that question to, because this will be done at the Justice Department. And I think she answered that this morning with a noncommittal answer.

Q Joe, can you tell us more about Cheryl Mills and if she's going to be taking a more prominent role in the White House?

MR. LOCKHART: Cheryl has always played a very prominent role in the White House for every one who knows her. She has been a very important member of the President's Counsel's office since the day we began. She's played an enormously productive role on a wide variety of issues, but particularly on some policy issues like affirmative action, some of the legal issues surrounding that and some other issues. And I think the President when informed that she had done a very good job was not surprised at all because he knows her abilities, but was also pleased that now the world knows how smart and effective Cheryl Mills is.

Q Except for Imus.

Q I think the question about Cheryl Mills was, is it a sad commentary that because of her race she is standing out, and because of the issue of civil rights yesterday, that's why she is standing out?

MR. LOCKHART: I think she should stand out because of the effectiveness of the presentation she made. And I think others who dwell on other issues should do some soul

-searching of their own.

Q That was Imus's point, apparently.

MR. LOCKHART: There you go. Imus dominates the briefing room.

Q Has the President heard from Yeltsin at all on this Star Wars --

MR. LOCKHART: For those who want to have a discussion on the national missile defense, Bob Bell, the Senior Director for Nonproliferation.

Q Thank you.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate
Release
January 21, 1999

PRESIDENT CLINTON DECLARES A MAJOR DISASTER EXISTS IN THE STATE OF LOUISIANA

The President today declared a major disaster exists in the State of Louisiana and ordered Federal aid to supplement state and local recovery efforts in the area struck by a severe ice storm on December 22-28, 1998.

The President's action makes Federal funding available to affected local governments in an 18 parish area. The parishes include Bienville, Catahoula, Claiborne, DeSoto, East Carroll, Franklin, Grant, Lincoln, Morehouse, Natchitoches, Ouachita, Red River, Richland, Sabine, Union, Webster, West Carroll, and Winn.

Federal funding is available to eligible local governments on a cost-sharing basis for the repair or replacement of public facilities damaged by the severe ice storm. Federal funding is also available on a cost share basis for hazard mitigation measures.

The Agency said that damage surveys are continuing in other areas, and additional parishes may be added after the assessments are completed.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary
(Norristown, Pennsylvania)

For Immediate Release

January 20, 1999

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT AND THE VICE PRESIDENT
TO THE PEOPLE OF MONTGOMERY COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA

Norristown Area High School
Norristown, Pennsylvania

7:30 P.M. EST

THE VICE PRESIDENT: Thank you. Hello, Montgomery County. (Applause.) Thank you very much for your warm welcome, and it is a warm welcome. (Laughter.) I want to thank the First Lady for her kind comments. and, you know, there is no doubt Pennsylvania loves Hillary Rodham Clinton. (Applause.)

Tipper and I are so proud to be with all of you here today. And we have been so privileged to serve with this President and this First Lady over the last six years and seven and a half hours, because we had the six

-year anniversary of this administration at high noon today. And Tipper and I were reflecting on the way up here about what a wonderful privilege it has been to work hard for ideas that really matter to the American people and for progress that's greatly needed for the American people. And we heard a lot more last night about how we can make still more progress as we prepare our nation for the 21st century.

Did you all hear the President's State of the Union address last night? (Applause.) Was that some great speech? Do you agree with that agenda? Are you willing to fight for it? (Applause.) Let's pass it. (Applause.) Thank you.

You know, you've got some great members of Congress here who are fighting hard to pass this agenda and to bring about the further positive changes that we need, and I do want to compliment Congressman Joe Hoeffel and his wife, Francesca -- they were in our home recently -- and you all have chosen so wisely and well. Their children, Mary and Jake, are here. It's a wonderful family. And Joe Hoeffel is off to a great start on your behalf. (Applause.) I know that you have very high expectations and they're well placed.

I want to also acknowledge two other members of Congress who are here, both of whom do a fantastic job on behalf of the people of this state and the people of this country: Congressman Chaka Fattah and Congressman Bob Brady. Would both of you all stand up, please? (Applause.) And Congressman Brady's wife, Debbie, is here; and Congressman Fattah's son, Chip, is here, and I wanted to acknowledge them.

(Acknowledgements are made.) (Applause.)

I did want to say this. I think that we should also recognize the Vice President of the Student Council, Christopher Blake. (Applause.) It's so easy to overlook that position -- (laughter) -- and, actually, it's an extremely significant position. (Applause.) You and me. (Laughter and applause.)

You know, coming to the Norristown area, I'm reminded of two more of your favorite sons, Tommy Lasorda and Mike Piazza. (Applause.) As many of you know here, Tommy was a great player at Norristown Area High before he got drafted. Mike was a pretty good player too, although he didn't play for the Eagles. But when Tommy Lasorda knew Mike Piazza's family, he was Mike's godfather and he urged the Dodgers to draft Mike as a favor to Piazza's father. So they did -- in the 62nd round. But he never gave up. Mike Piazza worked harder than everyone else on the field, and that is exactly the spirit that I see and hear right here in this group here today, and it's the kind of dedication we need to move this country forward. (Applause.)

Now, ladies and gentlemen, last night President Bill Clinton stood before this nation and reported that the state of our union is strong; and it is. But that's really kind of an understatement, because many of the economic experts are now adding up the figures and consulting the history books and looking back over the decades, indeed centuries, and many of them are now beginning to write. But, actually, our economy right now may be the strongest economy we've ever had in the entire history of the United States of America. (Applause.)

But we've got more work to do still. It is now the longest and strongest economic expansion in peacetime in the history of our nation. As I say, the overall figures are adding up in a very impressive way. But we're also making tremendous progress in solving other problems. We have the lowest crime rate in a quarter century, the smallest welfare rolls in 30 years, the cleanest environment in many decades.

And you know, six years ago it's worth remembering that BOTTOM ODD MORE when the Clinton

-Gore administration started on January 20th six years ago, we had in our nation at that moment by far the biggest, highest budget deficit in the history of the United States. And you know what, we've not only eliminated it, we now have by far the biggest budget surplus in the history of the United States.

That's a turnaround for progress. (Applause.)

Now, we have cut taxes for middle income families, we have brought the crime rate down, we've invested more in key priority areas that will build our country's strength for the 21st century, balanced the budget. The President will talk about his plans for the future and the use of that surplus. We're seeing progress across the board, all these new jobs, lower unemployment rate -- all of the rest -- greater opportunities for all these young people.

This did not happen by accident. It happened because we've had leadership. I listened also to the invocation and that famous line from Scripture, "Where there is no vision that people shall perish." Well, I'll tell you what -- the flip side of that phrase is, where there is a clear, strong, wise vision on the part of a President of the United States of America, our country prospers. Thank you, President Bill Clinton for your vision and for your leadership and for your presidency. (Applause.) We're doing well in America. We're doing well. (Applause.)

And the President knows that this is no time to rest on our laurels, because this wonderful economy is one that not everybody is participating in. You know, in times past we've had some good economic periods and a lot of communities and individuals and families have been left behind. And from the very beginning Bill Clinton has said, we've got to try our best to create the kind of progress that everybody can share in. And so we're redoubling our efforts to do just that.

And because we are, in his phrase at the end of his speech last night, at the mountaintop of this American Century, able to see into the future, it is obvious that we need to use our strength and our economic prosperity in order to do even better and to solve the problems that remain unsolved. And so he is charting for our nation a bold course and offering a bold, new agenda to prepare us for the 21st century.

In presenting the President to you, I just want to mention briefly three areas in which we're going to concentrate attention. First of all, Joe Hoeffel talked about this issue that some call livability or smart growth. And I'm well aware that Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, has been a leader in this field, thanks in significant measure to what you've done over the years, Joe. We appreciate that, you've been a great leader in this area. Others have joined with you. (Applause.)

And in the county that boasts the home of John Audobon, himself, you started one of the largest initiatives ever to preserve open spaces, to maintain parks and greenways and trails and precious farmlands. And we're learning from communities like this one. We don't have to have a future in which the traffic jams get longer and bigger and more unwieldy where parents are explaining to their children on cell telephones why they can't get home to read them a bedtime story; where road rage is on the evening news every night -- people are out there bumper to bumper.

And so the President is proposing the single largest investment in smart growth in the history of the United States of America, to help communities all over our nation save open space, ease that traffic congestion, improve the quality of life and have a cleaner environment. Let's build an America that's not just better off, but also better and brighter for the children and grandchildren that deserve a bright future. That's what this issue is all about. (Applause.)

Now, secondly, you know the environment is very important and we have been doing more to clean up the environment than any other administration ever has, and at the same time building this strong economy. So those goals go together.

And the second issue I would like to talk about from the President's agenda is the need to strengthen families. We live our life primarily in the venue of our families. And families can contribute to the healing that we all need, or they can make situations worse. And so the President, from the very beginning, has talked about and worked for this goal. And the First Lady has been tireless and very eloquent in pursuing this agenda, as well.

I just want to single out one issue that is right at the heart of this agenda for families. And that is the health care patients' bill of rights. What it's all about is this: If there is a crucial medical decision that affects you or a member of your family, that decision ought to be made by a doctor and not by some accountant for a company that's trying to cut corners at the expense of your health -- it's just that simple. (Applause.)

you know, a lot of times doctors are put in a situation where they are not allowed to do what they think is the right thing for their patient, and instead the decision is made by some young bureaucrat on the other end of a telephone line that does not have a license to practice medicine and does not have the right to play God and we need to change that situation. (Applause.)

As a matter of fact, it reminds me a little bit of a joke that I heard the other day about three neighbors who died and went to Heaven and ran into St. Peter. And St. Peter interviewed all of them in succession and asked the first one: "What did you do on Earth?" And she said, "Well, I was a doctor. I cured the sick all my life." And he said, "Well, come on in to Heaven." And he asked the second one, "Well, what did you do?" And he said, "I was a teacher. I taught children all my life." St. Peter said, "Well, come on in to Heaven." And he asked the third one, and the third one is a little sheepish and he said, "Well, I ran an HMO." (Laughter.) And St. Peter said, "Well, come on in, but you can only stay three days." (Laughter.) That's what they've been doing to us, and we need to change it. (Applause.)

A doctor -- a few months ago, a doctor told me a true story about a patient of his who came into the emergency room and went into full cardiac arrest. His heart stopped, he died right on the table. And the doctor used all of his skills and one of those instruments they call a defibrillator and they eventually brought this person back to life, restarted his heart. He sent the bill to the HMO, the HMO refused to pay -- true story -- because they said it was not an emergency. (Laughter.)

Well, now, some of those fighting against this President's agenda may feel that the absence of a heart is not an emergency, but to us it is. And we need a health care patient's bill of rights to put the power and the decision

-making authority in the hands of doctors and medical professionals for the good of families. (Applause.)

Now, finally, the third issue I want to mention from this agenda that we're fighting so hard for is education. If we want to build a stronger nation for the 21st century, we have to understand a couple of facts. Number one, we are in the early stages of an information revolution without any precedent in the whole history of humankind. We're seeing a dramatic change in the nature of work, all professions, all jobs are being changed. Some older jobs are disappearing; a lot of new ones are appearing. A lot of traditional jobs are changing the way people do them.

And so the strategic resource for the 21st century is knowledge, and that means the strategic skill is learning. And that means that, just as in the earlier days of the beginning of the Industrial Revolution, we got together and pooled our resources and worked together to build ports and railroads, and to make sure that factories had the resources they needed, and to make sure that we could make the industrial economy work for us instead of against us -- now, it's obvious in the Information Age we need to get together and make sure that we have the best school system in the entire world right here in the United States of America, because that's how we'll compete in the 21st century. (Applause.)

And so we've been working to get more teachers into the classroom and bring the classroom size down so teachers have more time to spend with individual students. We want to lift up teachers. We honor teachers. We don't want to tear down public schools. We appreciate what teachers do. (Applause.)

And for these young people, under this President's leadership we've tried to open up the access to higher education -- and he'll talk about that. It's an important accomplishment. But there's one other thing that was on the agenda last year that the President said, look, we didn't do it last year, he pleaded with the Congress, do it this time. I want you to listen to this and I'm pretty sure you'll agree, but I want to ask you.

We have a lot of schools in America that are crumbling. There are holes in the ceiling and cracks in the wall and portable classrooms. You've got a lot of investment going on right here. But just 20 minutes away in the North Penn school district there are a lot of portable classrooms. (Applause.) And -- okay. You all will meet on the athletic field later in the year, I'm sure. (Applause.) But here's my point. Nobody should be in inadequate facilities.

You know, when we talk about controlling crime, we listen to the police officers tell us that if a neighborhood's run down and there are broken windows and there's litter all over and graffiti, then the message to would -be criminals is, if you want to commit a crime, this might be just the place. There is an unwritten, but powerful message in the nature and appearance of the community.

Well, the same thing happens in the schoolroom and a school building. If our country allows a school building to be so run down that it's hard for the children to concentrate -- I was in a school where they had to move the desks away from where the ceiling tiles regularly fell down. I was in another school that was so overcrowded, they had to feed the children lunch in shifts, and the first shift, elementary school, started at 9:30 a.m. in the morning, and they just kept on going until the early afternoon.

Well, the message, unwritten but powerful, is, if you're looking for a place to goof off, this might be just your place, because we obviously don't care enough to fix up your school and connect it to the Information Superhighway and make sure that it's prepared for the 21st century.

And so this President has said we've got to take on that challenge. After all, we're all baby boomers. When we first went into the elementary schools in the early 1950s, there were portable classrooms then -- quonset huts left over from World War II. But the World War II veterans got busy and did something about it, and they built a lot of new schools and they passed the G.I. Bill and they hired new teachers and gave them the training that they need. And they stocked the school libraries with the most up

-to

-date books, and they made the biggest investment in education that up until that time had ever been made. And our nation benefitted from those investments in education.

Well, ladies and gentlemen, there was a study that came out last summer that didn't get too much attention from the news media but to me, was very significant. It showed that these young people who are under the age of 18, have now just passed by the baby boom generation and now they are the biggest generation in the history of the United States of America.

Now, the question is this: Are those of us in a position to act today ready, willing and able to take responsibility for facing this challenge the way the World War II veterans did when the baby boomers were coming along into the schools? Our future is in these children and their future is in their classrooms with their teachers in what they learn and in their capacity to learn. And so our President has said, it is time to pass national legislation to make it possible for local school districts to build new schools and modernize the classrooms and create facilities that are worthy of these children, where they can learn and be prepared for the 21st century. (Applause.)

Now, finally, we're doing well and we've got the agenda

we need for the future. This President's outlined a vision and he has the leadership skills to take us on the right road toward that bright future. But there is one question that we have to answer -- the people of the United States of America -- because there is a lot of resistance to this President's agenda. You've seen it and you've heard it. We've been able to prevail on many things, but there are a lot of battles that lie ahead. We need some bipartisan help.

But you know, the response of the people of the United States to this President and his agenda will determine whether or not we will continue moving in the right direction and pass this agenda.

So as I present the President to you I want to ask all of you, including those in the overflow room -- there are almost as many people in the overflow room listening to us on the television screen there as there are here, and we're going to go by afterward and say hello to them personally -- (applause) -- I want to ask all of you to demonstrate to the people of the United States of America that right here in Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, you agree with President Bill Clinton's agenda for the future of the United States of America. You support this President. You want to see him lead our country in the right direction. You want to pass these measures. (Applause.)

Ladies and gentlemen, I present to you President Bill Clinton. (Applause.)

PRESIDENT CLINTON: Thank you very much. First, let me say to all of you that when we came in here tonight I think it's fair to say that Hillary and Al and Tipper and I were literally overwhelmed by this reception. And I knew that this was a wonderful community, I knew this was a wonderful school. I knew there was a lot of enthusiasm, but it didn't all quite add up until I realized that we had caused your exams to be delayed. (Applause.) And I want you to know that we're having such a good time we'd be delighted to come back about this time next term if you want -- (applause) -- we can make this a regular thing. (Laughter and applause.)

I want to thank Dr. Williams for his magnificent invocation. I thank Dr. Woodall for the remarks he made, for making us welcome here and for the example that he and Mr. Spencer, the principal here, all the teachers here, and all the students and teachers from this school and the other schools here represented. I thank you for what you're doing and for the example you're setting for America. (Applause.)

I'd like to thank all of our musicians and the choir for playing and singing for us. I thought they were great. (Applause.) And I want to thank Melissa for speaking so well. Weren't you proud of her? Did she do a great job, or what? (Applause.) I'm glad I never had to run against her for anything. (Laughter.)

I also want to thank all these wonderful people from Pennsylvania who have come here, all the officials and citizens from this area and from Philadelphia and nearby areas. Let me say, there was a lot of talk tonight keying off Reverend Williams' invocation about vision.

I'd like to say something else, if I might, out of respect to others. It is a good thing to have a vision, because otherwise you never know where you're going. So you have to have one. I ran for President, beginning in 1991, because I thought our country was drifting, and because I believed that if you look at these young people here -- one elementary school in this area has kids from 50 countries speaking 13 languages -- and if you look at all these young people and their parents and everybody in this room and you imagine what the world is going to be like -- and you know it's going to get smaller and smaller and we're going to have more and more relationships, and the borders will become more and more open, it's hard to imagine any country in the world that is remotely as well positioned as America, to give people the chance to make the most of their own lives.

But we had to have a vision. My vision for the 21st century was pretty simple. I wanted us to have a country or the children of the Gores and the Clintons and all the other kids in our country where every person who was a responsible citizen would have a genuine opportunity to live out their dreams.

I wanted us to have a country where over all the differences between us we would relish those differences -- our racial, our religious, our cultural differences, our serious differences we would debate seriously -- but we would honor our common humanity and our shared values as Americans enough to say what unites us is so much more important than what divides us; we will build one America in the 21st century. (Applause.)

And I wanted us to continue to be the country, as we grew more diverse and, therefore, had deeper and deeper ties with more and more other people around the world. I wanted America to recognize that because of our wealth and position we have not only the opportunity, but a responsibility to continue to be the world's leading force for peace and freedom and prosperity for others. It is good for ourselves to do the right thing in trying to build the rest of the world and build closer ties. (Applause.)

Now, it is a good thing to have a vision -- you can't get started without it. Otherwise you don't know where you're going. The Vice President talked about Tommy Lasorda and Mike Piazza -- my favorite baseball player of all time, because he was such a wonderful speaker, was Yogi Berra. You know, Yogi Berra said, "We don't know where we're going, but we're making good time." (Laughter.) So you have to have a vision. But you have to have something else, too. You have to have people who are willing to act on it.

I hope you could see with the four of us up here -- we like being together, we've worked closely together. We see ourselves as a family, and we see our allies as a family. (Applause.) When I came to Washington I wanted to do something about homelessness, but Tipper Gore helped me do it. I wanted to raise the consciousness of America about all kinds of things that we sort of kept hidden under the rug, but were hurting people. Mental health was one of the most important. Tipper Gore helped me do it.

I wanted to prove that we could have a smaller government -- we now have the smallest federal government since 1962, but I wanted to do it in a way that wouldn't just throw good federal employees in the street and that would enable us to do more. The Vice President made it possible for us to do that, he led that effort.

I wanted to prove that we could grow the economy and improve the environment by doing things like building new cars that would triple gas mileage. The Vice President has led our efforts there. And in dealing with all the promise of new technology in trying to hook up all our schools and libraries to the Internet, and in managing a big portion of our relations with Russia, South Africa and other countries. I can say without qualification that no Vice President in history has had so much responsibility or done so much good. So the vision requires an action. (Applause.)

And if it hadn't been for Hillary for all the good intentions in the world, we wouldn't have done nearly as much to advance the cause of health care or child care or education or the observe the millennium -- we wouldn't have been able to do it. (Applause.)

When I see Joe Hoeffel standing up here talking -- and I know he's going to be a strong force on the committees that he's gotten. I see another new Congressman out there, my long friend, Bob Brady, from Philadelphia. I know that they will be implementors of a vision. Or Chaka Fattah who got you all worked up, up there, when he stood up. Do you know what he did? He passed a bill in the Congress last year that I was for, but I could not have passed it. I'll tell you the truth, I could not have done it.

But he went around to Republicans and Democrats alike and said, you know, I come from Philadelphia. There are a lot of poor kids there that have never had a real chance. They come from poor families, they live in tough neighborhoods, but they've got good minds. Will you help me pass a bill that will provide the necessary financial support for college students to come in and mentor these kids in middle school so they'll go on to college? And we did it, because of that. (Applause.)

Now, I'll give you one other example. Last time I came here as President was in 1993, to a conference on entitlement reform. Entitlement reform is a fancy way of saying with everybody living longer and the baby boomers about to retire, all the rest of you aren't going to be able to afford to pay our medical and retirement bills unless we do something. That's what entitlement reform means.

And I knew the first thing we had to do was to get the economy going. And I said, you know, I've got this economic plan and it's not going to be very popular with a lot of people because it has a lot of tough decisions. We're asking people who are the wealthiest people in America to pay a little more in income taxes -- sometimes a lot more if they were really well off; we're asking people who are used to getting government programs to do without a few hundred of them until we get this budget in balance. But if we do it, we'll lower interest rates, cutting home mortgages and the interest rates on car payments and credit cards; and we'll get investment back in the country; we'll have jobs coming back in the country.

And the money you will save on the stock market going up and the interest rates going down will be far greater than the money those of us who are well off had to pay in a little more taxes. It was very controversial and people said, oh, it will bring an end to the economy. It will end the American economy as we know it, it will drive us into recession.

Well, you heard what the Vice President said about the country with the longest peacetime expansion in history, the lowest peacetime unemployment since 1957 and all of that. What you should know is that this county -- this county has had since that economic program passed and the interest rates started going down -- 1800 new businesses and 44,000 new jobs, the highest growth in the state of Pennsylvania. (Applause.)

The decisive vote that made all that possible was cast in Congress by Marjorie Margolies

-Mezvinsky. (Applause.) We won by one vote in the House and it was tied in the Senate. The decisive vote in the Senate was cast by Al Gore. (Applause.) And as he says, since he gets to vote whenever there's a tie, whenever he votes, we win. (Laughter.)

Now, the point I'm trying to make is we had a good vision, but somebody has got to carry the water; somebody has to make the decisions; somebody has to push the rocks up the hill; somebody has to take that step and jump off the diving board; someone has to move. People have to act on their vision. That's why I said last night and that's why that sign says, let's get to work. We have a good vision but we must act. (Applause.)

And for all of you, I thank you. I wanted to come here to this school because this school district represents what I think America ought to do. (Applause.) I know not every school district has the resources. So if we want everybody to end social promotion but have summer school and after -school programs, we have to provide the funds to help the school districts do it. If we want to turn around schools that aren't working, we have to provide help from Washington. And we're doing that.

But I want people to see this school district all over America, on the news tonight, in the articles tomorrow. I want people to know we came here to a place that has done important things -- to give kids who need it extra help, to have high standards, to do things that will create a vision that people will want to act on. I think to have a motto like, "learn and live to serve" is a stunning thing and I hope you will live by it all your lives. (Applause.)

Most of you here know this, but for the benefit of the press I want to say this: Every high school graduate in this school district gets a license, driver's license

-sized copy of the diploma, and on the back it has the computer skills the graduate has mastered. That's a driver's license to the future. I would like to see that modeled in other places all across America, as well. (Applause.)

You've already heard what we have to say, but it's plain that America is working again. But every one of you knows -- if we had time to do it, I'd give everybody a piece of paper and I'd ask you to write down -- you might do this when you go home tonight. I'd ask you to write down somewhere between three and six things -- no more than six -- that you believe are the long -term challenges that will face you young people in the 21st century, and what is it that we could do now that would pave the way to a better future for you.

I can tell you that I did my best in the State of the Union last night to say, okay, we've got America working again, but what are the long -term challenges? And you've heard them talked about tonight, and I won't belabor them. But let me say, we have to build strong communities in the 21st century that gives everyone a chance at opportunity. That means we have to do more to have the kind of economic opportunity in places where unemployment is high and people make low wages that you have here. That means putting more money in there, it means teaching adults better skills. It means teaching those who are first -generation Americans to read better, if that what it takes. It means doing whatever is necessary to get these economies going. It means continuing to drive the crime rate down. It means making all communities livable communities, to set aside the land that we need to set aside, to have the green space, to manage the traffic, to do the things that will make people free and happy if they live anywhere in America.

These are the kinds of things we have to do. It means reconciling work and family. One of the best things that the Gores have done is for the last seven years they have had a conference in Tennessee every year on the challenges modern families face. And most all of them relate somehow or other to the need to balance work and family -- a challenge that faces Americans in all income groups.

I'll bet there is not a family here that has not at some point in the last couple of years faced some sort of challenge of balancing your responsibilities to your children to your responsibilities to your work.

That's why we want a child care plan that includes help for stay

-at

-home parents when the children are very young, but real help for working people that can't afford quality child care on their own, because -- (applause) -- in America, when I look at all of you, I want you to be free and confident when you start your families that you can do what you want in your work life, but you know that your first responsibility is to raise your children and you're going to be able to succeed at that responsibility. (Applause.)

The Vice President told you that rather gripping story about HMOs. The truth is, we have to manage the health care system; it's like any other system. We have to keep the costs as low as possible, but the quality of our people's health counts most. That's why we say you ought to be able to see a specialist if you need one. You ought to be able to go to the nearest emergency room. You ought to be able to have your medical records private and all of the other things in our patients' bill of rights, because we've got to balance the need to save money with the fundamental necessity of providing quality health care to all Americans.

And I'd just like to say one other thing. We've said a lot about education tonight, but I would like to say something about the very first subject I talked about last night in the State of the Union, and that is the aging of America. And again I want to say this is an issue that should be of primary importance, not to today's retirees, but to tomorrow's retirees, their children and their grandchildren yet unborn.

Because when the baby boomers retire -- and that includes the parents of just about all of the students here, people between the ages of 34 and 52 were the people born in the generation after World War II, the largest group of people in history, young people, until the present class of students, which numbers over 53 million -- now, when we retire, we're going to double the number of seniors by the year 2030. There will be two people working for every one person drawing Social Security. And what we've got -- and the average life expectancy is already 76 years old plus. For the young people here, it's probably about 83 years. This is a high -class problem; the older you get, the more you'll be glad that that's going up. (Laughter.) This is a high

-class problem. But we do not want to get into a position where our retirement is a financial burden to our children and undermines our children's ability to raise our grandchildren.

So when I tell you that we ought to set aside roughly 75 percent of this surplus we've got for the next 15 years to save Social Security and to save Medicare, and in the process, since we'll be saving the money, we'll be paying down the national debt, giving us the lowest level of debt we've had as a nation since before World War I in 1917; keeping interest rates down, investment high, jobs creation going and incomes rising -- I say that not just for those of us who will be older, but for our kids and our grandkids. And I hope you will see it that way.

This is a big test for us. We haven't had this kind of situation in a long, long time. And very rarely do societies have the luxury of being financially strong enough, militarily secure enough and having enough information about the future to make the kind of decisions that I asked the American people to make last night. Yes, we ought to give some tax cuts, but they ought to be the right kind. They ought to be for child care. They ought to be for helping us to deal with our environmental challenges. They ought to be for people saving for their own retirement, because Social Security will never be enough for that. They ought to be for raising children.

But we can save this money now and lift a burden from the young people here. I want every parent here to look at the young people here and ask yourselves: Do you really want to run the risk of squandering this surplus that we have worked so hard for until we know for sure that our retirement will not compromise the integrity of their lives and their ability to raise their children as we have tried to raise them. (Applause.)

Now, the young people here are going to have a fascinating time. The Internet is already growing by, you know, millions and millions of new pages every week. It's the fastest -growing communication mechanism in human history. People are able to move around as never before, and even if you can't leave town now you've got people from all over the world right next door.

We are learning things that we have never imagined before. We are on the verge of not only unlocking the mysteries of the human gene, but actually finding medical treatments to cure or even prevent things from Alzheimer's to arthritis, to all kinds of cancers. This is a stunning time.

I went to the Auto Show in Detroit the other day, and one thing I'm looking forward to -- I love this job and I'm not looking forward to two years from now being barred from being President by the Constitution's two -term limit -- but one thing I am looking forward to, now that I've been to the Detroit Auto Show is getting back in those cars, because the cars of the future are going to be environmentally sound and hilariously fun to drive, and safer.

This is going to be an interesting time for you to live in. But we have to do our best in this time to, first of all, make it safe, dealing with the challenges of nuclear and chemical and biological weapons, to give you the strongest communities possible, to build one America across our lines of diversity and to think about the future.

When I ran for President in 1992, before I ever made the decision to run, a young man who is now not quite so young, he's a graduate student, named Sean Landris (phonetic) was driving me around Los Angeles. I was an anonymous, virtually anonymous governor of Arkansas. But Sean Landris knew something about me and the speeches I had made and the things I was interested in, and he said, "Are you going to run for President?" And I said, "Well, I haven't decided yet, but I might." He said, "Well, if you do, here's what I think your theme song ought to be."

And he had a little tape deck in his car and he put this tape deck in and this old Fleetwood Mac song, "Don't Stop Thinking About Tomorrow" -- which was made before he was born. (Applause). So we made it our theme song.

And I believe that those of us in positions of responsibility have no higher responsibility than to think about your tomorrows. And when you reach our age, you will want more and more to think about the tomorrows of your children and your grandchildren.

What I tried to say last night is, there's never been a time when we had brighter tomorrows. All we have to do is act on our vision. Let's get to work.

Thank you and God bless you. (Applause.)

Please review the attached summaries to ensure that I have represented your agency positions fairly and correctly, and let me know if there are any changes that you would like me to make to the memos. Further, if there are any issues that you believe I mistakenly failed to include in the memos, let me know as soon as possible. If I do not hear from agencies/individuals, I will assume that you have no comment.

If you have any questions or concerns, as always, please feel free to e-mail me or call me at 456-2809.

Summary of Unresolved Issues From Meeting One Issues Affecting the Tennessee Valley Authority

Issue #2: Wholesale Electric Energy Rate Regulation

Unresolved Issue: Whether FERC should oversee wholesale rates charged by TVA.

TVA Position: FERC should not oversee TVA's wholesale rates for three reasons: 1) FERC already has authority over TVA's transmission, stranded investment, and contract appeals. TVA's remaining power is its market power, and that will be constrained by the anti-trust laws; 2) TVA is mandated by statute to set rates, at the direction of Presidential appointees. There is no need for one set of appointees (FERC) to carry out a duplicative statutory consumer protection mission already performed by another set of appointees (TVA); and, 3) TVA's role is to provide low cost power to the Tennessee Valley. It has no motive to earn a profit. Therefore, the purpose of FERC oversight is unclear, as TVA would have no incentive to set high prices. FERC oversight will, however, concern the financial markets, and perhaps raise the cost of debt for TVA. Such debt has been inexpensive in the past because of TVA's ability to set rates in such a manner that guaranteed that it could recover its costs.

DOE Position: TVA should be overseen by FERC to ensure just and reasonable rates, guard against market power abuses and to prevent cross-subsidization by those inside the fence of sales to those outside the fence. TVA's second concern, about the independence of Presidential appointees, is unwarranted, as they have already agreed to subject themselves to oversight by FERC in numerous other areas. Further, FERC is directed to consider TVA's ability to repay its debt in setting its rates. The bond markets appear more concerned about other factors than who sets TVA's rates. Finally, if FERC determines that TVA has no market power, FERC would not regulate TVA's wholesale rates.

Issue #4: Retail Regulation of Electric Energy Sales

Unresolved Issue #1: The response to customers' efforts to bypass their current distributor through the duplication of facilities.

DOE Position: The ability to bypass a local distribution utility is the subject of state law. As all states other than Tennessee already have a body of utility law (and Tennessee is expected to develop one), this is an issue that should be left to the states. Further, this issue is the same issue that confronts every other utility, so its treatment should be no different for the distributors in the TVA region than for other utilities.

TVA Position: TVA believes that although the issue is the same that confronts all other utilities, that because TVA was the regulator of the distribution utility, the Federal government has a responsibility to address the stranded costs associated with bypass. In other instances where the states are expected to address the issue, they (and not the Federal government) were also the regulator that presumably approved the expenditure (implicitly in a rate case or otherwise) that paid for subsequently stranded investments.

Unresolved Issue #2: Retail Sales of TVA power within the fence.

TVA Position: TVA should be permitted to sell retail power within the fence once it has obtained the consent of the distribution utility in the area that it wants to sell electricity, or if the distribution utility obtains less than half of its power from TVA.

DOE Position: TVA should be permitted to sell retail power within the fence once it has obtained the consent of the distribution utility in the area that it wants to sell electricity. DOE objects to the 50% threshold in the TVA proposal because that could be used to “force” distributors to buy wholesale power from TVA (to increase their purchases above the 50% threshold) in an effort to keep TVA from competing in their market at the retail level.

Issue #5: The TVA Fence

Unresolved Issue #1: TVA will not sell power at the retail level outside its fence.

Treasury Position: This is anticompetitive. Why should distributors capture the economic rents on sales instead of letting TVA compete and offer lower retail rates.

TVA Position: This is part of a regional compromise to allay the concerns of those who would be competing with TVA. TVA’s competitors believe that because of TVA’s (perceived) Federal subsidy it would be unfair for them to have to compete at the retail level.

Unresolved Issue #2: What is the effect of competition on TVA’s financial health.

TVA Position: Having reviewed the restructuring plan and its business plan, TVA feels confident that its financial health will remain strong in the new competitive environment.

OMB/Treasury Position: Would like to see more detail about the effect of restructuring on TVA and to understand more clearly the analysis that led TVA to conclude that it will remain financially secure and succeed in the new environment.

Issue #7: Stranded Cost Recovery

Unresolved Issue #1: Should all stranded costs have to be recovered by October 1, 2007.

TVA Position: The 2007 date is a workable date. All stranded cost recovery plans have to be structured over a specified period of time and this one is workable. If the statute did not have a date certain, FERC would merely have to pick one. This reassures those who will be affected by stranded costs that there will be a deadline after which they will face no additional charges.

OMB Position: TVA needs to demonstrate further that the date is one that will not harm TVA’s financial position, or that of the treasury.

Unresolved Issue #2: How to address bypass. See issue #4 above.

Unresolved Issue #3: TVA's use of stranded cost receipts.

DOE Position: TVA should use the receipts to pay down its debt because the primary purpose for authorizing stranded cost recovery is debt repayment. Use of stranded cost receipts to pay for new generation could provide TVA an unfair competitive advantage. TVA agreed to use stranded cost receipts for debt repayment in the TVA Advisory Committee process.

TVA/Treasury Position: Stranded cost recovery should be used primarily to repay its debt. However, TVA's Board must retain the flexibility to manage TVA's finances from year to year. Therefore, there should not be a dollar-for-dollar requirement to repay the debt with stranded investment recovery but rather a statement of policy and intent to do so.

Issue #8: Market Power

Unresolved Issue: Should TVA be subject to market power provisions of the bill.

TVA Position: No FERC oversight is necessary, as TVA has no market power, and TVA's power will be constrained by the anti-trust laws.

DOE Position: This only matters if TVA develops market power. If it has none, then the provision is irrelevant. If it develops market power, then the oversight will be useful. If TVA is correct in that it will not have power, then FERC will take no action. Accordingly, there is no reason for TVA to object to this provision.

Summary of Unresolved Issues From Meeting Two Issues Affecting the PMAs, Indian Tribes, and Mergers

Bonneville Power Administration

Issue #3: Recovery by BPA of Non-Recoverable Generation Costs

Unresolved Issue: How should BPA recover fish and wildlife and other costs that can't be recovered in generation rates.

DOE/BPA Position: Allow BPA to recover otherwise non-recoverable costs, such as fish or other environmental costs, subject to FERC oversight. Total recovery would be limited to $400 million by 2016, with a $50 million annual cap. Other costs that exceed that limit could be recovered by a surcharge on transmission.

NOAA/DOI/FWS Position: There should be no cap on the amount on non-recoverable costs. Otherwise, Treasury might have to fund the costs that are directly attributable to BPA generation.

Treasury/CEA Position: Why permit BPA to impose a surcharge on transmission, thereby shifting generation costs to the transmission customers?

OMB Position: BPA has a sufficient cushion that it should be able to pay all of its own non-recoverable costs by charging higher than cost and still remain at or below market rates.

Western Area Power Administration and Southwestern Power Administration

Issue: Recovery by WAPA and SWPA of Non-Recoverable Generation Costs

Unresolved Issue: How should WAPA and SWPA recover fish and wildlife and other costs that can't be recovered in generation rates.

DOE Position: None.

DOI Position: As with BPA, SWPA and WAPA should be allowed to recover otherwise non-recoverable environmental costs pursuant to a surcharge on transmission.

Indian Tribe Assistance

Issue #1: Indian Tribe Assistance

Unresolved Issue: Who should oversee grants to Indian tribes.

DOE/DOI Position: DOE should administer grant program in consultation with the Secretary of the Interior.

USDA Position: USDA/RUS should administer the grant program because of their expertise in managing similar programs.

Consumer Protection

Issue #6: Utility Company Mergers

Unresolved Issue: Should FERC have power to review utility company mergers.

DOE Position: FERC should review mergers.

Treasury Position: Why does FERC need to review mergers if FTC and DOJ already have such authority.

Sorry to have caused any difficulty yesterday with that phone call to Dartmouth. Moosilauke project concept was at a critical juncture. The call went well; concept is moving up to next level; I'll spare you the details as you are clearly a busy man, but if successful this will get Dartmouth more involved in climate issues important to us. Thanks.

MEMORANDUM FOR RON KLAIN

CC: KAY CASSTEVENS
LISA BERG

FROM: TODD STERN

SUBJECT: Congressional Outreach Meetings on Climate Change

As the 106th Congress begins, I'd like to return to an idea we discussed a little in the fall -- doing a series of breakfasts/lunches on climate change for groups of Members, 10-12 at a time, with top Administration officials, including the Vice President and Secretary of State. Climate change draws enough vitriol on the Hill that a large number of Members who aren't opponents prefer to keep their heads down and not engage. We need, over time, to broaden the group of Members who are interested in this issue, recognize that there is a basic scientific imperative for action, and understand the logic of our approach. The President has enthusiastically endorsed this idea.

The next year provides the Administration with a window of opportunity to strengthen our congressional base on this issue as we head into 2000.

We hope to start these sessions in January and continue over several months. Each session should include a scientist; we have several who could ably fill the bill such as Jim Baker at NOAA, Neal Lane, or John Holdren from Harvard.

We have identified around 45 Senators and 50 Representatives whom we would like to reach. This group does not include committed opponents of the Kyoto Protocol. The focus is on the large group of Members in the middle who have not taken a position to date. The list is bipartisan and bicameral but weighted toward Democrats and the Senate.

An initial VP breakfast could be held at the VP's Residence, if that were possible, or in the Ceremonial Office.

We'd propose that the first meeting be with a group of bipartisan Senators including 10 to 12 of the following:

Mikulski (MD)
Breaux (LA)

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate

Release

January 21, 1999

PRESIDENT CLINTON DECLARES A MAJOR DISASTER EXISTS IN THE STATE OF MAINE

The President today declared a major disaster exists in the State of Maine and ordered Federal aid to supplement state and local recovery efforts in the area struck by severe storms, heavy rains, high winds, and inland and coastal flooding and erosion on October 8-11, 1998.

The President's action makes Federal funding available to affected local governments in the counties of Cumberland and York. Federal funding is available to eligible local governments on a cost-sharing basis for the repair or replacement of public facilities damaged by the severe storms, heavy rains, high winds, and inland and coastal flooding and erosion.

Federal funding is also available on a cost share basis for hazard mitigation measures.

The Agency said that damage surveys are continuing in other areas, and additional assistance and areas may be added after the assessments are completed.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release
January
22, 1999

FACT SHEET

Keeping America Secure for the 21st Century:
Computer Security and Critical Infrastructure

Today, President Clinton will announce new initiatives to defend the nation!,s computer systems and critical infrastructure from cyber-terrorism. The most critical sectors of our economy -- power-generation, telecommunications, banking, transportation and emergency services -- are potentially vulnerable to disruptions from computer attack.

President Clinton will propose in the Fiscal Year 2000 budget spending billion to defend against this emerging threat. This represents an increase of $400 million from the FY 1999 budget proposal. It will include funding for the following initiatives:

Critical Infrastructure Applied Research Initiative: The President's budget proposal includes $500 million for research and development efforts. A portion of these funds will be spent on new initiatives to improve information assurance by safeguarding networks. Funds will also be dedicated to developing tools that can identify anomalous activities and "Trojan Horses" (malicious codes installed by unauthorized users).

Computer Intrusion Detection Networks: The Defense Department has already begun to install intrusion detection systems and create a network to warn key computers of an attack. Under the President's initiative, a similar system for other Federal agencies will be evaluated and designed. These networks will ensure that when one computer system is attacked, others in the network will be instantly warned of the intrusion, informed of the mode of attack used, and provided with methods to stop it.

Information Sharing and Analysis Centers (ISACs): As part of the public-private partnership, we will support the initial establishment of ISACs to foster private sector development of best practices and standards for computer security, to encourage the sharing of vulnerability analysis, and to provide outreach and training programs. These ISACs will enable the Federal government to provide private industry with threat information without compromising privacy, civil liberties or proprietary data.

Cyber Corps: This program will address the shortage of highly skilled computer science expertise in the government and enable agencies to recruit a cadre of experts to respond to attacks on computer networks. It will use existing personnel flexibilities, scholarship and financial assistance programs, and examine new scholarship programs to retrain, retain and recruit computer science students.

TEXT:

I have several suggestions (and my apologies for not being more engaged in this earlier on):

Total proposed funding - I think it's essential to have a grand sum figure for our proposed climate spending, and be able to say how much of an increase it represents. To do that, we need to decide what programs we can legitimately count toward the total. Clearly, it would include CCTI and USGCRP. In addition, I'd suggest Clean Air Fund and the sectoral programs now listed under CCTI (Climate Wise, Energy Star, etc.) I would not include other co-benefit programs. They could be in an "in addition" category for accounting purposes.

Clean Air Fund - Since this is our biggest (only?) new initiative, I think it should not be relegated to the final "co-benefits" category. I'd even consider putting it ahead of CCTI.

R&D/Tax Credits - From the standpoint of logical presentation, I think it would be best to have just one sectoral breakdown, and within each sector list tax credits, R&D, and non-CCTI (partnership, etc.) programs. I understand there are strong reasons to break the tax credits out separately, which means you have two sectoral breakdowns (tax credits and R&D/other). If that's necessary, I'd flip the two sections so tax credits come before R&D.

R&D/Other - It appears we're including under the CCTI R&D banner programs that are not truly CCTI (for instance, the partnership programs). I think that's a problem. A possible solution is to create a different heading (maybe Promoting Clean, Efficient Energy) to encompass CCTI and those other programs. Your intro paragraphs make clear that what follows is a blend of CCTI and more. Then, within each sector, you first list CCTI programs, then "other" programs. Not particularly elegant, but the alternative is creating an entirely new category for non-CCTI programs.

Length - I think 10 pages tops, and even that's too long. I'm sure no one wants to hear this today, but we should probably have a distilled 2-pager as well.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

January 22, 1999

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
ON KEEPING AMERICA SECURE FOR THE 21ST CENTURY

National Academy of Sciences
Washington, D.C.

10:30 A.M. EST

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you very much. Jamie, Dr. Lederberg, I'd like to thank you for your service in this and so many other ways. I would like to thank Sandy Berger for many things, including indulging my nagging on this subject for the better part of six years now.

I was so relieved that Dr. Lederberg not very long ago -- well, last year -- brought a distinguished panel of experts together to discuss this bioterrorism threat, because I then had experts to cite on my concern and nobody thought I was just reading too many novels late at night. (Laughter.)

Madame Attorney General, Secretary Shalala, Secretary Richardson, Director Witt, Deputy Secretary Hamre, Commandant of the Coast Guard and our other military leaders who are here, Mr. Clarke, ladies and gentlemen. I'm delighted to be here to discuss this subject. With some trepidation, Sandy Berger noted that Dr. Lederberg won a Nobel Prize at 33, and I was governor -- you can infer from that that I was not very good at chemistry and biology. (Laughter.)

But any democracy is imbued with the responsibility of ordinary citizens who do not have extraordinary expertise to meet the challenges of each new age.

And that is what we are all trying to do. Our country has always met the challenges of those who would do us harm. At the heart of our national defense

I have always believed is our attempt to live by our values -- democracy, freedom, equal opportunity. We are working hard to fulfill these values at home. And we are working with nations around the world to advance them, to build a new era of interdependence where nations work together -- not simply for peace and security, but also for better schools and health care, broader prosperity, a cleaner environment and a greater involvement by citizens everywhere in shaping their own future.

In the struggle to defend our people and values and to advance them wherever possible, we confront threats both old and new -- open borders and revolutions in technology have spread the message and the gifts of freedom but have also given new opportunities to freedom's enemies. Scientific advances have opened the possibility of longer, better lives. They have also given the enemies of freedom new opportunities.

Last August, at Andrews Air Force Base, I grieved with the families of the brave Americans who lost their lives at our embassy in Kenya. They were in Africa to promote the values America shares with friends of freedom everywhere -- and for that they were murdered by terrorists. So, too, were men and women in Oklahoma City, at the World Trade Center, Khobar Towers, on Pan Am 103.

The United States has mounted an aggressive response to , terrorism -- tightening security for our diplomats, our troops, our air travelers, improving our ability to track terrorist activity, enhancing cooperation with other countries, strengthening sanctions on nations that support terrorists.

Since 1993, we have tripled funding for FBI anti-terrorist efforts. Our agents and prosecutors, with excellent support from our intelligence agencies, have done extraordinary work in tracking down perpetrators of terrorist acts and bringing them to justice. And as our air strikes against Afghanistan -- or against the terrorist camps in Afghanistan -- last summer showed, we are prepared to use military force against terrorists who harm our citizens.

But
all of you know the fight against terrorism is far from over. And now, terrorists seek new tools of destruction.

Last May, at the Naval Academy commencement, I said terrorist and outlaw states are extending the world's fields of battle, from physical space to cyberspace, from our earth's vast bodies of water to the complex workings of our own human bodies. The enemies of peace realize they cannot defeat us with traditional military means. So they are working on two new forms of assault, which you've heard about today: cyber attacks on our critical computer systems,
and attacks with weapons of mass destruction -- chemical, biological, potentially even nuclear weapons. We must be ready -- ready if our adversaries
try to use computers to disable power grids, banking, communications and transportation networks, police, fire and health services -- or military assets.

More and more, these critical systems are driven by, and linked together with, computers, making them more vulnerable to disruption. Last spring, we saw the enormous impact of a single failed electronic link, when a satellite malfunctioned -- disabled pagers, ATMs, credit card systems and television networks all around the world. And we already are seeing the first wave of deliberate cyber attacks -- hackers break into government and business computers, stealing and destroying information, raiding bank accounts, running up credit card charges, extorting money by threats to unleash computer viruses.

The potential for harm is clear. Earlier this month, an ice storm in this area crippled power systems, plunging whole communities into darkness and disrupting daily lives. We have to be ready for adversaries to launch attacks that could paralyze utilities and services across entire regions. We must be ready if adversaries seek to attack with weapons of mass destruction, as well.
Armed with these weapons, which can be compact and inexpensive, a small band of terrorists could inflict tremendous harm.

Four years ago, though, the world received a wake-up call when a group

unleashed a deadly chemical weapon, nerve gas, in the Tokyo subway. We have to be ready for the possibility that such a group will obtain biological weapons. We have to be ready to detect and address a biological attack promptly, before the disease spreads. If we prepare to defend against these emerging threats we will show terrorists that assaults on America will accomplish nothing but their own downfall.

Let me say first what we have done so far to meet this challenge. We've been working to create and strengthen the agreement to keep nations from acquiring weapons of mass destruction, because this can help keep these weapons away from terrorists, as well. We're working to ensure the effective implementation of the Chemical Weapons Convention; to obtain an accord that will strengthen compliance with the biological weapons convention; to end production of nuclear weapons material. We must ratify the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty to end nuclear tests once and for all.

As I proposed Tuesday in the State of the Union Address, we should substantially increase our efforts to help Russia and other former Soviet nations prevent weapons material and knowledge from falling into the hands of terrorists and outlaw states. In no small measure we should do this by continuing to expand our cooperative work with the thousands of Russian scientists who can be used to advance the causes of world peace and health and well-being, but who if they are not paid, remain a fertile field for the designs of terrorists.

But we cannot rely solely on our efforts to keep weapons from spreading. We have to be ready to act if they do spread. Last year, I obtained from Congress a 39 percent budget increase for chemical and biological weapons preparedness. This is helping to accelerate our ongoing effort to train and equip fire, police and public health personnel all across our country to deal with chemical and biological emergencies. It is helping us to ready armed forces and National Guard units in every region to meet this challenge; and to improve our capacity to detect an outbreak of disease and save lives; to create the first ever civilian stockpile of medicines to treat people exposed to biological and chemical hazards; to increase research and development on new medicines and vaccines to deal with new threats.

Our commitment to give local communities the necessary tools already goes beyond paper and plans. For example, parked just outside this building is a newly designed truck we have provided to the Arlington, Virginia, Fire Department. It can rapidly assist and prevent harm to people exposed to chemical and biological dangers.

But our commitment on the cyber front has been strong, as well. We've created special offices within the FBI and the Commerce Department to protect critical systems against cyber attack. We're building partnerships with the private sector to find and reduce vulnerabilities; to improve warning systems; to rapidly recover if attacks occur. We have an outstanding public servant in Richard Clarke, who is coordinating all these efforts across our government.

Today, I want to announce the new initiatives we will take, to take us to the next level in preparing for these emerging threats. In my budget, I will ask Congress for $10 billion to address terrorism and terrorist-emerging tools. This will include nearly $1.4 billion to protect citizens against chemical and biological terror -- more than double what we spent on such programs only two years ago.

We will speed and broaden our efforts, creating new local emergency medical teams, employing in the field portable detection units the size of a shoe box to rapidly identify hazards; tying regional laboratories together for prompt analysis of biological threats. We will greatly accelerate research and development, centered in the Department of Health and Human Services, for new vaccines, medicines and diagnostic tools.

I should say here that I know everybody in this crowd understands this, but everyone in America must understand this: the government has got to fund this. There is no market for the kinds of things we need to develop; and if we are successful, there never will be a market for them. But we have got to do our best to develop them. These cutting-edge efforts will address not only the threat of weapons of mass destruction, but also the equally serious danger of emerging infectious diseases. So we will benefit even if we are successful in avoiding these attacks.

The budget proposal will also include $1.46 billion to protect critical systems from cyber and other attacks. That's 40 percent more than we were spending two years ago. Among other things, it will help to fund four new initiatives. First, an intensive research effort to detect intruders trying to break into critical computer systems. Second, crime -- excuse me -- detection networks, first for our Defense Department, and later for other key agencies so when one critical computer system is invaded, others will be alerted instantly. And we will urge the private sector to create similar structures.

Third, the creation of information centers in the private sector so that our industries can work together and with government to address cyber threats. Finally, we'll ask for funding to bolster the government's ranks of highly skilled computer experts -- people capable of preventing and responding to computer crises.

To implement this proposal, the Cyber Corps program, we will encourage federal agencies to train and retrain computer specialists, as well as recruiting gifted young people out of college.

In all our battles, we will be aggressive. At the same time I want you to know that we will remain committed to uphold privacy rights and other constitutional protections, as well as the proprietary rights of American businesses. It is essential that we do not undermine liberty in the name of liberty. We can prevail over terrorism by drawing on the very best in our free society -- the skill and courage of our troops, the genius of our scientists and engineers, the strength of our factory workers, the determination and talents of our public servants, the vision of leaders in every vital sector.

I have tried as hard as I can to create the right frame of mind in America for dealing with this. For too long the problem has been that not enough has been done to recognize the threat and deal with it. And we in government, frankly, weren't as well organized as we should have been for too long. I do not want the pendulum to swing the other way now, and for people to believe that every incident they read about in a novel or every incident they see in a thrilling movie is about to happen to them within the next 24 hours.

What we are seeing here, as any military person in the audience can tell you, is nothing more than a repetition of weapons systems that goes back to the beginning of time. An offensive weapons system is developed, and it takes time to develop the defense. And then another offensive weapon is developed that overcomes that defense, and then another defense is built up -- as surely as castles and moats held off people with spears and bows and arrows and riding horses, and the catapult was developed to overcome the castle and the moat.

But because of the speed with which change is occurring in our society -- in computing technology, and particularly in the biological sciences -- we have got to do everything we can to make sure that we close the gap between offense and defense to nothing, if possible. That is the challenge here.

We are doing everything we can, in ways that I can and in ways that I cannot discuss, to try to stop people who would misuse chemical and biological capacity from getting that capacity. This is not a cause for panic -- it is a cause for serious, deliberate, disciplined, long-term concern. And I am absolutely convinced that if we maintain our clear purpose and our strength of will, we will prevail here. And thanks to so many of you in this audience, and your colleagues throughout the United States, and like-minded people throughout the world, we have better than a good chance of success. But we must be deliberate, and we must be aggressive.

Thank you very much. (Applause.)
