THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release February 22, 1999

STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT

I am delighted that the CEO Forum on Education and Technology, a group of leaders from industry and education, has developed a strong set of recommendations to ensure that teachers can effectively use technology in the classroom. If technology is to realize its potential as a powerful new tool to help students achieve high academic standards, teachers must be as comfortable with a computer as they are with a chalkboard.

That is why my $800 million budget for educational technology includes over $100 million to give both new and current teachers the training they need to integrate technology into the curriculum. I look forward to working with the CEO Forum and other leaders in industry and education to give every child and teacher in America access to these high-tech tools for learning.

CLIMATE CHANGE POLICIES

OECD Round Table on Sustainable Development

Washington D.C., 28 February - 1 March 1999

Issues Paper

I. Introduction

1. The OECD Secretariat has recently prepared analytical papers on climate change for some of its subsidiary bodies (Working Party 1 of the Economic Policy Committee, and the Environmental Policy Committee). This Issues Paper draws on these papers to highlight some issues for informal discussion on a personal basis. With the Kyoto Protocol leaving many questions open, OECD work has aimed to: i) quantify the effects of different implementation strategies, drawing on results from a range of models (including the OECD's world General Equilibrium Model, GREEN); and ii) assess progress by countries in implementing mitigation strategies under the Convention. Members of the Round Table are invited to provide guidance on further OECD work, notably for COP5; and to highlight other relevant work on climate change policies.

II. Moving ahead with the design of the mechanisms of the Protocol

2. While the Kyoto Protocol represents an historic step in countries' efforts to limit climate change, many of its provisions need further interpretation before they can be implemented. A timetable for reaching agreement on these elements, agreed at the Fourth Meeting of the Conference of the Parties in Buenos Aires, foresees that remaining issues will be completed by late 2000 (COP6). The nature of the solution to these issues will determine how the Protocol will be implemented.

3. Among the issues on which solutions have not yet been reached are the following:

- Monitoring and verification. Emissions are measured with uncertainty, with the range of uncertainty varying by country, by gas and by source. It is low for CO₂ from fossil fuel combustion, and high for CO₂ from other sources (including sinks) and for non-CO₂ gases.
- Mechanisms for ensuring compliance. While national laws provide an array of enforcement options, international mechanisms to ensure compliance are narrower in scope. Yet, credible sanctions may be required to ensure compliance. The best approach to compliance raises a number of difficult issues for negotiators, including the type of liability regime.
- Buyer or issuer liability. The economic efficiency of trading and the size of the trading market will depend inter alia on whether the liability for non-compliance with national targets lies with the issuer or the buyer of permits. While issuer liability may raise the efficiency of trading, it may require sanctions to penalise non-compliance.

- Entity trading. While not explicitly foreseen by the Protocol, countries may develop domestic trading by allocating quota permits to domestic entities. Given the link between prices on international and domestic markets, this could increase the efficiency of trading (by raising the number of participants, and decentralising decisions), but raises several implementation issues.
4. Members of the Round table may address some of the following questions:
- Which of these elements are likely to prove most important in shaping the success of the agreement? Which issues are likely to prove more divisive among Parties to the Protocol?
 - How can OECD research and analysis best assist countries in making progress in achieving costs-effective solutions to these issues?

III. Economic implications of the Kyoto Agreement

5. One important objective of OECD work has been to compare the economic costs of the Protocol when countries implement their emission targets through domestic action (with a uniform tax) -- referred to as the “no-flexibility” case -- relative to when they make use of the various “flexibility mechanisms”.

6. Costs of reducing CO₂ emissions may be expressed in terms of the price (marginal costs) of carbon required to meet targets. An OECD review from a range of models shows that these marginal costs are likely to be rather high if countries have to meet their target individually, possibly ranging between $150 to $300 per ton of carbon¹, with higher abatement costs in the European Union, Japan and the rest of the OECD region than in the United States (see Annex Table). Carbon taxes of this magnitude may generate substantial increases in energy prices²; falls in energy production and in competitiveness for energy-intensive industries in OECD countries; and large real income falls among oil-exporting countries. Estimates of the impacts on GDP and real incomes in OECD countries mostly fall in the ½ - 1 per cent range, without taking into account any transition costs and assuming that policy adjustment will be gradual and started soon.

7. Relative to these estimates, savings -- in the form of lower costs of implementation -- allowed by the use of “flexibility mechanisms” are typically large. Estimates of the economic effects of so-called “where” flexibility among Annex I countries -- emission trading (ET) and joint implementation (JI) -- suggest a reduction of marginal costs to OECD countries by around one half, with most of this gain reflecting a concentration of abatement efforts in countries where these are less costly. Part of the savings allowed by “where” flexibility would reflect trading in so-called ‘hot air’, e.g. the possibility that some Annex I countries (notably Russia and Ukraine) might meet the Kyoto targets without any action and sell their surplus emission allowance to other countries. While predictions on the size of ‘hot air’ are uncertain, the present economic outlook for countries in the former Soviet Union suggests that this may be substantial³. With reference to other forms of flexibility (“what” and “when”), while it is more difficult to quantify their effects, the potential for savings are also significant.

1. As compared to an international oil price -- in terms of carbon equivalent -- of $150 per ton in 1995.

2. An increase of the average price consumers pay for energy services and transport of around 50 per cent.

3. OECD preliminary scenarios imply an estimate of the phenomenon of ‘hot air’ of over 130 million tonnes of carbon per year (some 14 per cent of the combined Russia and Ukraine annual target for the 2008-12 period).

8. While the unlimited use of these “flexibility” mechanisms would significantly lower the costs of abatement efforts, it also raises concerns which have encouraged some countries to favour limits to trade. In addition to the “political” concern of eliciting more countries to participate to global abatement efforts, other concerns include measurement issues (while not specific to trading, measurement errors in one countries would affect abatement efforts in others); implementation issues; and problems associated to the possibility of monopolistic behaviour on the trading market⁴. Various departures from full “where” flexibility would in general result in divergence between marginal abatement costs among countries, reducing the global benefits accruing from trade. Also, the adoption of unilateral restrictions on the purchase of emission permits by some countries would increase their costs for meeting obligations, to the advantage of other countries who opt for unlimited trading. On the other hand, imposing limits to the trading of “hot air” would be ineffective as the Protocol allows countries to carry over unused permits to future commitment periods.

9. Discussion may address some of the following questions:

- Are there any economic reasons for limiting the extent of trading among Parties to the Protocol?
- Which type of limitation -- if any -- may allow to reconcile the efficiency-benefits of trading with arguments that all countries take some actions at home?
- How can OECD work on these issues be most useful as background for negotiators?

IV. Moving Beyond Kyoto

10. Achieving the Kyoto targets is a first step towards the long-term goals of stabilising GHG concentrations. OECD model simulations extending Kyoto commitments to 2050 suggest that aggregate costs of these commitments would be considerably higher than in the first commitment period⁵; also, that trading among Annex I countries becomes less important in reducing these costs, as the emergence of alternative energy sources (“backstop technologies”) in Annex I countries may narrow the range of abatement costs and the scope for efficiency gains.

11. This extension of the Kyoto targets, moreover, would not be sufficient to achieve the long-term objective of stabilising concentrations of GHG gases over the coming centuries. To stabilise concentration, significant participation by major emitters from the non-Annex I group is necessary. This raises questions on the requirements needed to obtain global participation, and on the effects of different rules for allocating emission allowances on the incentives to participate.

12. Incentives for non-Annex I countries to participate in future agreements may be created by a gradual move towards an egalitarian allocation of emission allowances, based e.g. on equal per capita emissions. Emission trading is crucial for keeping costs down under such an allocation scheme, given the large expected differences in abatement costs across countries. But even under full trading, global costs could be substantial if emissions are to be brought down to levels consistent with stabilisation of atmospheric GHG concentrations. Moreover, an egalitarian allocation of allowances may not be sufficient

4. This is associated to the likelihood that Russia and Ukraine emerge as the dominant suppliers in the market for emission permits, also reflecting ‘hot air’. In this situation, suppliers would have incentives to sell fewer permits at a higher price than under perfect competition.

5. From around 0.5 per cent of annual GDP to around 1 per cent in the case of no emission trading.

to induce participation by all non-Annex I countries, implying that direct transfers may be required to compensate some countries to participate in abatement. However, the incentives required for non-Annex I countries to participate in a global agreement also depend on the benefits they expect to reap both from lower GHG concentrations and from local, ancillary benefits of abatement efforts.

13. Discussion may address some of the following questions:

- Which type of burden sharing may offer the best opportunities for eliciting non-Annex I countries to take up commitment in terms of emissions reductions?
- How should OECD and its affiliates, in co-operation with other institutions, pursue work and enhance the dialogue with non Annex I countries on these issues?

V. Assisting OECD countries in establishing domestic frameworks conducive to cost-effective mitigation?

14. A review of countries experiences in domestic mitigation policies highlights a variety of approaches being pursued, but also some common features. Measures have generally aimed at multiple objectives, rather than climate change alone, and mainly targeted CO₂ emissions from energy⁶. Due to their fragmented nature, these measures have had only limited influence on emission trends; at the same time, the deregulation of energy markets, by lowering energy prices, may have raised energy consumption and CO₂ emissions. In some countries, carbon and energy taxes have delivered promising results despite pervasive exemptions and low tax rates⁷. While environmental taxes share a number of desirable features (easy administration, certainty of the tax base, efficient taxes with the possibility to offset distortive taxes elsewhere), they also raise issues (trade implications, distributive impacts, uncertainty of its environmental outcomes) that in practice have limited their use.

15. While there is no single formula, a cost-effective domestic mitigation strategy across sectors may include a number of features. First, global reforms aimed at phasing out harmful subsidies and other measures leading to higher emissions of greenhouse gases (“foundation policies”). Second, coherent sectoral strategies (for example, policies to curb emissions from transport through changes in behaviour and technology). Third, the use of policy instruments to take into account the externalities of greenhouse gases (“full cost pricing”). While calling for greater use of economic instruments, this will need to be complemented by integrated packages of interventions to overcome market imperfections (e.g. information barriers, access to capital) and to increase research and institutional capacity. Finally, the assessment of the costs of domestic interventions should consider all ancillary benefits from reducing GHG emissions (such as improving human health, protecting natural resources, raising energy and environmental security).

16. Members of the Round Table may address some of the following questions:

- What role might green taxes play in domestic mitigation strategies?

6. Domestic measures have included subsidy reforms in agriculture and energy, voluntary agreements in transport and industry, improvements in vehicle efficiency, fiscal incentives and CO₂ taxes.

7. Five OECD countries have carbon and or energy taxes to deal with climate change. According to some national studies, these may have reduced CO₂ emissions by 9 per cent in Sweden; and by 3 to 4 per cent for households in Norway.

28 December, 2015

- How can OECD countries co-operate in advancing domestic strategies and demonstrate leadership? Is slow progress on the domestic front hampering the extension of participation to a larger number of countries?
- Are OECD governments considering the wide range of ancillary benefits in the design of their domestic strategies?
- Can “best practices” for domestic mitigation in OECD countries be established? In which other areas, can international co-operation enhance the scope and pace of domestic action?

VI. Adapting to Climate Change

17. Stabilising concentrations of greenhouse gases will call for a major effort from the international community. Further, most projections imply that even if concentration levels stabilise relatively early, climate change will continue for some time. This raises questions as to the likely nature of the impact of climate change in the various parts of the world, and of the strategy for adapting to these changes. Answers to these questions are essential if estimates of the economic costs of abatement efforts are to be compared to the benefits accruing from avoiding (or minimising) climate change.

18. Consensus views on the regional impacts of these changes, based on assumptions of a doubling of CO₂ concentrations by the second half of next century (with projected increases in a range of 1.5 to 4°C in temperature, and in 0.2 to 1 meter in sea-level) point to a variety of effects, and different risks for the various regions and sectors in terms of seasonal temperature changes, precipitation patterns, agricultural productivity, change in land patterns, vulnerability to coastal flooding, soil erosion, population movements and human health.

19. Experience in some OECD countries in adapting to sea-level rise point to a variety of strategies being pursued, ranging from full protection of existing activities, followed by abrupt adaptation at a later stage; a planned retreat of existing activity; and one where abandonment and modifications are planned in advance. Choices among these alternative strategies are a function, inter alia, of sector- and area-specific characteristics, asset lives, and information of the meteorological effects of climate change. The challenge of adapting to climate change is likely to be especially pressing for non-OECD countries.

20. Discussion may address some of the following questions:

- What is the balance between policy-interventions and market forces in handling adaptation strategies? In which areas, are changes in policy settings and instruments most needed?
- Should countries develop models with a higher degree of geographical resolutions to derive more detailed impact assessments?

THE OECD REPORT TO MINISTERS ON SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT IN 2001. A PRELIMINARY OUTLINE

1. The three year horizontal project should lead to three types of documents:
 - a Policy Report to Ministers, to be prepared by an ad-hoc drafting team beginning its work in the second half of 2000 (maximum length of 50 pages). It will draw, in a flexible way, on other documents (see below). This is the key document for the Ministerial;
 - an Analytical Report to Ministers, with inputs prepared by directorates (maximum length 300 pages). All elements of this analytical report should be available at least in advance draft form by end-2000. A preliminary Table of Contents of this Analytical Report is given below;
 - a series of self-contained Background Reports. As an example: a Report on Climate Change Policies is planned for release at COP5. Other background Reports could be prepared as documentation for conferences and proceedings. Other examples: the December 1999 Conference in Rome on Indicators, and the June 1999 Ministerial Meeting of Committee on Science and Technology Policy could lead to publications on, respectively, Measurement and Technology and Sustainable Development.

A tentative outline of the Analytical Report

A. Policy Framework for Sustainable Development

1. Key Dimensions of Sustainable Development
2. Measurement (Indicators)
3. Institutions and Decision Making
4. Getting Prices Right
5. Technology and Sustainable Development
6. An Overview of Policies to Enhance Sustainable Development in Member Countries

B. The Sustainable Management of Natural Resources

7. Natural Resources

C. Addressing Climate Change

8. Climate Change Policies

D. Sectoral Policies

9. Energy
10. Transport
11. Agriculture

E. Globalisation and Sustainable Development

12. Trade, Investment and Sustainable Development
13. Strategies for Enhancing Sustainable Development in Developing and non-member countries

TEXT:
THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release
February 22, 1999

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

I welcome the successful meeting over the weekend between Indian Prime Minister Vajpayee and Pakistani Prime Minister Sharif. I commend the two prime ministers for demonstrating courage and leadership by coming together and addressing difficult issues that have long divided their countries.

The two leaders committed to intensifying their efforts on key matters, including: containing their competition in nuclear arms; preventing nuclear or conventional conflict between them; resolving territorial disputes including Jammu and Kashmir; refraining from interference in each other's internal affairs; fighting terrorism; promoting political freedom and human rights; and working together to improve the lives of their citizens through economic growth.

South Asia -- and, indeed, the entire world -- will benefit if India and Pakistan promptly turn these commitments into concrete progress. We will continue our own efforts to work with India and Pakistan to promote progress in the region.

VICE PRESIDENT GORE NAMES ALVIN BROWN EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE COMMUNITY EMPOWERMENT BOARD

Current Interim Director Julian Potter Named CEB Chief of Staff

Washington, DC -- Vice President Gore announced today that he has named Alvin Brown as Executive Director of the Community Empowerment Board.

"I am pleased that Alvin Brown -- who has already been hard at work on our team to revitalize America,s cities and distressed rural communities -- will be the new Executive Director of the Community Empowerment Board," the Vice President said. Brown currently serves as the Director of the Special Actions Office within the Office of the Secretary at the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

"I also want to thank the Congress for its continued bipartisan support of our Administration,s Empowerment Zones and Enterprise Communities (EZ/EC) Initiative -- an effort to tap the untapped potential of America,s urban and rural areas by connecting the areas that need it most to new opportunity," he added.

In his current position, Mr. Brown leads efforts to get the public and private sector to work as a team to support economic development and bring capital to distressed communities. He has built strong relationships with members of Congress in both parties, state and local elected officials, and a variety of organizations to garner their support for economic development programs. He has also served as HUD's representative on the President's Community Empowerment Board.

Gore also named Julian Potter, current Interim Executive Director of the Community Empowerment Board, the Board's new Chief of Staff.

"As the Interim Executive Director of the Community Empowerment Board, Julian worked hard to insure that the Clinton/Gore Administration,s vision for revitalizing America,s distressed urban and rural areas became a reality -- by promoting new private investments in these communities and by building partnerships among all levels of government, private businesses, community groups, and community members." Vice President Gore said. "As the Board's new Chief of Staff, I know she will continue to provide strong leadership to ensure the Second Round of Empowerment Zones are as successful as the first."

Earlier this year, in January, the Administration announced a Second Round of 20 Empowerment Zones who are eligible to share in $3.8 billion in proposed federal grants and tax-exempt bonding authority to finance sweeping revitalization and job creation programs over the next 10 years. A bipartisan Congressional majority authorized first year funding for the new Zones in October. This Second Round of Empowerment Zones builds on the experience of the program's First Round, that included eleven Zones awarded in December 1994. The First Round has resulted in more than $8 billion in private-sector investment to the designated communities and unprecedented public-private partnerships.

The President's Community Empowerment Board was created in September 1993, to assist distressed urban and rural communities in their revitalization efforts. It is chaired by the Vice President and includes the heads of twenty-six Federal agencies. The Board oversees the development of the Administration's overall community empowerment efforts, focusing particular attention on the Empowerment Zone and Enterprise Community Initiative.

TEXT:
THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release February
22, 1999

PRESIDENT CLINTON NAMES THOMAS R. REEDY AS A MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE WOODROW WILSON INTERNATIONAL CENTER FOR SCHOLARS

The President today announced his intent to appoint Thomas R. Reedy to serve as a Member of the Board of Trustees of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars.

Mr. Reedy, of Hinsdale, Illinois, is senior executive vice president and director of capital markets of EVEREN Securities, Inc., one of the nation's ten largest full-service securities brokerage firms. He oversees the firm's investment banking activities, including its equity, taxable, and municipal securities businesses. Mr. Reedy also serves on the board of directors and operating committee of EVEREN Securities.

In 1988, Mr. Reedy joined Blunt Ellis & Loewi, a predecessor of EVEREN Securities, as a senior vice president responsible for the investment banking and research areas of the firm's fixed-income department. He began his brokerage career in New York as a member of Paine Webber's public finance department. He later joined Drexel Burnham Lambert in New York as vice president of structured finance. In 1987, Mr. Reedy joined the Chicago office of E.F. Hutton & Company as a first vice president and regional manager of its midwest investment banking department.

Mr. Reedy serves on the board of directors for Working In The Schools (WITS), a Chicago-based not-for-profit organization that promotes the learning development of children in urban public elementary schools through volunteer tutoring and mentoring programs. EVEREN Securities became the founding corporate partner of WITS in 1994 and works with the organization to encourage corporate volunteerism. Today approximately 25 Chicago-area companies have joined WITS and allow their employees to serve as volunteer tutors during the business day. He is also a member of the University of Michigan Graduate School of Business Corporate Advisory Board. Mr. Reedy received a bachelor's degree from Illinois State University and an M.B.A. degree from the University of Michigan, and is a Certified Public Accountant.

The Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars is established within the Smithsonian Institution and is administered by an independent Board of Trustees. The Center fosters scholarship and dialogue in the humanities and social sciences by bringing Fellows to Washington, encouraging discourse, and publishing the results of their activities.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

February 23, 1999

PRESS BRIEFING BY
CHRIS JENNINGS, DEPUTY ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT
FOR HEALTH CARE POLICY

The Briefing Room

1:12 P.M. EST

MS. WEISS: Ladies and gentlemen, today Chris Jennings will brief you on what the President will be announcing in the next hour. The President will launch a national outreach campaign called "Insure Kids Now," which is aimed to enroll eligible, but uninsured children in Medicaid by promoting awareness and increasing enrollment in the Children's Health Insurance program, also known as CHIPS.

Chris Jennings is the Deputy Assistant to the President for Health care Policy.

MR. JENNINGS: Today we're very excited; on the heels of the NGA meeting over this weekend, we have been working with them very, very closely, as well as a whole bunch of corporate entities, in developing a major new outreach campaign for eligible children who are eligible for either -- millions of eligible children, over 5 million children in this country are eligible and not enrolled in either the Medicaid program or the new CHIP program the President signed into law in 1997.

It builds on a whole host of other initiatives that the President and the First Lady and the Vice President have been involved in the last year. I'm going to just briefly talk about that, and then I'm going to talk about what we're doing today.

After the enactment of the historic $24 billion CHIP program, the President and the First Lady and the Vice President held a series of events, working with the governors and over 11 agencies in the federal government, to develop ways to use our resources to target these children and make them aware of this information about the new children's programs, as well as to help enroll them more effectively.

One of the big challenges in targeting and enrolling children is not just making sure they're aware of the program, but also simplifying applications procedures, actually going to where those children are, whether it be in the school, whether it be in public housing, whether it be in churches and other places, and what we've done last year was to work with all our federal agencies -- not just HHS, which has done a remarkably good job this year for us, but also agencies you wouldn't necessarily think automatically -- Agriculture, Labor, HUD, Justice -- all of the 11 agencies have been participating very, very actively.

And what we've done is laid the groundwork for being able to enroll the children very, very effectively. But really, what we need to do now is to not just make sure we have the on-the-ground support and the infrastructure and the enrollment forms, but we have to make sure kids are actually aware of the programs and have a place to go to get information about these programs.

So what we've been doing with NGA, working very closely and working with Bell Atlantic, is developing an 800 toll-free number. And the toll-free number is now up and running, as of today. I just called it about two minutes ago and they answered, and they have information. The number is: 1-877-KID-SNOW. And that number translates into 1-877-543-7669.

Now, what we're doing today is announcing the availability of that toll-free number, and what's most interesting about this, this is the first time we've ever done this nationally. Anyone who calls that number, wherever they are in the country will be automatically forwarded to an operator and an information worker within the state they're calling. So if I call from the State of Washington or Utah or whatever, I'll go the national number, but I'll be routed back to the state, where someone will know information about this program, which is really very, very important.

But now that we have this national campaign, and national toll-free number up and running today, we can actually utilize our resources, working with the networks, working with a whole bunch of corporate entities, to advertise this number.

And I want to give you a couple of examples about this, because we're really thrilled about this. First, NBC is going to be -- they have made a commitment to air a public service announcement beginning February 24th, using NBC stars from well-known shows. ABC has made a similar commitment as well -- we're quite pleased about that, Sam -- as well as a whole host of other people, including Turner Broadcasting, Univision, the National Association of Broadcasters, Univision and others.

Getting the information out is critically important for -- and particularly about how to access it, through the toll-free number -- is something very, very important. But also, we need to do this, not just in terms of national networks, but we have to do targeted -- both networks and targeted radio. And we have gotten commitments for radio ads in 45 states -- Bonneville Communications and others are going to be doing a whole host of radio announcements as well -- as has a whole host of print media establishments, too.

But, not just getting the information there, because -- well, everyone watches TV, everyone hears the radio, but we also know where parents go. They go to grocery stores, they go to K-K-Mart, they go to McDonald's. And what we're really thrilled about today is to announce that a whole host of these corporate entities are making commitments to educate even their own shoppers and their consumers with access to information about the program, and even about the toll-free number.

K-Mart, McDonald's, General Motors -- General Motors is going to affix a label to all their child safety seats that they sell, so when you're putting in your children you're going to see your toll-free number, how you can access -- Safeway, Rouse Grocery Store, others are going to be putting this in all their paperbags and everything. So people are going to know this number, if we can find any way at all to do it.

But we've also found that, obviously, the other places where people and their parents try to seek health care is with their providers, whether it be their doctors, their nurses, their dentist -- the American Dentist Hygienist Association is going to put the toll-free number on all their toothbrushes that they send out. We're going to have AMA, the Nurses Association, the American College Emergency Physicians are all going to be providing information directly to their patients who come in.

And we're also thrilled about a whole host of community-based organizations -- United Way, Volunteers of America, Points of Light, America's Promise, others are really making a significant commitment in this area to get the word out as well.

The real point of all this activity -- and I could go on and on and on -- we have a real major commitment from the religious organizations as well. From Amy we can give you a host of -- a nine-page list of commitments from around the country, and I think the most important thing is that we get out the message -- is that children who are uninsured now have access to a free or low-cost option, that there is no excuse that we don't all work together to get this information out, and we must do a better job of target enrolling it. We're very happy that we have the governors on board. We think they've done some creative things and we're going to be committing today to do some more over the next several months and weeks and months to come, and

I'd be happy to answer any questions specifically about this initiative.

Q CHIPS was created two years ago. Why has it taken so long to deal with the enrollment problem? Because, presumably, is millions of kids is still out there.

MR. JENNINGS: Actually, it's true. CHIP was enacted into law -- it was the end of 1997. What we're actually quite thrilled about is less than a year after enacting it, we have over 45 states who are now up and running, and they're projecting, I think it's about 2.5 million kids that they will eventually get to. But again, the programs are just up and running.

The most important thing is, you start the programs; now that they're up and running, now that we're doing these easier administrative application and enrollment forms, we're getting the information out about how to access them, really, I've got to tell you, when you're trying to enroll children into these programs, it's a lot of hard work. You've got to go to where they are, you have to go to places that you otherwise might have not immediately thought. You can't just say I have a program, you have to go out and find them and find their parents.

This program that we're doing today actually we think will go a long way to ensure CHIP is successful, but so is the promise of the Medicaid program as well.

Q I don't know what you're talking about. What is CHIP?

MR. JENNINGS: CHIP is the Children's Health Insurance Program. CHIP --

Q State by state?

MR. JENNINGS: Yes, in 1997 in the balanced budget program, the President advocated for and the Congress passed an historic $24-billion Children's Health Insurance Program, short for CHIP. And it is a state-administered program. We provide for flexibility, but --

Q Where does the money come from?

MR. JENNINGS: The money comes specifically from the Balanced Budget Agreement. We had savings from the balanced budget that we achieved that we redirected towards providing subsidies to states so they could provide for children to make health care affordable, and in many cases free.

Q So this is for poorer families? In other words, there is an eligibility requirement?

MR. JENNINGS: There is an eligibility requirement. Actually, there is a lot of flexibility. Many states are -- all the way up to over 200 percent of poverty, some go up to 200 percent of poverty. All these kids, almost probably 95 percent-plus are children of working families -- families who are workers, but who cannot afford or do not have access to health care. And this program was designed to target that population.

As you know, we have the Medicaid program that we've had some success in covering children. We have not done as good a job as we should in terms of enrolling all of the eligible kids even for the Medicaid program. The advantage of this activity that we're announcing today is, it will benefit both the Medicaid program and the CHIP program together.

Q Chris, what are some of the leading reasons after all this publicity that kids are not enrolled? Is it just ignorance in the existence of these programs?

MR. JENNINGS: Historically, lower income programs, you don't have as significant enrollment as you want to have, but what we've learned over the years past is you can significantly improve your enrollment if you can go to the places where the children are, where the populations are, and you can do it in a way that is a non-threatening way. That is in other words, you don't have a 100-page application form you have to fill out, you have a five-page form. You automatically are eligible.

They almost immediately enroll you if you come in and you come close to fulfilling eligibility. In many states, they have what they call "presumptive eligibility," so they can say, okay, you look like you're enrolled, so I'm going to enroll you automatically. And what we've found in many, many states who are using these type of programs, and others, they are having much greater success. But, you have to do the hard work of educating and informing, and publicize this over and over and over again. And you have to use the foundations, the churches, the providers, the schools. You can't just do this about a big public campaign. You have to use the private entities.

And what we're most pleased about is, we're really being joined today by a lot of the corporate community, to educate people about this program, where children go every day.

Q Can you point to any pattern of health problems among children who are not enrolled in this? Is there any --

MR. JENNINGS: Absolutely. I mean, what we have learned, of course, is if you don't have access to health care, you frequently don't have access to the preventive-type coverage that you really need to avoid the illnesses and diseases over a period of time. And we have some really good data on that, we'd be happy to supply to you.

But the lack of uninsured means, also, lack of even performance in schools, a lack of ability to go day in and day out to increase your education capability, increase your economic standing, which again, of course, is a huge correlation between economic standing and health care as well.

Q How old, and how many children are we talking about in this particular --

MR. JENNINGS: Well, in a CHIP program, we believe that there's about -- well, first of all there's probably, or almost 4 million children who are eligible but still not enrolled in the Medicaid program. In CHIP, we think it's, you know, it's over 2 million probably. We're talking about a number of -- certainly in aggregate, over 5 million kids who are eligible and not enrolled in either Medicaid or CHIP. And those are the numbers that we're using right now.

And if we can just -- if we can be very effective at targeting and enrolling these kids, we can, with programs currently available, get millions of kids coverage that they really desperately need.

Q And that is compared to how many that are in? Enrolled?

MR. JENNINGS: And that's -- well, in the Medicaid program for children I think we have about 20 million children today. In CHIP, we have just started the program; we're probably around a million or so, and hoping to increase that number over a period of time.

Q This is on a different subject. Tomorrow the Medicare Commission is meeting, and there's been some concern about what kind of guidance the President or the White House has been giving their four appointees, and also some concern that they're kind of moving on bloc and haven't been given the latitude to split up in their different ways over -- plan. What can you tell us about what kind of guidance the President has given his appointees in the Medicare Commission and where is that commission going?

MR. JENNINGS: First, our hope, of course, is that the Medicare Commission integrates the President's proposal that he announced in the State of the Union, dedicating 15 percent of the surplus to the Medicare program. Every one of our commission members and appointees believes strongly, as does every independent analyst out there, that you can't significantly extend the life of the trust fund without an infusion of dollars. And it almost doesn't make sense to proceed and say that you're going to have really significant reforms without those infusion of dollars.

Having said that, I'll tell you -- I don't know if you've been watching our commission members -- I don't think people would say that Bruce Vladeck and Stuart and Laura Tyson are always in the same exact place. They're not acting or behaving like they are in a bloc vote here at all.

The President did lay out some principles, one of which was dedicating the surplus. The other was a defined benefit; the other was a viable prescription drug benefit; and for low-income protections for beneficiaries. Those are just very basic principles that I think he and his members believe in, but I think most Democrats do believe in. And I think we've been encouraged that some Republicans are.

I guess I would just say that, in general, we're not going to comment on individual iterations of the commission until they complete their work. They have not completed the work, they don't have the details done. We have worked with Senator Breaux for months; we're trying to provide technical assistance and we will continue to do so. And as you know, we respect him greatly and we hope that we can get something very, very positive out of this commission.

Q Senat

or Breaux was actually trying to get some time with the President this week to talk about the commission. Has he gotten any and is there any time on the schedule for that?

MR. JENNINGS: I'll tell you what, I don't know if he's talked to the President yet. I don't believe he has, but Senator Breaux has never had a difficulty in contacting the President and they have a very close working relationship and I assume they'll be talking soon -- not just this week, but into the future as we talk about the developments around the Medicare Commission.

Q But if the appeal is for -- if Senator Breaux makes an appeal to the President, have one of your members vote for this so that we can get the 11 votes, the super majority that we need, what's the answer?

MR. JENNINGS: Our members -- first of all, our members, our commission members feel very strongly about some core principles. They feel very, very strongly about defined benefit, they feel very strongly about the issue of a viable prescription drug benefit that's available for all Medicare beneficiaries, and they also all agree very strongly that you should dedicate the surplus to the Medicare program.

Those are things that they, independently, they've been saying this for two months. Now, if the commission moves to address all of those things, I think that they'll see much more openness by our members of working on this issue. But we're just not there just yet. We're hopeful that we will get there. But we're not going to say to one commission member against their desires to vote for something that they don't believe in, but we also think that Senator Breaux really values the input that our people have given to this commission, and our hope is, over a period of time that that will strengthen the work of the commission.

So I'm not going to get into this political "I'll give you this and that." I really believe that this whole policy, this whole issue of the Medicare program is too important to say it's all about political positioning. It really is about having a strong product emerging from the Medicare Commission that we can all be happy with on a bipartisan basis and that does significantly move to extending the trust fund, but also strengthening and improving the program as we know it today.

Q Senator Lott said today that he does not believe -- he believes that if you can't get the 11 votes, you will not get Medicare reform in this Congress. Do you agree with that, or no?

MR. JENNINGS: I think you definitely want to have a strong vote out of the commission and have a bipartisan one. I think that there was not a uniform agreement out of the Social Security recommendation of the commission, and our hope has been and continues to be, as we've seen in recent weeks, that there is growing momentum to have an agreement on Social Security. So despite the fact that the Social Security Commission had a uniform agreement, some of the base ideas that were formed and given to us provide a solid foundation for us to move forward.

The Medicare Commission, we think, with the majority or without a majority, at least has the potential to do so. Obviously, our preference would be if everyone voted for -- if it was all 17 members, it would mean that you would have a very, very -- have a much greater chance. But I wouldn't say that having 11 or 10 or whatever is necessarily dispositive to whether or not it has a significant influence on whether or not we have strong Medicare reform emerging from this Congress.

Q Will the President embrace this thing and will he put as much attention into Medicare as he has into Social Security so far? What kind of priority is this?

MR. JENNINGS: Sure. One thing that people didn't recognize about the President, even during the whole year of Social Security, it was the President who continually said over and over again, he said Social Security and Medicare. It was never Social Security independent of Medicare. He feels they're really joined at the hip, and he feels quite strongly that with his foundation of dedicating the surplus to the Medicare program and some of the reforms he would like to see of the program, modernizing the program, making it more competitive, making it more oriented towards being able to use the same purchasing tools for the fee-for-service program that private sector now has, we can significantly strengthen and improve the Medicare program, and he hopes that as part of an overall agreement on Social Security, we can get an overall agreement on Medicare.

THE PRESS: Thank you.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

February 23, 1999

PRESIDENT CLINTON NAMES GEORGE T. FRAMPTON, JR. AS MEMBER OF THE COUNCIL ON ENVIRONMENTAL QUALITY

The President today announced the nomination of George T. Frampton, Jr.,
as
Member of the Council on Environmental Quality (CEQ). The President will designate him as Chair upon confirmation.

George T. Frampton, Jr., of the District of Columbia, worked as a private attorney and environmental consultant from 1997 to 1998. Prior to this, from 1993 to 1997, Mr. Frampton was Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Fish and Wildlife and Parks. In this position, he was responsible for the National Park
Service and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. From 1986 to 1993, Mr.

Frampton served as President of The Wilderness Society, a non-profit organization devoted to preserving wilderness and wildlife. From 1976 to 1985, he was a partner in the law firm of Rogovin, Stern & Huge of Washington, D.C.

Also during this period, from 1979 to 1980, he was Deputy Director and Chief of Staff for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's Investigation into the Three Mile Island Nuclear Accident. Mr. Frampton served as Assistant Special Prosecutor, Watergate Special Prosecution Force, from 1973 to 1975. Mr. Frampton was a Fellow at the Center for Law and Social Policy from 1972 to 1973. Mr. Frampton clerked for the Honorable Harry A. Blackmun, United States

Supreme Court, during the Court's 1971 to 1972 session.

Mr. Frampton received his B.A. in Physics and Philosophy, cum laude from Yale College, his M.S., with distinction, from the London School of Economics, and his J.D., magna cum laude from Harvard Law School.

The Council on Environmental Quality, a part of the Executive Office of the President, was established by Congress in 1969 to develop and recommend to the President national policies to improve environmental quality; and to oversee programs and activities of the Federal Government in its implementation of the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA).

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release February 23, 1999

PRESS BRIEFING BY JOE LOCKHART

The Briefing Room

1:32 P.M. EST

MR. LOCKHART: Am I plugged? Hey, was that Sonny and Cher movie on ABC last night? Was that your network?

Q Which one?

MR. LOCKHART: It was very good. (Laughter.) Sonny and Cher.

Q I was watching the news. I'm sorry.

MR. LOCKHART: Okay. I wasn't.

Q You have to be "blanking" me -- that show?

MR. LOCKHART: That show. Just kidding, I didn't watch it.

Q We appreciate Mr. Jennings pointing out a moment ago that NBC and ABC and Turner had all decided to participate in the CHIPS program. I didn't hear anything --

MR. LOCKHART: Well, in that case, in that case, Bill, you've got the first question. (Laughter.) Do you have an announcement to make, about joining the PSA campaign?

Q Not at this time.

Q I have a question.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, then I will do one quick announcement, and then we'll take questions. On Friday of this week, the President will give a speech on foreign policy. I haven't seen a draft of it yet, but once I do, I'll -- hopefully on Thursday -- be able to give you a better sense of it.

Q What time?

MR. LOCKHART: Do you know what time?

MR. LEAVY: It's 10:15 a.m. local time.

MR. LOCKHART: That's probably 1:15 Eastern Time, 10:15 a.m. -- I believe it's at the Commonwealth Club?

Q Any specific subject? Kosovo or --

MR. LOCKHART: I think a broad address on areas, issues involving American foreign policy. But we'll get you some more on that as the week goes on. But I wanted to --

Q Can you give us a sense of what happened at Rambouillet? I mean, we saw the news conference that Mr. Cook and others conducted.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think some very important steps forward were taken in the peace process that's going on there. On the Kosovar Albanian side, I think if you take a step back, and look at where the Kosovar Albanians as a group started some weeks ago, they arrived in France with most of the international people not even knowing who was coming on their team. And they came together as a group and made a decision as a group. And they made the decision that they believe they can sign on to this peace agreement, subject to a two -week period where they go home and consult with their people. But we believe that, as they consult with their people, the Kosovar Albanians will believe that this agreement is in their interest, and we will take a step forward.

On the Serbian side, there was in very specific detail a recognition of the need to restore autonomy to Kosovo. There were some final steps that were not taken, but we have locked in some very important gains, and we expect when they get back together, they will continue to do the important work they still need to do.

Q But nothing the President of the United States or the Secretary of State could say could convince the Kosovar Albanians to move ahead with this without a promise of a referendum, thus thoroughly --

MR. LOCKHART: I don't think that's the case. If you look at what they've done, they have agreed to move

Q That wasn't what we started out wanting them to do.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, let's talk about what we have. They've agreed to move forward with this process, subject to going back and spending two weeks, consulting back at home.

Q Who are they consulting? Why don't they make --

MR. LOCKHART: They're going back to consult with the various groups that they represent, the various constituencies that they represent, the other groups within the Kosovar Albanian community.

Q What does "move forward" mean? Are you telling us that the Kosovar delegation has agreed to a proposition that does not contain referendum directly --

Q Autonomy?

Q -- subject to a discussion back home -- is that what you're telling us? What does the document say?

MR. LOCKHART: My understanding is -- well, I will leave you to the experts over there who have talked at length, but my understanding is there are certainly agreements in there on the logistics and modalities of autonomy, what that means, very specific. As far --

Q The word referendum they were insisting on.

MR. LOCKHART: Right, and my understanding of the document -- correct me -- there is not a binding referendum piece to this agreement.

Q But that's what they said they wanted.

MR. LOCKHART: Well, there are a lot of people that say they want things, and as part of a negotiation you move forward with what's in your best interest.

Q Joe, it's very hard to understand how this can be presented as progress when the United States had laid down an ultimatum for bombing if this was not agreed to. And yet you're talking about a two -week that is progress. How so? We didn't get what we were after.

MR. LOCKHART: What we're after is peace and stability in that region. And we think that what they have agreed to today takes a step in the right direction. They still have important and difficult work ahead of them, but we think if you look at the progress within the Kosovar Albanians as a negotiating group, it's significant. It is our hope that they will come back in two weeks, having consulted, ready to sign on to this document which will put significant pressure on the Serbian side, and it's our hope that in the ensuing weeks the Serbian side will understand the pressure they face.

Q So the hope is that they will come back and agree to a document that does not specifically contain this referendum? That they would come back and say, all right, we will sign on to that.

MR. LOCKHART: It is our hope that they will sign on to the agreement as presented to them.

Q Joe, what happens to the peacekeeping force in the interim? Do they stand by for the next two weeks?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not aware of any change in their status.

Q How worried are you that this is just going to fall apart? I mean, behind the scenes officials are saying they don't think this is going to hold together for two weeks. They don't know if the international coalition will hold together for two weeks, so it's hard to -- isn't hard to be as optimistic --

MR. LOCKHART: The very fact that they're there negotiating should give you some indication of how important this is. But we believe that what they've done is to take a significant step forward. And we, in the two weeks, have urged both sides during this period, the consultation period, to exercise restraint. I think the ACTORD that the NATO Secretary General has is still at his disposal if the Serbs make the mistake of trying to take advantage of this time. And it's important that we give this process the time it needs, and that when they return they can do the serious work that still needs to be done.

Q So if the Kosovars come back and agree, you're aware that the President thought he was when he talked with President Chirac last Friday, and that is, then the question was, would the Serbian side agree to the peacekeeping force. So if the Kosovars come back and agree, you're still -- am I correct -- the Serbians then still haven't agreed --

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think if they come back, that will train significant pressure on the Serbian side to reach an agreement that involves a post

-implementation force led by NATO. And we will be in that situation some weeks down the road.

Q If they don't, they'll get bombed? If they don't, the Serbians then will get bombed?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, certainly that threat remains real, if they are unwilling to take the steps they need to restore autonomy to Kosovo.

Q Doesn't the U.S. look a little silly since it wasn't able to work its will here, despite enormous effort?

MR. LOCKHART: I think that you -- to score this as some sort of game is done at your own risk. I think the U.S. has shown a commitment to the people of -- the Kosovar Albanians, to the regional stability that we've worked so hard to maintain. And this is not easy work -- it's hard work. And you have a lot of dedicated diplomats and negotiators who have worked very hard at this, and they have locked in very important progress, and they have set up a process whereby they can move forward to take the important last steps towards getting a political settlement.

Q Joe, what happens when, let's say, the Kosovar Albanians come back, sign the agreement? What happens at that point? Do you just turn to the Serbs and say, sign it immediately or the threat for bombing goes into effect?

MR. LOCKHART: I think from a sequencing point of view, the Kosovar Albanians have asked for two weeks to consult. As far as when this group will get back together again, they've assigned March 15th as a date when they get back together. So I expect we will know something more about the consultation process in two weeks and then the groups will resume these talks about three weeks from now.

Q So your intent would be to give the Serbs a brief period to decide whether or not they accept the peace agreement as it stands at that point and then go back to the deadline?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm not going to get into setting deadlines in advance of things that haven't happened yet, but I think it will be important for them to use this time to recognize the importance of locking in the autonomy issues that have been discussed over the last few weeks and coming to grips with the idea that there needs to be some post

-implementation force led by NATO in order to provide the confidence on the ground among the Kosovar Albanians, and the very fact that this autonomy is real.

Q Joe, after the conference today between the President and the congressional leadership, Congressman Gephardt termed the President's plan to save 77 percent of the surpluses a threshold issue. Does that mean there is no room for compromise as far as the President is concerned? Is he willing to move at all off the 77 percent figure, particularly the inclusion of all 15 percent for Medicare?

MR. LOCKHART: I think the President feels very strongly that 15 percent of the surplus should be reserved for Medicare. I think the Minority Leader, what he was expressing -- and the President agrees -- is it's a threshold issue in the sense that for real reform of Medicare and extending the solvency and extending the solvency of Social Security, you need to commit 77 percent of the surplus. And I think the President believes very strongly and I think there is a good bit of support on Capitol Hill on the concept. We're going to have to work through some of the details, but I think at the end of the session, it's our hope that we do have this three -quarters of the surplus reserved for both of these things.

Q Joe, to follow up on the details, what sense have you of any real progress toward figuring out how this could be done? How much work is there to be done on that front?

MR. LOCKHART: I think there's some sense on both sides of the aisle about reserving some of the surplus, particularly for Social Security, not necessarily for Medicare, but I still think there are differences in how we do that. The President has laid out a framework for how we do it by paying down the public debt and it's our hope as these issues continue to move forward in Congress and on Capitol Hill, that support will grow for the approach the President has laid out.

Q Did the President reject a $450

-million satellite deal with China, and why?

MR. LOCKHART: The President did not. There was an application from the Hughes Company for exporting a satellite that went through the normal process, which involves the Commerce Department, the State Department, and the Defense Department, and I think it was announced today that that license application was rejected in part because of the makeup of the consortium of entities that were involved in who the satellite was being sold to, including the PLA in China.

Q Was there a national security element to --

MR. LOCKHART: Sure. That's why it goes through the State and the Defense Department. I'd refer you to their announcements about this, but there is a process that takes those issues into account and tries to balance our needs as we've talked about in the past to keep American satellite makers competitive in the world market.

Q Are relations worsening with China?

MR. LOCKHART: I think we have a wide range of issues with China that span economic, security, human rights. I don't expect that this decision, based on the best thinking at the State Department and the Defense Department, will have a significant impact on the relationship.

Q Is there an April --

Q There's a newspaper report that there is evidence -- and the report was also sourced to the White House -- there was evidence that China is helping North Korea with its missile program. Can you comment on that? Is that report accurate?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I really can't comment on the intelligence matters there. Do we have anything? Sorry. If I can take a quick look.

The U.S. and China share concerns about North Korea's missile development. China supports our efforts to restrain North Korea from conducting further missile and satellite launches. China also recognizes, as we do, further launches will destabilize the region. China has given us assurances that they are not providing assistance to the North Korean missile program.

Q Joe, on the licensing, what is different about this licensing application that was turned down? What is different about this than from the other licensing applications that the administration has approved, and strongly defended last year when --

MR. LOCKHART: Sure. I think, with this one, this was one that, as I understand it, was initially approved, but because there are safeguards built into the system, when either the technology changes or the entities that go into the consortium of who you're selling it to change, you're forced to come back and re the process. And in this process, as I understand it from State and Defense, the consortium -- there were significant changes in the consortium which caused concerns for State and Defense, and led them to recommend that we not grant this license.

-enter

Q So the switch in the participants in the consortium made --

MR. LOCKHART: Yes. And in this case, different technology. I would refer you over to State and Defense -- I'm getting into the nitty

-gritty, but there were -- I mean, this is an example of the system having safeguards built into it. When there are changes, you need to come back, go through the process, and allow State, Defense and Commerce to weigh in on whether they think it's in the best interests of the United States for the sale to go forward.

Q Can we go back to Medicare?

MR. LOCKHART: Sure.

Q Does the administration support the Breaux proposals?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, we haven't seen what's come out of the commission, and we think that it's important to allow the commission to do its work, report out what their ideas are, and then we'll take a look at it. There's been a variety of ideas from the commission that are interesting. There's some details that we think we're going to have to work out. But what we don't want to do here is, with every idea that they take up, express an opinion, thereby negating the value of having this independent commission.

Q Well, yes, but you're coming up to the end here.

Breaux's got a bipartisan consensus on this, but not as many votes as he wants or needs. Does the administration oppose anything that would simply give people a set amount to buy their health insurance, through an HMO or fee for service?

MR. LOCKHART: Again, I think there are some interesting ideas that are worth looking at in the proposals that have been put forth in the context of this commission, but we're going to withhold judgment on those ideas until the commission reports out their ideas.

Q So the President does not believe that he needs to do anything in order to forge a greater consensus until after the Medicare Commission is already --

MR. LOCKHART: I think that the idea of the Medicare Commission was to allow them to go forward and come out with some bipartisan ideas, and then the President, leaders of the Republican Party on the Hill would get together and figure out what we were going to do with them.

Q Does the White House have a sense that they need to do something to forge a greater consensus before the ideas come out of that commission? Otherwise, you might be faced with three or four ideas and you won't have made any progress at all.

MR. LOCKHART: We might. But at this point, I think we're going to let the Medicare Commission do their work and when they've reached the end of their time, which is quite soon, we'll look at what the Commission has produced.

Q And the President will then embrace one of those proposals?

MR. LOCKHART: We'll certainly look at the proposals.

Q Joe, according to India Globe, last week the Indian Prime Minister called President Clinton, congratulating him for the work he's doing, and also the President wrote a letter to him of his intentions to visit India sometime later this year. Any comments?

MR. LOCKHART: I know that the President wrote to both the Indian and the Pakistani Prime Ministers to applaud them on the courage of getting together for the summit meeting that they had, and this was before the summit meeting. And we think they've made significant progress in the agreements they've made there. We think that's important for both countries and for the security situation in the subcontinent region. But as far as giving any indications of impending travel, I don't have anything on that.

Q The Indian Prime Minister, first Prime Minister to create a bus from India to Pakistan for the talks between India and Pakistan, and the President also issued a statement saying that he is very pleased about the coming of the talks. What kind of role is the President or the U.S. playing in these talks?

MR. LOCKHART: I think primarily the talks are going on between the parties. But as I'm sure you know, Mr. Talbott has been to the region numerous times and has worked very hard in trying to bring the parties together on a wide variety of issues, including nonproliferation, which is an issue that we take quite an important interest in.

Q Joe, in the leadership meeting this morning, Republican leaders could not be induced to say here that they trust the President. Turn the question around -- does the President trust them?

MR. LOCKHART: Sure. I think the President knows full well that what the American people expect from their political leaders in Washington is to work together and get their business done. And that's exactly what today's meeting was about. The President thought it was a very constructive meeting, there was a good atmosphere. He remarked to me that this was really the first time he's had a chance to sit across from the new Speaker, sit across the table from the new Speaker, and he enjoyed that. He described him as a no

-nonsense guy who is interested in getting things done, and that's very important as we move forward. So I think both sides agree that what's most important is getting the people's business done, and that's what we're doing.

Q Did you get a sense on tax cuts? Did you get a sense that there was any coming together on the issue of tax cuts?

MR. LOCKHART: I think -- the President made his case very strongly on the issue of reserving the surplus, 77 percent to pay down the national debt and reserve those savings for Social Security and Medicare, and talked a little bit about how we can help the middle class save for retirement with USA accounts. I think there was some discussion between the congressional members about how they'll go forward with tax cuts, and whether it's across or more targeted tax cuts, because there have been some differences expressed by various members of the Republican Party on how they want to approach this.

-the -board,

But I think the President, the Majority Leader -- excuse me, the Minority Leader in the House and in the Senate were straightforward and clear on the idea that we think the approach the President has laid out is the best way to go.

Q Joe, Hastert spoke of a menu of possible options on tax cuts. Now, if indeed the Republicans are shying away from across

-the

-board and toward more targeted tax cuts, is it time for horse trading?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I think it's time to give real consideration to what the President's put forward. And we think that it's a strong proposal, provides the kind of tax relief that middle -income Americans need, as well as saving Social Security and Medicare. And we're going to continue to make that case. So we're going to continue to make our case, and we think we've done it in a fairly effective way.

Q But are you open to some of their proposals for targeted tax cuts?

MR. LOCKHART: Say again?

Q Is he open to their proposals -- GOP proposals for targeted tax cuts?

MR. LOCKHART: You know, I have to be honest, I'm not sure what they are. There's been a variety of ideas. We think -- we've spoken in the past. There was some talk of a marriage penalty fix last year, which we could have supported, that Senator Daschle put out. We think, given the money that's there, and is available, the program the President has put out is the most effective way to do that, and that's the case we're going to continue to make.

Q But did he turn to Republicans and say there might be something to that, but, gee, I'd have to -- well, there are a couple of other things we need? There was some talk out here, for instance, about minimum wage, and maybe working that out with some tax ideas. Was there any discussion of give and take, not just the President saying, here's my idea, embrace that, and then we'll talk?

MR. LOCKHART: I'm certain that down the road, as we get into more specific issues, we'll be looking at ways we can find common ground. Right now -- and I think this meeting was more about both sides talking about what they believed their agenda was.

And I think, on the positive side, when you look at what the Republican leaders laid down, and when you look at -- particularly if you look at the full -page advertisement that was taken out today -- they have very much accepted as their top priorities what the President laid out in the State of the Union, probably with the exception of using the surplus for Medicare. But they've talked about education, which has been a high priority for the President since he came into office; talked about saving the surplus and trying to extend the life of the Social Security trust fund. They've talked about health care. So these are all issues the President's talked about. Clearly, we have different approaches and we're going to spend the next few months and beyond trying to figure out where we can agree and finding out where we don't agree.

Q Are you saying the President is not willing to engage in a discussion on sort of how you might approach the Republican ideas until they have embraced the 77 percent?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I'm not saying that there's any preconditions. We're at a point where this is the first time this year they've gotten together. Both sides had a chance to lay out what they think. I think you're slightly ahead of yourself by expecting this to be a horse -trading meeting.

Q Joe, on the issue of trust, how will the President go about trying to gain or regain the trust of the Republican leaders?

MR. LOCKHART: I'll give you the same answer I've given you the last six times this has been asked of me, which is the President believes that the best way to go forward is to continue to focus on the people's business, get the work the people expect, work on Social Security, work on education, work on minimum wage, work on health care and everything else will take care of itself.

Q Did they discuss the deployment of U.S. ground troops to Kosovo, Joe, and did the President win them over?

MR. LOCKHART: I think their discussion of Kosovo -- Sandy Berger, the President's National Security Advisor, was in for the top and gave them a briefing on the latest, which obviously events have moved past in the last few hours. But there was a extensive discussion on Kosovo and what would be needed and a post

-implementation force, and I think there was -- it was described for me as a positive discussion about in what the circumstances would need to be for U.S. forces to be employed, what the mission strategy would be, and what the exit strategy would be.

Q Did you answer his question -- did they go along?

MR. LOCKHART: I'll have to leave it to the others to answer that question definitively, but it was described to me as a positive conversations.

Q Joe, this is the first meeting the President held with the Republicans and the Democrats together in over a year. Did they agree today to hold these meetings more often?

MR. LOCKHART: I think there was a general sense that this was a good meeting, that it had been too long since they've gotten together, and I can't give you a schedule of -- they didn't set forward a series of meetings, but I think everyone walked away thinking that this was constructive and they need to continue to work together.

Q Joe, why is it that they didn't meet for so long?

MR. LOCKHART: That's one I'm going to leave to you to figure out.

Q Joe, on Kosovo? Is there -- during this two weeks of consultation, what role, if anything, will we have? And what strategy, if any, is there if it disintegrates?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, that's a hypothetical on the second part. On the first part, we have worked -- Ambassador Chris Hill has worked nonstop and tirelessly on this problem for many months now, and he will continue to. We made a strong case to the Kosovar Albanians about why we believed that this agreement was in their best interests. And I think if you look at where they ended up, the group as a whole -- which came as quite a group that didn't necessarily agree on a lot of things -- agreed that they believed that this is in their interest.

Now, they are going to go home and consult, and make sure that all the groups of Kosovar Albanians agree. But we will continue to play whatever role is appropriate to make sure that people understand why we believe it's in all the parties' interests to move forward with this idea.

Q Just back on today's meeting. Understanding that both sides want to get back to business, and that's the way to establish trust, was the meeting held with absolutely no reference at all, by either the President or the members, to the impeachment trial?

MR. LOCKHART: There was no reference to it.

Q Not at all?

MR. LOCKHART: None.

Q Was there any reference to the issue of trust?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know for sure.

Q Joe, does the President expect to call Tony Blair or Jacques Chirac now about the developments?

MR. LOCKHART: I don't know. I'll let you know if that happens.

Q Joe, what is the President's current view on the reauthorization of the independent counsel statute?

MR. LOCKHART: I think that -- I haven't talked to the President specifically about that, but I think people have spoken out. The Chief of Staff was asked, by an accomplished interviewer on a Sunday show, that may be airing an interview in a couple weeks that Sam doesn't think people are going to pay enough attention to -- I disagree. Anyway, I think -- I mean, I'll echo John's thought, which is, there seems to be a bipartisan consensus that the independent counsel statute as written needs a very serious look and some reforms if it's to be reauthorized.

Q Will the President be --

Q Joe, on Ghana's President's visit tomorrow, do you have anything you can tell us? What's going to be discussed?

MR. LOCKHART: Let's see. Okay. The visit -- as you know, the visit comes 11 months after the President's historic trip to Africa, and will highlight the strong and increasing ties between the United States and Africa. In particular, it will reaffirm the strong and warm relationship we enjoy with the government and the people of Ghana. You will all remember the absolutely incredible event we did there, with half a million people -- and will highlight the many initiatives and accomplishments that have been undertaken since the President's trip. We hope that the President's trip here will further the efforts of the administration to build a partnership to promote peace, stability, democracy and economic opportunity to the people of Africa.

Q How much money will be given out?

MR. LOCKHART: We'll talk about that tomorrow.

Q Joe, on the independent counsel statute, what sort of reforms are needed?

MR. LOCKHART: I think that -- we haven't come to any firm conclusions here, so once we do, I'll be glad to talk some more about it, but I think that what the Chief of Staff alluded to. A number of leaders on the Hill, from both sides of the aisle, have said that we need to take a serious look at how we move forward. and we agree with that consensus.

Q Does the President think -- the CBO, apparently critical of the President's Social Security plan, and a hearing today on the Hill. One of the things they said was that if you implement the plan as outlined, it will transform Social Security from a pay

-you

-go system to a system that depends largely on general tax revenues. Is that the thrust that you think the President's plan has, and is that an intention on the part of the White House?

MR. LOCKHART: No, I think what we're talking about here is taking advantage of a historic opportunity, which is the result of the fiscal discipline of the last six years. And I think the President and his economic advisors believe that we should take advantage of this opportunity to provide a way to shore up and extend the life of Social Security.

Q So you're not really disputing the fact that general tax revenues would then be funneled into the system, and it's not really a pay

-as

-you

-go system anymore?

MR. LOCKHART: Well, I'm not disputing it because what we're doing here is -- and as we've talked about here before, it's a somewhat complicated accounting procedure -- but paying down the national debt and reserving the savings by moving bonds into the Social Security trust fund, or IOUs. We think that, if we do that over this 15

-year period, we will go a long way toward extending the Social Security trust fund. So you can make that criticism of it, but we think this is a historic opportunity that should be taken.

Q -- getting back to Kosovo, I just want to make clear, during this interim period before March 15th, will the OSCE monitors remain monitoring --

MR. LOCKHART: Yes.

Q -- and NATO reserves the right to bomb if the violence escalates?

MR. LOCKHART: NATO has the authority to move forward if they believe that the Serbs are acting in a way that is repressing the Kosovar Albanians.

Q On March 3rd, will the President be watching Barbara Walters' interview on ABC, 20/20 at 9:00 p.m. Eastern? (Laughter.)

MR. LOCKHART: Oh, I know what we decided. I looked

- \p -

BOTTOM ALL

into this, Sam, and I found out -- a little known fact -- that C routinely replays my briefings at 9:00 p.m. every night and the President never misses them.

-SPAN

Q He'd rather watch you than Monica? What have you done for him? (Laughter.)

MR. LOCKHART: Thank you.

Office of the Press Secretary

February

U.S.-Africa Ministerial in March

On March 16, the President will address the opening of the U.S.-Africa Ministerial on Partnership in the 21st Century. The conference will be attended by nine members of the Cabinet, including the Secretaries of State, Treasury, Commerce, Transportation, Labor, Agriculture and Energy, the United States Trade Representative, and the Administrator of the Agency for International Development, as well as the Chairman of the Export-Import Bank, and the Presidents of the Overseas Private Investment Corporation and the Trade Development Agency. Members of Congress, and representatives from private business and non-governmental organizations will also participate in the ministerial and associated events, as will Ministers of Foreign Affairs, Finance, and Trade from 46 countries in sub-Saharan Africa.

Falling on the first anniversary of the President's trip to Africa, the U.S.-Africa Ministerial on Partnership in the 21st Century will be held from March 16 - March 18 in Washington, D.C. The conference will focus on the President's Partnership for Economic Growth and Opportunity in Africa, and identify how the United States and Africa can expand and accelerate economic development, trade and investment cooperation.

TEXT:
THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release
February 23, 1999

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

The peace talks in Rambouillet, France are a significant step forward in the search for a fair and lasting peace in Kosovo. In the last three weeks, the negotiations have produced more progress than we have seen in the decade since Kosovo's autonomy was stripped away by the government in Belgrade.

By agreeing in principle to a strong plan that would provide substantial self-government for the people of Kosovo, the negotiators on the Albanian side have shown courage and leadership. The agreement by the Serb side to substantial autonomy for Kosovo also represents an important, but incomplete, recognition that only by allowing the people in Kosovo control over their day-to-day lives can there be a lasting peace.

The Kosovar negotiators have asked for time to consult with their constituents before formally signing the peace plan. I believe that the Kosovar Albanian people will strongly support what their negotiators have done, because the agreement represents the opportunity for a better life after years of repression and fear. The Serbs should be prepared to return to the negotiations on March 15 with a commitment to sign the full agreement - including the indispensable provisions on the withdrawal of most Serb security forces from Kosovo, and the deployment of a NATO-led peace implementation force.

In the meantime, it is imperative that all sides avoid provocations that would imperil this progress. NATO Secretary General Javier Solana retains the authority given to him by the NATO Council to act if necessary.

I want to thank Secretary Albright and all her negotiators for their tireless efforts that led to hopeful developments, and commend British Foreign Secretary Robin Cook and French Foreign Minister Hubert Vedrine, the co-chairs of Rambouillet, for their leadership.
