Six and a half years ago, most of you were still in elementary or middle school.

You may not remember what our country felt like back then – with a budget deficit of $290 billion and rising, with stagnant paychecks, with inequality growing, with people throwing up their hands and saying that our social problems were too big to fix. You may not remember this, but when I was out on the campaign trail, there was even a best-selling book entitled “America, What Went Wrong?”

Thanks to the hard work of millions of Americans, our nation has made a seismic shift in the last six years. Instead of staring deep into a pit of deficits, we’re looking up at $99 billion in surpluses and looking forward to the new century with confidence and pride.
