CLINTON ADMINISTRATION:
'HERCULEAN TASKS,' BUT DOUBTS, CRITICISM, ADVICE PREVAIL

President Clinton's most recent initiatives--from "reinventing government" to the "bottom-up" review of the future Pentagon role--garnered some good marks for effort overseas, although most comment continued to criticize his foreign policy initiatives and offer plenty of unsolicited advice. Highlights included:

"REINVENTING GOVERNMENT"--Writers praised the president's "courage" in attempting to streamline the federal bureaucracy, a role which resembles, said one daily, that of St. George marching against the dragon. Others pointed out that this initiative could help restore Mr. Clinton's "centrist, New Democrat" image with the voters, but most remained skeptical that he would succeed where other presidents have failed.

FUTURE OF U.S. MILITARY--Some Europeans were relieved that the U.S. was not seeking to pull out completely from the continent. German media, however, earnestly sounded the alarm about a possible "collapse" of European security if America were to withdraw all its forces. London's conservative Daily Telegraph's polite rejoinder was that the administration still lacks a strategy for when and where it should intervene at the plan's "commendably cautious level of military preparedness."

FOREIGN POLICY--Analysts contended that the U.S. has failed to develop a framework for its role as the remaining superpower. The press, however, revealed its ambivalence over the nature of this role: Papers in countries that are key U.S. allies still look for U.S. leadership and largely doubted that "multilateralism" will work. The pitfalls encountered by the international efforts in Bosnia and Somalia were these critics' favorite examples. Those in Third World countries--by and large--remained suspicious of U.S. hegemony and favored a more multilateral approach to international problems.

Tokyo's liberal Mainichi, a daily squarely in the first camp of observers, urged the president to restore the fading image of America "the diplomatic pacesetter." Leading publications in London harped on Mr. Clinton's pre-eminent role in assuring enactment of both the GATT Uruguay Round and NAFTA. In Santiago, centrist La Epoca said that the international community, not the U.S., should cope with the potential threats to Latin American democracy.

This survey is based on 48 reports from 14 countries, August 17-September 9.

EUROPE

BRITAIN: "The 'New Democrat' Unveils His Fall Program"

The conservative Times (9/8) reported, "The (Gore) initiative capitalizes on the enormous public discontent with Washington and should help revive Mr. Clinton's campaign image as a 'New Democrat' who does not automatically believe in big government. Aides hope it will also enable him to start building the centrist coalition he desperately needs for his health care reforms and the NAFTA to be passed."

"Will Gore Prevail Where Others Have Failed?"

The independent Financial Times (9/8) commented, "Gore is not the first person to set about overhauling the U.S. federal bureaucracy, and skepticism about the results of reports such as his National Performance Review is now deeply ingrained.... Washington skeptics say that even if the Gore report is different from President Nixon's Ash Council or President Reagan's Grace Commission--and it is certainly better written than those were--it is likely to suffer the same fate as they did."

"Others believe, however, that public opinion, stoked by Mr. Ross Perot's presidential campaign last year, is so eager for an attack on waste in government that Congress will be forced to take up Mr. Gore's challenge."

"'Cut-Out' Figure Casts A Long Shadow"

Under the headline above, the Times (9/7) looked forward to the launch of 'Reinventing Government,' reporting, "Al Gore...seems so wooden in public that comedians claim he has medical checkups by tree doctors and cannot be sent to state funerals lest he be mistaken for the corpse.... Last month, Mr. Gore even gave the president a cardboard cut-out of himself to take on holiday. Today, however, Mr. Gore will enjoy his day in the sun...."

"'Reinventing Government' could do much to re-establish the New Democrat image that Mr. Clinton squandered so swiftly on such issues as gays in the military and racial diversity. The report will embrace concepts anathema to the left, such as the privatization of government services, performance reviews, customer rights and a leaner, meaner federal workforce. Even more, however, it is in tune with the mood of a public fed up with Washington."

"What Clinton Must Do Not To Be Another Carter"

An editorial (9/7) in the Financial Times said, "If any one expectation arose from Mr. Bill Clinton's election last November it was that, as a Democrat, he could break the legislative 'gridlock' by working with the majority in both houses of Congress. Yet his main achievement since taking office has been to scrape together, after months of lobbying, the narrowest of Congressional majorities for a distinctly unadventurous budget. Within a few months now the political horizon will be dominated by next year's Congressional elections. If the president has not by then firmly established his authority and used it to impose his own agenda, he will be in severe danger of becoming the third out of the last four presidents to leave office after only one term...."

"The substantial items on Mr. Clinton's menu are health care and the NAFTA.... The chances against Mr. Clinton achieving a workable health care package on the first try do not seem promising. But at least he will try.... It would be agreeable to say the same...about the issue of free trade....

"Certainly, Mr. Clinton is on record as favoring both ratification of NAFTA and an early conclusion of the Uruguay Round. He deserves much of the credit for the breakthrough achieved in Tokyo in July.... But while it is primarily for Europeans to deal with that European problem (France's threat to veto Blair House accord), there are many other items in the round still to be agreed, and they are unlikely to be so by the December deadline without intensive political involvement at the highest level....

"Mr. Clinton has not surrendered to (the anti-NAFTA) lobbies, but his handling of them has dismayed the treaty's supporters. That issue now cries out for real leadership, as do a number of foreign policy issues: Not least the Bosnian imbroglio, where Mr. Clinton's indecision cannot be excused by, even if it does not in turn excuse, the feebleness of his European allies. At home and abroad, he is now being compared with his last Democratic predecessor, Mr. Jimmy Carter. If--as may be safely assumed--Mr. Clinton strongly dislikes that comparison, he must realize that he has only a short time left in which to prove it wrong."

"Maintain U.S. Muscle, And Know When To Use It"

The conservative Daily Telegraph's editorial (9/3) on the Pentagon redesign noted, "In short, the Pentagon's worst-case scenario is now war on two geographically remote fronts against unallied aggressors. To maintain maximum flexibility, troops will continue to be stationed in significant numbers (100,000 apiece) in Europe and the Far East. This seems a commendably cautious level of military preparedness. Yet it is impossible not to contrast the clarity of Mr. Aspin's hypotheses with the recent confusion of American policy in Bosnia, where the limited use of force has repeatedly--and emptily--been threatened. While it is reassuring that America intends to maintain its military muscle, Mr. Clinton has yet to show a clear understanding of how that muscle should be flexed."

"Clinton's Presidency Will Be Judged By GATT Decisions"

Another editorial (8/23) in the Financial Times stressed, "The heaviest burden of responsibility rests on Mr. Clinton, whose job it is to articulate the long-term interests of his country. The president has to decide whether or not to fight for a dynamic and open world economy. The Uruguay Round is more important economically and politically than the NAFTA. If Mr. Clinton fails to show the required leadership in the next few months, the round will fail. These decisions cannot be evaded. His presidency will be judged by how he takes them."

"Clinton Must Be The One To Fight For NAFTA"

In an editorial reiterating its support for NAFTA, the independent weekly Economist said (8/20), "If NAFTA is to pass, Mr. Clinton must now fight for it.... But if he panders to men like Richard Gephardt...he risks losing Republican support and a needed bipartisan victory."

"Let Mr. Clinton instead address the American people directly.... Mr. Clinton has the knack of explaining complex issues simply and persuasively.... His appeal can be to self-interest. He can explain that the best way to lessen the flow of illegal Mexican immigrants is to help create a stable and prosperous Mexico. He can make clear the benefits, in growth and jobs, of free trade, and expose the reckless charges of impending economic ruin made by Ross Perot and others, which have gone largely uncontested. And if he wins the voters, he will win in Congress."

"New Clinton Foreign Policy: Coming This Month"

Washington correspondent Martin Walker filed (8/19) for the liberal Guardian, "The Clinton administration plans to unveil a distinctive foreign policy late next month that will seek to shed many of the political and economic burdens of global leadership.... The new policy is aimed at internationalizing the process of mediating disputes...."

"The Clinton administration is not turning isolationist, but looking for ways to use international institutions like the UN and its regional alliances like NATO and the emerging Pacific security system to dilute the costs of the global role that the United States shouldered during the Cold War. 'Multilateralitis'...has been jarred by the bruising lessons of real life.

"In Somalia, the Clinton administration has learned that humanitarian missions can quickly go wrong and require specialist counter-insurgency troops. In Bosnia, it has learned the difficulty of working even with experienced NATO Allies where there is no clear policy consensus among them."

GERMANY: "Where Are Superfluous Employees To Go?"

Washington correspondent Dietrich Zwaetz (9/7) wrote for business-oriented Handelsblatt of Duesseldorf regarding the cut in federal employees: "Such savings certainly fit President Clinton's plans to reduce the deficit. If everybody has to tighten his-her belt, why should government employees remain untouched? In addition to this, the Democrat Clinton can take the wind out of the sails of the Republican opposition and Ross Perot, since they constantly demand further savings.

"But the question, which industry must also raise in view of all the dismissals, is where are the superfluous employees to go? Although the firings are supposed to be carried out in a 'socially compatible way'...it does not change the fact that hundreds of thousands of jobs are rationalized away."

"If America Withdraws, European Security Will Collapse"

Michael Stuermer commented on plans to reduce the U.S. military in Europe in a piece for the front page of right-of-center Frankfurter Allgemeine (9/4), "It is not only a military but also a political question. The answer depends on the dangers which the Americans see in the Europe of the future and on the tasks which they plan to carry out.... They will remain purely to protect American interests...."

"The task of NATO in general and the American troops in particular must be what was (in connection with the British fleet) referred to as the 'fleet in being': a force which has a calming influence on political passions and bellicose lust by its very presence...."

"At the same time, the less claim to superpower status the Americans can justify, the more politically difficult the presence will be: in public opinion on both sides of the Atlantic and in the distribution of command and responsibility.... Even if the figure of 100,000 soldiers is still domestically acceptable in a couple of years' time, the Americans will ask the Europeans some uncomfortable questions, the easiest of which will be that of the cost of deployment.... The Americans will want to use their troops not only for carefully coordinated Alliance operations but also deployment outside Europe.

They will insist on the nuclear deterrent and demand air defenses against missiles from the Mediterranean and Gulf regions. The question of leadership is also more complicated than before: When America does not want to provide ground troops, its army will hardly be able to claim command of an operation.

"Unless these structural questions are answered, America will probably set a date for withdrawal of its military presence from Europe--and European security will face collapse."

"Consistent"

Centrist Koelner Stadt-Anzeiger offered this view of the Pentagon review (9/3), "The new military concept does not contain any surprise. The Pentagon must make do with less and adapt to new threats and a new world.... But in principle, the turning away from the Old Continent will be consistent after the collapse of the Soviet Union."

"Europe Still Needs U.S."

According to right-of-center Die Welt of Berlin's editorial by Joachim Boelke (8/23), "Six months after President Clinton's move to the White House, it is still difficult to get a clear view of the new administration's political ideas on future U.S.-European relations. What is being heard from Washington are general statements: that Europe is no longer subject to a direct threat as before, that it can no longer count on the current U.S. troop presence, particularly since the U.S. budget deficit calls for radicals cutbacks....

"Such statements that are justified as adjustments to the new realities obviously also include an element of relief about being able to shed some of the global political burden. This, however, is partly wishful thinking that could prove to be wrong. It is true that the superpower Soviet Union has ceased to exist but, in view of the unpredictable consequences of this disintegration, the security situation in Europe has by no means stabilized. The end of the Cold War has rather provided us with the first heated war in Europe on the soil of former Yugoslavia. The conflict has also shown that the concept of the Europeans being able to deal with their own affairs and mastering such crises was mistaken....

"The most recent experiences should cause the United States to examine carefully future U.S.-European relations and to purge its own concepts of false assumptions.

"Europe cannot be completed without America.... It is no coincidence that inner-European rivalries always rise when the U.S. presence in Europe is waning."

FRANCE: "St. George Trying To Crush Bureaucratic Dragon"

Influential Le Monde front-paged this editorial (9/9), "On the 168-page report outlining the 'reinventing government' propositions, Mr. Clinton has the innocence or the perverseness of asking each American to read it. It is actually a pamphlet against the bureaucracy. It bears Vice President Gore's imprint, since he wrote it, and is essentially in the tradition of Washington's populist bent and the general feeling which dominated the electoral campaign and which was symbolized by Ross Perot....

"Presidents come and go but the civil servants remain. Ten similar reforms have been announced since the beginning of this century, from Roosevelt to Reagan, and the bureaucratic hydra keeps increasing. One would be wrong to smile at Clinton, a modern Saint George trying hard to crush this dragon. The young U.S. president may have more chances of winning than his predecessors. He undoubtedly has the energy, and essentially he is in perfect tune with his compatriots."

"Plus Ca Change..."

Pierre Briancon reported from Washington in influential Liberation (9/3), "The new U.S. military will look a lot like the old one. For the most part, the plan decided under Bill Clinton's authority looks like the twin of that proposed by Bush.... However, the recent plan bears the mark of the new administration in two respects--cuts in the number of troops and material are slightly bigger than initially forecast; a clear concern to preserve the U.S. (military) industry."

"A Mediocre, Albeit Not A Disastrous Impression"

The influential director of the Institut Francais de Relations Internationales (IFRI), Thierry de Montbrial, wrote a three-part review of the Clinton administration for conservative Le Figaro. The (8/17) segment included these remarks: "Yugoslavia? It is for his hesitations that Bill Clinton must be blamed.... The White House's indecisiveness raises the question of U.S. leadership, i.e. its capacity to make decisions that go beyond calculations of short-term interests. Beyond the Yugoslavs' tragedy, that is the question raised by Bill Clinton's lack of determination....

"The Middle East?... Washington seems determined to boost the negotiations, inspiring itself with Jimmy Carter's activism.... In Somalia? The United States has made a big mistake by militarily involving itself with no knowledge of the situation on the ground, without defining a policy, therefore without any previous diplomatic effort....

"All this gives a rather mediocre, albeit not disastrous impression. The core of the problem is the lack of a conceptual framework adapted to our new world. Hence the criticism against Warren Christopher's lack of imagination. He is undoubtedly an excellent diplomat. But it seems that he has been unable to conjure up a policy that could meet the present circumstances.

"Unfortunately, this vacuum is not filled by the White House, where neither the president nor his National Security Council advisers have shown the necessary aptitude."

"Withdrawing From The World, Or Remaining Its Superpower?"

De Montbrial's (8/18) piece in Le Figaro said, "The rhetoric of Bill Clinton and his entourage mirrors a fundamental hesitation between...a withdrawal from the world scene and the desire to remain 'the' world's superpower--with, as a backdrop, the economic situation.... Bill Clinton has started a vast program of cutting military expenditures and international aid, something which appears in contradiction with the leadership desire.... The U.S. practices a very vague notion of multilateralism--a kind of 'shared leadership'...in total contradiction with Washington's brutal unilateralism on economic and commercial issues, in particular on GATT. Its (multilateralism's) only concrete effect up to now has been to serve as an alibi for inaction in Yugoslavia....

"On the question of nuclear non-proliferation, as on others, Washington lacks a clear conceptual framework, and tends to focus on the technical aspect of the problem rather than on political factors. For example, is it a good idea to encourage Japan to purchase Russia's stocks of enriched uranium?... There is another field in which the U.S. conceptual wavering is obvious: the future of the Atlantic Alliance and the security system in Europe. The United States would like to stay in the Alliance, which it views as a club ensuring its power on the Old Continent, but provided that it does not pay the price for it....

"The United States is vague on just who NATO is supposed to defend and against whom. U.S. hesitations can also be seen on the question of the use of force.... The 'zero casualty' doctrine shows that the Vietnam syndrome is still alive. It partly accounts for (U.S.) stalling on ex-Yugoslavia and the renewal of gun-boat diplomacy. On the Middle East and Eastern Asia, the new U.S. concepts are also vague.... The new administration has many troubles in formulating new concepts. It is probably because it has not fully assessed the stakes of the post-Cold War era.

"But it is also true that no other country has done better."

"Clinton Must Not Miss His Rendezvous With History"

The third segment of de Montbrial's assessment in Le Figaro (8/20) said, "If the United States continues to be indecisive, the political gains accumulated over the last 45 years will go to pieces. In order to succeed in its entry into the third millennium, the United States must once again exert its leadership. But this no longer means distributing the roles. Washington must set up future rules of the game together with its Cold War partners and also with Russia and China. In other words, one expects that Bill Clinton will finally give a sense to his idea of 'multilateralism.' He must not miss his rendezvous with history."

ITALY: "Clinton Administration Reads A Lot"

Alberto Pasolini Zanelli commented in conservative Il Giornale (9/8), "One has to admit that the Clinton administration is made of people who read a lot.

"The president, his wife, the vice president and top-level officials devour at least 10 times as many books in a month as those which were enough for Bush in one year. From reading come ideas, not always feasible. This time, a project for the streamlining of bureaucracy."

BELGIUM: "U.S.: Rejecting A Lot Of Responsibilities?"

Foreign affairs writer Paul De Bruyn observed in conservative Catholic Gazet van Antwerpen (8/23), "By naming Shalikashvili at the head of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Clinton confirms that he wants to abandon his predecessors' policies to a large extent. Rather than playing the role of 'policeman' of the world, he wants to use U.S. troops in UN peace forces to help dam instability...without conveying the impression that the United States wishes to dominate and, in particular, avoiding the high costs to the U.S. economy.

"More details of this 'Clinton doctrine' will be unveiled in the fall...but the rest of the world already has some idea of what attitude the United States will take. The most striking feature is that the United States rejects a whole series of responsibilities. The time when Washington took the world in tow to expel Saddam Hussein from Kuwait is over.... Clinton is the first president to announce publicly that there are limits to U.S. power and influence....

"[Clinton] is being forced increasingly by circumstances to continue to play a leading role. Developments in Bosnia are the best example. The unbelievable failure of a powerless and cowardly Europe made it necessary for the United States to take the lead....

It is certain that Bosnia will not remain the only example. NATO's future in particular, is likely to require a still larger U.S. involvement. The Clinton doctrine sounds nice in theory because it gives the impression of being adapted to the changing world. However, Clinton himself will have to wait and see whether the world will permit him to actually deploy that policy."

CANADA: "Policy Overload"

Publisher and editor of the Tampa-based Sun Times of Canada, Geoffrey Stevens, pointed out (9/5), "This year, the United States is suffering from severe policy overload...but matters are about to get worse, in a hurry. The Clinton White House is planning to hit Congress and the country with three heavy policy offensives in the next three weeks. First, it will unveil the results of Vice President Al Gore's six-month exercise in 'reinventing government'...second, Clinton will finally present the North American Free Trade Agreement to Congress for approval. It promises to be a bloody political battle....

"Finally, Clinton will announce the details of his national health reform plan. It promises to be the biggest and perhaps most crucial struggle of his or any recent presidency."

FINLAND: "U.S. Will Not Give Up Superpower Position"

The plan to reshape the U.S. military sparked the following comment in leading, independent Helsingin Sanomat (9/4): "The United States intends to keep its current force levels of approximately 100,000 troops in Europe. The reasons are no longer military but political.

"The United States does not want to reduce its input into NATO so much that its influence becomes undermined....

"Maintaining a large military and 11 carrier units is quite a burden for the U.S. public economy. However, the Persian Gulf War seems to have strengthened the notion in Washington that vital national interests still require a long arm. The Balkans crisis has crushed the theory that all crises can be controlled through multilateral effort and international cooperation. After the demise of the Soviet Union, the United States is the only remaining superpower. The new strategy shows that it will not give up that position."

"Important Message: U.S. Will Not Retreat Into Isolationism"

Helsingin Sanomat (9/3) rejoiced that "the decision not to cut U.S. forces stationed in Europe is an important message that the United States will not become isolationist as some in Europe have feared."

EAST ASIA AND PACIFIC

JAPAN: "How Clinton Can Restore America's Image"

An editorial in liberal Mainichi (8/20) concluded, "A widening gap exists between Mr. Clinton, who is calling for change and economic recovery in the United States, and the American people who seek clear methods or policies that could bring change to American society.

"The U.S. president must also tackle many urgent global issues, including peace in Bosnia and the formation of a new world order in the post-Cold War era. The collapse of the Soviet Union has, however, apparently diminished the significance of political ideology for Americans.

"In fact, the American ideology of the Cold War era has become less justifiable and their country's position as the only superpower also less significant. Under the Clinton administration, U.S. diplomacy has been placed lower than economic and other domestic priorities. As a result, President Clinton's diplomatic initiatives have become less forceful or persuasive.

"What has become of the image other countries long cherished of the United States (as a diplomatic pacesetter)? The Clinton administration should look again at the previous American image because it is the only and best way to restore America's true identity."

AUSTRALIA: "With Typically American PR Flair"

The Washington correspondent for the liberal Sydney Morning Herald (9/9) pointed out, "Yesterday the Clinton administration announced it too has found a way of saving billions from the federal budget by cracking down on government waste.... With typically American public relations flair, a fork-lift loaded with piles of such regulations was wheeled out on to the White House lawns for yesterday's launch of the Gore report by Mr. Clinton. Many of the report's recommendations, such as opening government services up to more private competition, will sound familiar to Canberra bureaucrats who have been implementing such policies for years."

"Clinton Has No Choice But To Take On Herculean Tasks"

The conservative Australian (9/3) opined, "Health care reforms and NAFTA...are both in trouble. But now Clinton has raised the stakes by turning it into a 'both or nothing' fight.... The burden placed on Clinton's shoulders when he won office is only now becoming obvious.

"His bind is that he has no choice but to take on these Herculean tasks. With almost 40 million Americans without health insurance and health costs taking 15 percent of the national budget, he must make changes. And NAFTA, like the APEC forum that has so strongly captured the administration's interest, is one of his few opportunities to create longer term jobs rather than rely on the academic U.S. recovery."

HONG KONG: "Not Practical And Imaginative Enough"

The pro-Taiwan United Daily News (9/8) grouched in a reference to the Yin He issue, "We have to point out that the Clinton administration so far has no comprehensive foreign policy; they are not practical and imaginative enough in the post-Cold War world order. We are most willing to listen to what new inspirations Clinton will have in his United Nations speech on September 27.

"During Clinton's presidential campaign, when he talked about the role of the United States in the world, he mentioned the resumption of moral obligations. Living up to one's moral obligations is desirable. The minimum requirement for moral obligations is to observe international law and international justice. Otherwise, it is just like putting moral clothes to cover up violence and this is just a new form of hegemonism and tyranny. If the United States treats China like this, it will be very difficult to enhance mutual benefit and world peace.... We hope that Clinton and his foreign policy consultants will review the Yin He issue."

"Resolute Action Not Clinton's Strong Suit"

The independent, English-language Hong Kong Standard (9/2) said in an editorial, "Resolute action is not U.S. President Bill Clinton's strong suit, as six months of fumbling and vacillation attest. His presidency has been marked by doubts, hesitations and U-turns.

"Veteran Clinton-watchers were not over surprised, therefore, by news the United States has indicated it is prepared to strike a deal with Beijing to waive the $1 billion worth of trade sanctions it imposed on China last week for an alleged breach of international missile control guidelines."

SOUTH KOREA: "Still Playing Cop"

Moderate Hankook Ilbo (9/3) stated, "Though it looks as though the United States accepted liberal proposals for massive military cuts, the strategy is still designed to cover the entire world. The new plan views the ex-USSR as wishing to be a democracy like the United States. It shows the Clinton administration's pursuit of a superpower role. It does not show much concern about cooperation with allies over weapons systems, since the United States will halt production of F-16s, though it assured South Korea of tech transfers relating to F-16s."

THAILAND: "U.S. Is Interested In What ASEAN Has To Say"

Elite, Thai-language Matichon (8/22) stated in a commentary by Serm Wongjan, "U.S. Asian policy is evolving. Instead of being egocentric as usual, the United States is interested in what ASEAN has to say, as demonstrated by Secretary of State Warren Christopher's recent participation in the annual ASEAN ministerial meeting in Singapore. As never before, he took the opportunity to talk with ASEAN and Asian leaders."

LATIN AMERICA

BRAZIL: "Courageous Decision By Clinton Administration"

Liberal Folha de Sao Paulo's editorial (9/8) said regarding the Gore initiative, "The Clinton administration's decision is courageous. Reduction of job opportunities is always unpopular even though it is a measure necessary for the nation's economic health. The measure can also be justified by the need for more efficiency and quality in the civil service.

"Reforms demand new technologies and that increases unemployment ...whose impact at first, is stronger than the profit brought by efficiency. It is the fear of those immediate negative effects that serves to justify, especially in Brazil, the postponement of reforms. Only the perception that this will be followed in the long run by the construction of a new model can balance, anywhere in the world, the tension between necessary structural measures and the uncomfortable short-term results."

CHILE: "Not Just One Nation's Task"

Christian-Democrat affiliated, centrist La Epoca (9/6) observed, "The United States, with its leadership deteriorated and showing signs that its strategies toward the rest of the world are more reactive and sentimental than they are planned or ideological, has made known the details of its foreign policy toward Latin America. It is not very appropriate for the United States to resort to the concept of 'objectives' to refer to what is expected to become reality in the center-south area of the continent.

"Since the three most important 'challenges' of the Americans for the area are widely accepted--who does not want these days, even if it's only a matter of good manners to say so, the consolidation of democracy, respect for human rights and the liberalization of the economy?--it is not necessary for the assistant secretary of state for Latin American affairs to specifically state them.

"It is true that the institutional weakness of Nicaragua, the risks of authoritarianism, or the deterioration of pluralism in Peru and Paraguay, the imminent political transition (marked by the commercial opening) in Cuba, and the negotiated democratic settlement in Haiti are reasons for not losing sight of what is going on in the area. But this is a mission that falls more appropriately to the international community as a whole than to only one nation, however important, developed or powerful it might be."

SECURITY ISSUES:
THE SUSPICIOUS SHIP YINHE, MTCR SANCTIONS ON CHINA,
NORTH KOREA NUCLEAR PROGRAM, RUSSIA-UKRAINE ACCORD

Journalists throughout Asia criticized the U.S. for its treatment of the Yinhe ship episode. Official Chinese media comments following the ship's inspection that showed no trace of the chemicals thought to be on board were caustic, calling U.S. behavior "vile hegemonism." Writers in Singapore, Honk Kong, Bangladesh, India, Pakistan and the United Arab Emirates took the U.S. to task, chiding American behavior as "disgraceful," "damaging" to the U.S., "bullying," "interference with freedom of the seas," and imperious. Hong Kong dailies echoed China's official request that the U.S. owed China an apology, with one paper tagging the U.S. a global cop patrolling without a mandate. Those who commented on the possibility that the suspected chemicals might have been dumped or unloaded from the ship ridiculed the suggestion and dismissed it as merely a face-saving device for the U.S.

At the same time, Asian journalists also examined the U.S. decision to impose sanctions on China for its alleged sales of missile technology to Pakistan, with commentators--except in Australia--criticizing the move. Some writers asked whether intelligence errors might also have influenced the decision, while others found the U.S. posture irksome, calling it "symbolic" and "selective" seriousness. Tokyo's liberal Asahi worried about "strains" in the U.S.-China relationship, especially in view of recent U.S. sales of Hawkeye AWACS planes and the lease of a warship to Taiwan, and wondered "how long China's patience can endure." Australia's liberal Canberra Times, however, asked: "Why did the ban take so long in the face of overwhelming evidence that China has breached the spirit of the Missile Technology Control Regime? And why has a ban against India and Russia, for what would seem to be a lesser sin, already been in place for over a year, when China was for so long allowed to go scot-free?"

Meanwhile, South Korean dailies continued to worry about negotiations with the IAEA regarding North Korea's nuclear program, fearing that outsiders might be lagging in their zeal to safeguard Seoul's security. German commentators discussed the Moscow-Kiev accord on former Soviet weapons and the Black Sea fleet; centrist Sueddeutsche Zeitung of Munich called the agreement between Yeltsin and Kravchuk "a serious defeat" for Kiev but maintained that "the United States in particular had insisted that the nuclear weapons of the former Soviet Union should remain in one hand."

EAST ASIA AND THE PACIFIC

CHINA: "Law Of The High Seas Should Not Be Trampled On"

The official People's Daily asserted (9/8), "In the Yinhe incident, the U.S. government, based on its fabricated or groundless 'information,' sent warships and military aircraft to follow, monitor and harass the Yinhe on and above the high seas, in an open show of force, to threaten commercial ships of other countries on the high seas, and seriously violated the stipulation that 'the high seas should only be used for peaceful purposes.' At the same time, the United States also deviated from the aim of the UN Charter....

"The above actions by U.S. warships and military aircraft toward the Chinese ship Yinhe explicitly damaged the UN Charter and the law of the high seas established by a series of international agreements, infringed upon the freedom of navigation in international waters and China's sovereignty, and caused extremely serious political and legal consequences."

"U.S. Refuses To Admit Its Own Mistake"

In the opinion of the official Shanghai Jiefang Daily (9/8), "After the whole truth of the world famous Yinhe incident has come out, the U.S. government, which single-handedly caused the international farce, not only did not admit its mistakes before the hard facts, but also talked a lot about how 'credible' its 'information' was, and attempted to use this to cover its awkward position in the incident.

"The U.S. State Department spokesman's stubborn attitude of refusing to admit mistakes and to make an apology has further exposed the preemptory and hegemonic nature of U.S. government. The U.S. sophistry of deceiving itself as well as others can only have an effect that the more the United States tries to cover, the more it will uncover, and be laughed at by the peoples of the world."

"Haughty Style Of 19th Century Imperialism"

Zhang Huimin, writing in the official China Daily (9/8) remarked, "If the U.S. government were placed in the same position of a falsely accused party as China is now, it seems to me, it certainly would do what China is doing now: Calling for cleansing of its good reputation by an apology of the party that had slung the mud.

"Surprisingly, when China justly demanded a public apology from the U.S. Government, the latter brushed it aside lightly, saying, 'the inconvenience to the Yinhe...is unfortunate.'

"In my mind, the U.S. government has never been so noble or democratic as it often claims to be. For I have seen for myself more than once that when national interests dictate, it can do discreditable things without hesitation or even commit a travesty of truth without compunction....

"With regard to its relations with China, I hope it will not antagonize the Chinese people at large by an insolent approach that reminds them of the haughty style of the 19th century imperialism which their nation suffered."

"U.S. Deserves To Eat Crow"

The China Daily commented (9/7): "We wonder if the U.S. government, which never fails to claim righteousness for itself, has the courage to admit that China's criticism of it is very much to the point.

"If you have done wrong to somebody, you should apologize to him. This is a minimum requirement in the code of good behavior. So is the case in relations among states. We don't think the U.S. government can ignore China's demand for a public apology for its wanton actions against the Yinhe. To use a slang expression, as the U.S. government has persisted in plucking a crow with China, it only serves the United States right that it now eats crow.

"If you cause economic losses to others, you are obliged to make compensation to them. This is also common sense, which we don't think the U.S. government is devoid of. One more lesson the U.S. government should draw from this case is that it should refrain from having implicit faith in its intelligence machinery, sophisticated as it is, and rashly exerting pressure on other nations."

JAPAN: "How Long Can China's Patience Endure?"

Liberal Asahi's (9/9) Beijing correspondent Isogawa filed today, "Relations between the United States and China have become more strained over the recent wrangling over their respective arms exports to Iran and Taiwan.... Chinese suspicion of the U.S. stand (on ties with China) has deepened since Washington imposed sanctions against Beijing for its alleged sales of missile technology to Pakistan, while announcing U.S. sales of Hawkeye AWACS planes and the lease of a warship to Taiwan.

"Despite the growing feud with the United States, Beijing, which apparently gives priority to its economic modernization, is expected to do its utmost to maintain ties with the United States for the time being. The question, however, is how long China's patience can endure."

AUSTRALIA: "What Took So Long To Sanction China?"

A byliner in the liberal Canberra Times (9/3) declared: "Washington's recent ban on U.S. companies doing business with Chinese space authorities raises a number of questions. Why did the ban take so long in the face of overwhelming evidence that China has breached the spirit of the Missile Technology Control Regime over a considerable period of time? And why has a ban against India and Russia, for what would seem to be a lesser sin, already been in place for over a year, when China was for so long allowed to go scot-free?"

"Washington Ready To Negotiate"

The Hong Kong correspondent for the conservative Australian (9/2) filed, "The United States yesterday signaled that bans on high technology exports to China...could be lifted if Beijing were prepared to begin talks on the illegal missile sales to Pakistan. The Clinton Administration's senior policy-maker for Asia... Winston Lord, said at a briefing yesterday that Washington was prepared to negotiate an end to the sanctions imposed last week.... Beijing has repeatedly denied it has sold missiles to Pakistan and Washington's overture could defuse a heated row."

HONG KONG: "U.S. Should Apologize"

An editorial (9/9) in pro-PRC Ta Kung Pao said, "The United States has been seeing itself as an international cop, yet it has no international authorization. Even if its intelligence is correct, it has no right to deter international sea traffic, not to mention if its intelligence is wrong.... The U.S. government should be sensible enough to apologize and pay compensation in this case. It should promise to observe strictly international law and the freedom to sail on the high seas as well as to fulfill the essential obligations of a member of the international community."

"Sino-U.S. Relations Are Poor"

The independent Sing Tao Evening Post commented (9/7) in this editorial, "The Yinhe issue is not an isolated one and reflects that Sino-U.S. relations are poor. Even more incidents will come after the Yinhe issue. The key problem is there is distrust between China and the United States. How to untie this political knot will be a great challenge for leaders of both countries."

"Unnecessary Irritant"

The independent, English-language newspaper South China Morning Post commented (9/6): "China has a right to be furious with the United States over the Yinhe incident.... U.S. intelligence, it seems, was wrong. China has demanded an apology and financial compensation. At the very least, it should expect the former. All it has received, however, is a grudging comment from the State Department to the effect that the incident was unfortunate. The United States must be embarrassed by its own mistake but that is no good reason for being so mean-spirited.

"American political leaders are right to put pressure on China to improve its human rights performance. But they have to be careful not to let their enthusiasm lead them into errors and false accusations. It damages U.S. credibility on a critical issue. And it adds needless irritation to a critical, but troublesome relationship."

"A Disgrace In The International Arena"

The independent Sing Tao Evening Post said (9/7), "The Yinhe issue for the United States is absolutely a shame. It is a disgrace in the international arena. China has won a lot of sympathy on this issue. It keeps its promises and other countries regard it with special respect. The United States should apologize and compensate China."

"Yinhe Issue And Sino-US relations"

PRC-owned Wen Wei Po (9/3) editorialized: "The Cold War has ended. The Soviet Union has disintegrated. However, the world is not more peaceful than before. The Asia Pacific region is prosperous and international relations are more stable than before. This is closely related to the open policy and reform of China and its rapid economic development. It would be absolutely wrong if some U.S. politicians think that there is no need to play the China card any more, and even look for trouble with China intentionally, thinking this can protect their own interests.

"Current Sino-U.S. relations are established in a new international situation. China has been very sincere and practical when dealing with the bilateral relations. Assistant Secretary of State Winston Lord has changed his tone recently, saying that the United States is willing to sit down and talk with China on lifting the sanctions. This is a welcome act. Negotiation is better than exerting pressure and retaliation. This is the proper way to improve and develop U.S. -China relations. The Yinhe issue proves this again."

"Vile Hegemonism"

The pro-PRC Hong Kong Commercial Daily News' (9/3) editorial said: "The United States uses 'groundless' intelligence to condemn another country and threatens to search the ship. All this reflects the vile visage of U.S. hegemonism. The United States definitely lost on the Yinhe issue. In order to distract people's attention, the United States suddenly condemned China for selling M-11 missiles to Pakistan. The United States is in fact lifting up a rock only to drop it on its own feet. China was isolated by the United States for more than ten years. What was the consequence of that? China today is different from the past. The days when the United States could do whatever it wanted to China have ended."

"The Yinhe Issue Will Come Out Soon"

The independent Sing Pao Daily News (9/3) opined: "The Soviet Union has disintegrated and Russia has lost its leading status. The United States seems to have become the only superpower and it is attempting to play the role of international cop. In the Yinhe case, the U.S. Navy kept watch on the high seas, shadowed the ship and stopped it from entering the Persian Gulf. All these are domineering actions. If the investigation had been handled by the United Nations or conducted by other countries, the Chinese Government would not have been that angry.

"However, although profits from the arms trade are very attractive, all countries have an obligation to not export powerful weapons. While the United States and Russia are sharply cutting their nuclear weapons, the sale of weapons to other countries should be avoided. In order to protect its reputation, China should continue to adhere to the weapon control regulations so that a Yinhe issue will not occur again."

"U.S. Bumbling On Sanctions"

The independent English-language Hong Kong Standard (9/2) editorialized: "Resolute action is not United States President Bill Clinton's strong suit, as six months of fumbling and vacillation attest.... Veteran Clinton-watchers were not overly surprised, therefore, by news that the United States has indicated it is prepared to strike a deal with Beijing to waive the $1 billion worth of trade sanctions it imposed on China last week for an alleged breach of international missile control guidelines.

"The world was informed the original decision was taken only after intelligence agencies produced... 'unambiguous evidence' that Beijing last year delivered missile-related technology to Pakistan.... Under those circumstances, Washington insisted, U.S. law made the sanctions unavoidable. What are we to make of its volte face?...

"At first glance, it seems like a face-saving measure all around. U.S. high-technology sales to China will continue. It is no secret U.S. aerospace, high-tech and military industries are all doing badly right now because of cutbacks in U.S. defense spending. This latest news will make people in California much happier.

"At the same time, Washington gets Beijing's adherence to a missile treaty that China was probably looking for an excuse to sign anyway, despite traditional touchiness over the sovereignty issue, because it will serve the greater purpose of bringing the country further into the world community. It also put into the past everything that has already happened. This is, in effect, an amnesty as far as previous Chinese arms concerned....

"China may or may not do it again. There are different opinions about how seriously Beijing takes international treaties. But at least China will have an excuse to stop selling arms to Pakistan without having the Pakistanis complain too much. China will save face. Pakistan will grumble about the United States. And the United States gets a promise of Chinese compliance in future."

MALAYSIA: "U.S., China Unlikely To Break Relations"

Leading Chinese-language Sin Chew Jit Poh commented (9/7), "China has always attached importance to its relations with the United States. Recently, Secretary-General Jiang Zemin remarked China hopes 'to enhance trust in, to reduce problems with, to develop cooperation with and to avoid confronting' the United States. If China is to base its relations with the United States on this premise, the two countries are unlikely to come to a showdown."

SINGAPORE: "Obligations Of Power"

The top-circulation, pro-government Straits Times (9/9) editorialized: "What is worrying is that the United States should have had the temerity to, in effect, deny the freedom of the high seas to a foreign vessel. The entire sequence of events including shadowing the Chinese ship for 24 days, denying it entry to any port in the Persian Gulf, and then boarding it (albeit with Chinese and Saudi Arabian inspectors) for a week-long inspection, seems to be without legal sanction.

"After this, the Americans will have only themselves to blame if their concern for weapons proliferation invites skepticism.

"A second danger lies in the precedent that may have been set. Other powers may also now feel entitled to take the law into their own hands. There could be no more certain prescription for anarchy and unending hostilities. If a system of checks and inspections is thought to be necessary, it can be enforced only under the aegis of the UN....

"Meanwhile, this cannot be the end of the matter. Washington owes the world an explanation. If the Americans cannot offer credible evidence to justify what turned out to be a fruitless piece of intervention, they may also have to meet China's demands for an apology and reparations."

"Where Are The Goods?"

Special U.S. correspondent Ruan Cishan wrote in pro-government, Chinese-language Lianhe Zaobao (9/8): "To divert attention from the incident and confuse the public in general, U.S. government officials again spread rumors through the media in early September, saying the Yinhe freighter had dumped the chemicals in the sea....

Dumping the raw materials in the sea was not only technically impossible but could have been detected by U.S. aircraft, satellites and warships which shadowed the freighter.

At the same time, if the dumping was successful, many 'suspicious- looking' empty cargo cabinets were bound to be left behind on board the Yinhe freighter. U.S. personnel involved in the inspection certainly understood these technicalities. Hence, we have cause to believe the above rumors were one of America's 'crisis coping' devices for the incident....

"To the U.S. government, the blunder was tantamount to a hard slap on the face before the international community. In the future, the whole world may give a snort of contempt to America's 'intelligence evidence.' In addition, the CIA may not have any more confidence in its own information. Furthermore, it will not be so confident in submitting resolute proposals to the White House or the State Department....

"To China, the Yinhe incident was a 'godsend' because it could deal a blow to CIA's prestige and prove its 'innocence in the proliferation of weapons' to the whole world. The whole truth of the incident has come out, but the case should not be allowed to close so easily."

"U.S. Precipitate In Imposing Sanctions On China"

Lianhe Zaobao (9/7) urged the United States to examine itself over the Yinhe freighter search incident in this editorial, "The United States is caught in a quandary over the incident. Does this reflect problems in its intelligence gathering? If this is really the case, there is a necessity for the United States to review its intelligence reporting. For instance, China and Pakistan long have questioned the reliability of U.S. intelligence reports on the sale of Chinese missile parts to Pakistan. In any case, the result of the inspection of the Yinhe freighter will inevitably cast doubts on the accuracy of U.S. intelligence reports.

"There is a possibility of the existence of a force in the U.S. government or Senate (sic) that does not want to see Sino-American relations develop smoothly. It takes every opportunity to create disputes in Sino-American relations. Once it discovers any trace of violation of accords, it immediately will exert pressure on the government to impose sanctions on China.

"The Yinhe incident and the economic sanctions imposed on China over the sale of missile parts to Pakistan reflect lack of careful consideration and preparation on the part of the United States before making accusations and taking action."

SOUTH KOREA: "Wrong Signal From U.S."

Independent Dong-A Ilbo (9/9) pointed out, "It will be important for the U.S. delegate to the U.S.-North Korea talks to directly sense the feelings of South Koreans. Assistant Secretary Gallucci may be surprised to find the intensity of the distrust of North Korea prevailing here. The United States should be on guard against two factors when it talks with North Korea: North Korea's scheme of leading the talks in the wrong direction, and the possibility of North Korean noncompliance with the agreement even if it is reached. This result is visible in the outcome of the IAEA-North Korea talks. Despite this, the United States is reportedly considering third stage talks with North Korea. This is the wrong signal from the U.S. It is the reason North Korea is ready to ignore talks with the IAEA and South Korea."

"North Korea Dashes Expectations On Envoy Exchange"

Government-owned Seoul Shinmun (9/9) commented: "North Korea may think that earning some guarantee of continued existence through talks with the United States will be more effective than South-North Korean dialogue, now that it understands that South Koreans will stick to the policy of putting priority on nuclear issues. We expect North Korea will approach S-N dialogue positively only after it has gained nothing but international pressure from talks with the United States."

"Suffocating Prospects For Korean Dialogue"

Conservative Segye Ilbo (9/8) editorialized: "Though North Korea wants South Korea to declare a halt to Team Spirit and to the international cooperation system for nuclear issues, it is quite natural for us to maintain a cooperation system with the United States and Japan since North Korea's nuclear issues are not only bilateral S-N Korean issues but also the concern of the United States and the UN.... Now, Assistant Secretary Gallucci is to consult on North Korea's nuclear issues with South Korea by visiting Seoul. We expect the third stage U.S.-North Korea talks on the nuclear issues to be opened soon with substantial progress made in S-N talks and IAEA talks with North Korea. But, North Korea's adventurous posture dashes our expectations."

"U.S. Shortsighted On South Korea's Security Reality"

Segye Ilbo (9/8) commented: "The U.S.'s nuclear policy toward the Korean peninsula appears to have placed heavier weight on its national interest rather than on our security realities since the United States shuns the security threat posed by North Korea's chemical and biological weapons deployed to the truce line, which are more threatening than North Korea's nuclear arms. The United States seems to stick to its global policy for non-proliferation of nuclear arms by playing up North Korea's nuclear threat. The ROK must work on an independent policy of establishing its own nuclear reprocessing facilities unless North Korea complies with the joint declaration on denuclearization on this peninsula."

"IAEA Too Gave Up"

Conservative Chosun Ilbo (9/6) stated: "The IAEA's talk with North Korea over nuclear issues ended without fruitful results. The repeated deadlocks in the nuclear talks have been prompted by fundamentally different points of view held among the United States, South and North Korea. The United States and South Korea think that the nuclear program has been pursued in the light of North Korea's strategies toward its political entity and toward South Korea, while North Korea asserts that the nuclear programs have stemmed from the United States's hostile policy toward North Korea. That is why the United States and South Korea demand that North Korea accept inspections of its unreported nuclear facilities. In order to resolve the differences, North Korea must make its nuclear facilities public and accept inspection."

"Korean Security Emerges As Crucial Part Of U.S. Strategy"

Pro-business Joong-Ang Ilbo (9/2) noted: "Secretary Aspin declared Sept. 1 that the United States has opted for the 'Win-Win' strategy. The U.S. government's white paper on its new defense strategy supports cuts in military power. However, U.S. power on the Korean peninsula has grown since the United States judged that it has to keep its Korean-based forces at the present level for the Win-Win strategy. The Korean peninsula has become a crucial portion of the U.S. defense (strategy), with U.S. interest in Asia on the rise."

"U.S. Places Importance On Asia"

Moderate Hankook Ilbo (9/2) commented: "The new U.S. government defense strategy made it clear that North Korea and Iraq will replace the ex USSR as its foremost enemies. That it will greatly increase the military gravity of Asia and will grant 'flexibility' to the allies in times of war. However, given the United States's new military policy of emphasizing Asia, we are concerned how the United States will formulate its (defense) relations with Russia and China."

THAILAND: "Thai People's Fate In Libya"

Elite, liberal, Thai-language Matichon (9/3) editorialized about the problems involved in evacuating Thai workers from Libya, a process the paper believes was triggered by the conflict between the United States and Libya: "It is not an enjoyable situation for the Thai government to be caught in a muscle-flexing game of the superpower. Evacuation of Thai workers will require a lot of money. Will the United States be partially responsible by giving some assistance? The best course of action for Thailand is to tell all Thai who are working with weapons or nuclear plants to withdraw from Libya and to tell Thai workers to stay away from potential targets since, in the past, the United States has struck only military targets or weapon depots."

SOUTH ASIA

INDIA: "The Empire Strikes Back"

Hyderabad's right-of-center Newstime (9/2) commented: "The United States at last appears to be veering around to the view that if its philosophy of nuclear non-proliferation is to have some credibility, then it must at least be consistent in its professed aim of educating the South Asian masses on the evils of proliferation....

"It is now a pointer to all the nations in South Asia, including New Delhi and Pyongyang, that the United States will be still more ruthless with nations that do not fall into line with the American perceptions of the non-proliferation treaty. For Pakistan, this is a lesson that it can no longer take the United States for granted, what with the threat of being declared a terrorist state."

"The Blow From The United States"

Calcutta's independent Bartaman (9/2) editorialized: "The United States...has reasons to corner both China and Pakistan simultaneously, for it wants to enforce its order throughout the world. The MTCR is a step on this regard.... The unusual alacrity the Clinton administration has shown is...because the Chinese transfer of technology to Pakistan may mean disaster for South Asia."

"The Chinese Challenge"

Newstime (9/2) also editorialized: "South Asian nations must take courage from China's refusal to be browbeaten by America, for this is a pattern that the United States will keep repeating in every trade deal with every country, specially in the Third World.... With the American economy in a memorable mess, the Clinton administration, to live up to its promises to the nation, is more or less forced by circumstances to pay more attention to internal affairs. American fears, therefore, extend to other nations catching up with it in the arms race, while it is thinking of more sedentary occupations like improving the health services and so on. It is only in order to prevent this...that the United States has designed all these regimes.... In fact, the entire non-proliferation policy of America has been so devised that no new nation can ever hope to come into the nuclear capability class.... America is out to dominate the world, but in China it will find a tough customer indeed."

"Bargain Basement Mentality"

Newstime (8/31) maintained: "The entire American concept of the nuclear non-proliferation philosophy is nothing but an insidiously ingenious device to see that America remains the biggest and the only arms dealer in the world.... The American armaments industry is gigantic and it has to be kept working at greater capacities if the nation is not to face even greater and dangerous unemployment figures.... Russian President Yeltsin is clearly a puppet in American hands and he could not be expected to displease the Clinton government and put any chances of his country's and his own survival at stake by scoffing at U.S. aid that alone will lend purpose to his reforms package. Clearly, it is a seller's market now."

"Missiles And Sanctions"

Bombay's independent, left-of-center Free Press Journal (8/30) editorialized: "One noteworthy feature of New Delhi's reaction to the Sino-Pak missile deal and the U.S. sanctions...is the absence of hysterical outbursts on the part of the establishment and the self-appointed critics of U.S. policies.... There is a realization in the entire Third World that the role of the United States as the policeman of the world cannot be allowed to prevail."

"Token Sanctions"

The independent Calcutta Business Standard (8/28) editorialized: "Whatever may be the calculations, the sanctions Washington has applied against Islamabad and Beijing are of a symbolic nature rather than being a deterrent against new violations of the MTCR.... We are to believe that the United States looks at the issue of nuclear non-proliferation seriously. Maybe, this seriousness is selective."

"Double Jeopardy"

Calcutta's left-of-center Telegraph (8/27) editorialized: "The one-two punch delivered by the United States to Pakistan and China...shows Washington's commitment to curbing missile proliferation is not limited to cryogenic rocket deals with Russia.... The sanctions are more in the way of a warning shot across the bow than a holing below the waterline.... The United States needs to keep in mind two things as it attempts to curb China's maverick arms salesmanship. One is the Chinese obsession with saving face. This can at times lead to actions contrary to objective national interest. The other is Beijing's belief its internal stability rests on maintaining a healthy export surplus. If Washington speaks softly to preserve the former and waves a big stick in regards to the latter the M-11 may be dropped from the sales catalogues."

PAKISTAN: "No Choice But To Toe Big Brother's Line"

An editorial in the center-right Nation (9/9) held, "The latest instance of unilateral action against Pakistan has been the imposition of sanctions in retaliation for what Washington has insisted, notwithstanding denials by Islamabad and Beijing, is a dubious missile deal with China.... The reigning superpower has assumed the authority to set the rules of the game to suit its own convenience, and the smaller nations have been left with no choice but to toe the big brother's line. Nevertheless, unequal relationship among nations notwithstanding, the U.S. package for 'good behavior' could still be enforced with an element of fair play if Washington were willing to verify facts furnished by its intelligence agencies before acting in haste and browbeating the so-called defiant nations on the basis of what may eventually turn out to be baseless allegations."

"Aspects Of Superpower Incompetence"

The liberal Frontier Post (9/7) editorialized: "It turns out that Washington was dead wrong about what a Chinese ship was carrying (sic) to Saudi Arabia. It said there were chemicals in it for making chemical weapons, American ships hounded the Chinese vessel and wouldn't allow it to dock. After an inspection, it is now clear that there were no chemicals on it.

"Washington regrets that the mistake was made. China wants an apology and monetary compensation. Washington wants everyone to forget about it. But the truth of the matter is that the United States has been damaged by the incident. Other actions are now being seen in the light of Washington allowing its judgment to be swayed by its political bias. Pakistan's caretaker Prime Minister Moeen Qureshi has said that America's sanctions against China and Pakistan on the issue of sale of missiles are based on wrong information. After the China-Saudi incident, people in Washington should be less smug about rejecting Pakistan's protestation. But will anyone listen?"

BANGLADESH: "U.S. Bullying Out Of Line"

Rezwan Siddiqui opined in government-run Dainik Bangla (9/8): "The search of the Chinese vessel proves that the U.S. intelligence reports may not have been totally correct. On the basis of the reports, Washington was sure that the vessel was carrying materials for chemical weapons in Iran. But the search did not prove that allegation. Then what is the justification for the United States to impose sanctions against China and Pakistan on the basis of intelligence reports?

"For this reason, we said earlier that the United States could go to the International Court of Justice if it thinks someone has violated any international law. Justice cannot be ensured if the complaining party becomes the judge itself.

"In the contemporary world, this kind of arbitrary action creates threats to world peace. However, the United States has not gone to the International Court since its defeat in the case of the naval blockade of Nicaragua. Not only that, it has withdrawn its judge. As a result, the court has lost some of its power.

"On the other hand, the UN has also started to lose its effectiveness as the last hope for weak nations due to unilateral military actions by several nations.

"Once again we would like to say that if the UN and the International Court lose their effectiveness, the small nations will take different courses for their self-defense. An all-around race for nuclear arms will begin, and we think all are aware of the consequences. The world needs more mutual regard and genuine commitment to peace, not domination."

NEPAL: "Counterproductive Sanctions"

Pro-left Samaj (9/1) editorialized: "There are signs that the U.S. sanctions against China and Pakistan will be counterproductive. China now appears to be in a mood to violate the nuclear nonproliferation treaty. As a nuclear power, it may proliferate and propagate nuclear weapons in an unrestricted manner. If China really implements its warning, weapons of mass destruction may fall in the wrong hands. The program, likewise, may lead it to a stockpile of nuclear weapons, since Pakistan is known to have developed its own nuclear weapons.

"In these circumstances, we see indications of heavy proliferation of nuclear weapons throughout Asia, and not only in South Asia. The warnings of China and Pakistan have already raised the dangers of nuclear weapons in this part of Asia. This is bound to affect the entire world.

"For this, the United States, which regards itself as the gendarme of the world, is clearly responsible. The United States is resorting to sanctions, blockades and military actions against any country which does not act according to U.S. interests. Its tendency to indulge in bullying tactics by abandoning the path of dialogue and understanding is driving the entire world to the brink of a catastrophe."

THE MIDDLE EAST

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES: "What A Relief"

The privately-owned, Dubai-based Gulf News (9/4) editorialized: "The West will be particularly relieved to hear that Kiev is willing to transfer all its nuclear weapons to Russia for dismantling. It is time the West put together a substantial aid package for Ukraine and also encourage every effort within the former Soviet Union for closer economic and trade ties.... The West has an interest in the outcome, so it has good reason to make its own position loud and clear."

"China Is No Easy Prey"

Hasan Qayed Al-Subaihi wrote in semi-official Arabic-language Al-Ittihad (8/31) that while the United States, as the only superpower, was bent on policing the world, "China, however, is no easy prey. It has its own intelligence system." The writer speculated that the Chinese, getting wind of U.S. suspicions of the cargo aboard the Yinhe, replaced the ship's contents, thereby scoring "a dear point in the American goal."

"Arbitrary Sanctions Decision On China, Pakistan"

Privately-owned, Dubai-based Haleej Times (8/28) editorialized: "The sanctions imposed by the United States against China and Pakistan for alleged violation of the Missile Technology Control Regime (MTCR) have inevitably evoked sharp criticism in both Beijing and Islamabad. Both countries have denied that any missile deal done by them was in contradiction of the MTCR, which neither has signed but by which both have promised to abide. The question again is whether far-reaching decisions on sensitive issues relating to arms control can be arbitrarily made by one country, especially when the basis on which sanctions have been imposed is hotly contested by both China and Pakistan. That some favored few like Israel can apparently get away with anything only heightens the selectivity and partiality that marks the big powers' attitude to the whole question of arms control. Arms control and nuclear nonproliferation should not be dealt with only as political questions, but ones intimately connected with moral values which should inform the big powers' approach to the problem."

EUROPE

GERMANY: "Money Rules"

Right-of-center Main-Echo of Aschaffenburg (9/8) commented: "Defense Secretary Les Aspin's warning against 'excessive cuts' in defense spending of the NATO partners is only an elegant paraphrase for a very delicate U.S. plan.

"The Americans want to press their friends to agree on a very moderate shrinking of their defense budgets in order to prevent the ominous 'balance of forces' from becoming shaken, but also to prevent the partners from cancelling as few arms purchases in the United States as possible.

"In some regions, U.S. arms acquirers have been very successful. U.S. companies have shipped more arms than ever before to the Middle East, Africa and Asia. Inflation adjusted, U.S. arms exports have increased by 40 percent. But we have known before that security policy has a lot to do with money and quite often depressingly little with morality."

"Crushed By The Big Brother"

Centrist Sueddeutsche Zeitung of Munich (9/6) editorialized: "There is no doubt that the interim agreement between Yeltsin and Kravchuk on the nuclear weapons deployed in Ukraine and the Black Sea fleet is regarded as a serious defeat for the leadership in Kiev. Russia is not only taking over responsibility for all the nuclear weapons but also Ukraine's share of the fleet and its bases. Members of the Ukrainian delegation did not hide their disappointment: 'We were simply crushed.' Moscow held all the trump cards: For one thing, the Russians brought massive economic pressure to bear on their southern neighbors--they cut oil and gas supplies considerably, with disastrous consequences for the Ukrainian economy. For another, Kravchuk had bet on the West viewing Ukraine as a counterweight to the military superpower Russia and backing a confrontational course--a huge mistake. The United States in particular had insisted that the nuclear weapons of the former Soviet Union should remain in one hand....

"Following the meeting in the Crimea, Kravchuk's foreign policy lies in ruins: For the time being, Ukraine (the third-largest country in Europe by population) will not play any part in the concert of the powerful. The Yalta agreement does not, however, mean in any way that Russian-Ukrainian tensions will diminish, because the decisive question is nowhere near being resolved: How much is the Black Sea fleet worth? Moscow is already indicating that the amount should be worked out in rubels. Kiev, on the other hand, is going to demand hard currency--and with good reason: Moscow is demanding world market prices for its supplies of oil and gas."

"The Yalta Disaster"

Werner Adam opined in right-of-center Frankfurter Allgemeine (9/6): "Many Ukrainians must regard the handing over of their part of the Black Sea fleet as a national humiliation. In this case, their president clearly had to acquiesce to the dictates of the Russians. Yeltsin used the almost total dependence of the almost insolvent Ukraine on Russian oil and gas supplies to force Kravchuk to make this 'sale' because otherwise, the country would have been faced with a complete stop to such deliveries shortly before the onset of winter. Following Moscow's victory over Kiev, it is unlikely that the Russian parliament will at least annul its decision to make the main headquarters of the Black Sea fleet--Sebastopol--a part of Russia.

"Yalta was not a case of negotiations between equals.... After this Yalta, pan-Slavist forces in Moscow who regard Ukrainian independence as merely a temporary aberration in their Greater Russian history will feel strengthened."

WHITE HOUSE NEWS REPORT

Friday, September 10, 1993

Prepared by the News Analysis Staff, Rm 160, x7151

All the evening network newscasts and the major newspapers led with the Israel-

PLO agreement.

Headlines:

"Israel and PLO, in Dramatic Bid for Peace, Agree to Mutual Recognition," LA Times banner headline

"Israel and PLO Reach Historic Accord; Arafat Asks Palestinians to End Revolt," Washington Post banner headline

"P.L.O. Accepts Israel, Disavows Force; Attains Recognition After 3 Decades," New York Times banner headline

"REACHING FOR PEACE: Israel and the PLO Agree on Mutual Recognition, Self-Rule Pact Is Set for Signing Monday in U.S.," International Herald Tribune banner headline

"Israel and PLO Agree to Mutual Recognition In a Historic Accord," Wall Street Journal headline

Last night, the PLO Executive Committee in Tunis gave Yasser Arafat the authority to sign a letter recognizing Israel and called on the Palestinians to cease their revolt in the occupied territories. (WP) Israeli Prime Minister Rabin recognized Yasser Arafat as the representative of the Palestinians. (WP) The Israelis said Prime Minister Rabin was adamant that the intifada be curtailed. (NYT) On Monday, Palestinian and Israeli officials will sign a declaration of principles to guide the establishment of a Palestinian government in the Gaza Strip and Jericho, to be expanded later to include most of the West Bank. (WP) "It is the psychological impact of that ceremony -- two neighbors who for years never recognized the other's legal title to Palestine/

Israel finally acknowledging that they each have an equally valid claim -- that will be the most enduring." (NYT) USA Today said the "most likely candidates" to sign the declaration are Israel's Peres and PLO official Abu Mazarin, who oversaw the secret negotiations. PLO adviser Bassam Abu Sharif said, "if President Clinton wants to give it a boost then he will invite Rabin and Arafat." (USA Today)

The Administration plans to resume its suspended dialogue with the PLO but will not immediately recognize the organization as the representatives of the Palestinian people, according to U.S. officials. (WP) The President was prepared to announce the policy change at a Rose Garden ceremony yesterday, but postponed it until today pending the signing of the mutual recognition agreement. (NYT) The President said he was "extremely happy" about the accord and "very, very hopeful for the future" of peace in the Middle East. (WP) ABC's Peter Jennings said the U.S. has not played a major role in the agreement to date but added that

U.S. influence will be very important in the future in enforcement of the PLO's agreement to control its members.

Jordanian officials said they would approve an outline of their own draft agreement with Israel "hours" after the Palestinians sign their accord with Israel. (NYT)

A New York Times editorial said, "The world is entitled to some skepticism. But the most constructive contribution Americans and others can make would be to quickly mobilize the moral and material support needed to translate these agreements into a lasting peace."

A Washington Post editorial said Washington "set up the peace talks, which produced a back-burner initiative that would have been inconceivable without the front-burner stimulus....The Clinton team is being chided for irrelevance and detachment by some of the people who usually argue that in these matters Washington is too frontal and pushy. What counts is on the ground."

A Wall Street Journal editorial said, "Obviously much good will has been brought forth in this agreement; history works in unpredictable ways, and there's room for a pleasant surprise. But those with reservations can't be dismissed as anti-peace....The goal is worthy. The details matter."

HEALTH CARE -

The Washington Post's Dana Priest reported that the President's health care plan would cost the federal government $700 billion over five years, of which $105 billion would come from new taxes on cigarettes, alcoholic beverages and some large corporations, according to Administration officials and Congressional staffers who have seen the plan. (WP) The tax on cigarettes will be one dollar a pack; beer will be exempt. (ABC)

"Yesterday a cacophony of criticism, confusion and enthusiasm followed Hillary Rodham Clinton as she traveled to Capitol Hill." (WP) CBS's Dan Rather reported that "While there was a warm reception for Hillary Clinton on the Hill she took a lot of heat on issues involving cutting Medicare and Medicaid." ABC's George Strait reported that Hillary Rodham Clinton encountered "a near revolt of Democrats" because of Medicare cuts. USA Today's Judi Hasson and Judy Keen reported that "Scaling back future Medicare and Medicaid increases erupted into controversy even before President Clinton outlines his health plan to Congress on Sept. 22."

The White House also plans to establish a national health board to decide reasonable prices for prescriptions and pressure drug firms to cut prices. (USA Today)

The New York Times's Robert Pear reported that the latest version of the health plan would require drug manufacturers to help finance a new prescription drug benefit by providing a discount on all drugs covered by Medicare. (NYT) The Wall Street Journal's Hilary Stout reported that according to documents being reviewed on the Hill, pharmaceutical companies would be required to give at least a 15% rebate to the government for drugs covered in Medicare and Medicaid.

The Boston Globe reported that its copy of the draft "envision[s] an even tougher assault on both public and private medical cost increases than previously disclosed." The new cost laws would be enforced by a seven-member National Health Board. (Boston Globe) The Wall Street Journal reported that the document was 239 pages; however, the Boston Globe reported that it was 240 pages.

Pharmacy Manufacturers Association spokesperson Warren said the industry welcomed new coverage of prescription drugs but was alarmed at any proposal for the Government to rule on the "reasonableness" of drug prices. (NYT) Warren also said that indirect price controls, enforced by exclusion of a company from federal programs, would be just as onerous as direct controls. (NYT)

Liberals questioned whether Medicare and Medicaid spending limits would result in unacceptable cutbacks in the amount of quality and care. (WP) Conservatives, including members of a coalition of Democrats and Senate Republicans, expressed doubts about the wisdom of government controls on health spending. (WP) ABC's Straight also reported that Hillary Rodham Clinton also proposed a compromise: the money cut from Medicare will only be used to provide prescription drugs and long term care for the elderly. CBS's Bob Schieffer said, "The fight over exactly what the proposal will cover and how it will be paid for is just a warm-up for a knock-down, drag-out fight that is sure to follow."

Sen. Mitchell said, "The question is whether those costs can be controlled in a reasonable way, and I believe they can." (WP) Rep. Waxman (D-Cal.), said, "I'm skeptical they can achieve the reductions in Medicare and Medicaid," (WP) but added that, "I am reassured of the fact that we're going to have further discussions." (USA Today) Sen. Rockefeller (D-W.Va.), said it is his job to make sure that existing programs do not deteriorate. (ABC) Rep. Stark (D-Cal.), said, "I am unwilling to risk the destruction of Medicare just so the president can claim a Pyrrhic victory." (USA Today)

Sen. Gramm (R-Tex.), called the plan "a flight of fancy" that did not account for "job losses and lost revenues resulting from a 3 percent to 7 percent added payroll cost imposed on small business." (WP) Sen. Hatch (R-Utah), said, "You'll never get enough out of Medicare to finance reform. And it will be unfair to seniors." (USA Today)

White House health adviser Judith Feder told the American Psychiatric Association that mental health and substance abuse benefits will be phased in and fully covered by 2000. (USA Today)

The Worksite Health Promotion Alliance, a coalition representing more than 2,000 U.S. companies, said the President's plan will fail unless it gives much more emphasis to promoting health and preventing disease. (WSJ)

The Washington Post's Al Kamen reported that "Clinton's gatekeeper" caught Wall Street Journal reporter Hilary Stout looking at the "secret plan" for health care in the Rayburn House Office Building. The Wall Street Journal's Washington Wire reported that the White House is allowing hospital, doctor, insurance, business and consumer groups to look at the plan.

"Many interest groups, including the powerful AMA, are likely to mute their initial criticism of the Clinton plan, calling it an important step before criticizing specific details." (WSJ)

The Washington Post's Ann Devroy and Stephen Barr reported that the President's proposals to streamline government will save $108 billion and cut 252,000 federal jobs are based on tenuous assessments and guesses unsupported by facts, according to some independent budget analysts and officials familiar with similar government reports. Robert Greenstein said, "The review's chief weakness is its estimates for how much can be saved and how many federal jobs can be shed." (WP) OMB Director Panetta "stressed that much would depend on how many of the proposals service." Some Republican members of Congress, as well as Greenstein, have called for an independent assessment of the savings projections. (WP)

The Wall Street Journal's Bob Davis reported that the President is expected to order sweeping changes in the way the government issues regulations which would expand the power of the Vice President and diminish the influence of traditional White House regulatory reviewers. The executive order could be issued as early as Monday, according to officials involved in the process. (WSJ) "The new regulatory process tries to strike a balance between business and consumer groups, but both sides say the rules are unsatisfactory." (WSJ)

The New York Times's Michael Kelly reported that, "In his first official act of 'reinventing government' into a quicker, slimmer, smarter creature, President Clinton...created -- a new Government entity," the Community Enterprise Board.

The New York Times's Elizabeth Kolbert said the Vice President's appearance on the Letterman show "seemed to finally merge politics and entertainment into one funny, knowingly and thoroughly sarcastic package."

NATIONAL SERVICE -

A Washington Post editorial said, "the Senate handed the president a deserved victory and a large challenge," and that the President "has to prove that his program can engage the nation's young people in work that is genuinely useful to their communities and helpful to the needy in whose name most service programs operate."

A New York Times editorial said, "Congress handed President Clinton his first major policy victory this week when it passed his national service initiative." The editorial concluded that its small start means that, "The Administration can tightly supervise the program, make it work well and then prove to Congress that it warrants a bigger boost three years hence."

NAFTA -

Some House Republicans warned the White House this week that organized opposition to NAFTA has weakened GOP Congressional support. (WP) Rep. Gingrich said, "I am very, very shaken by the intensity of my colleagues' sense of being beleaguered on this issue....We are 40 votes weaker than I thought when I got to town on Monday." (WP)

Senior White House officials also appear to be in disagreement on the President's strategy for passing NAFTA. (WP) Some said the President will work hard to pass NAFTA, but others said he will turn to other issues after next week's NAFTA ceremony. (WP) USA Today's Richard Wolf reported that, "Stung by reports he may delay congressional action and take a low profile...because of broad opposition to the plan and the imminent introduction of his health care plan, Clinton instead is expected to devote considerable time and attention to the issue."

The Wall Street Journal's Washington Wire reported that Rep. Dreier said, "there's a sense that some Republicans will say that the second- and third-ranking Democrats...aren't for this, so why should we hand Bill Clinton a victory?"

SOMALIA -

After Somali gunmen attacked U.S. and Pakistani peacekeepers in Mogadishu, two U.S. helicopters opened fire on Somali men, women and children. (WP A1) The United Nation's account indicated that two U.S. Cobra gunships inflicted casualties among militiamen and their civilian backers and that Somalis injured two U.S. soldiers. Somali sources reported seeing scores of bodies in the street. (WP) U.N. officials said as many as 100 Somalis may have been killed and that some appeared to be women and children. (NYT A1)

U.N. military spokesperson Stockwell said the shooting of women and children was a "last-ditch, last resort effort to protect the United Nations troops." (NYT) Stockwell also said the two gunships fired when women and children joined heavily armed militiamen throwing grenades and firing weapons at U.N. troops. (WP) "In late-night briefings to reporters, Stockwell offered two widely different versions of what occurred in the battle." (WP) In a first report of the incident, Stockwell called the incident "regrettable," but later called back to journalists to say, "I'm not saying it wasn't regrettable -- I just don't want to characterize it that way." (WP)

Yesterday, the Senate voted 90 to 7 to call on the President to obtain Congressional authorization by Nov. 15 to continue deployment of U.S. forces in Somalia. (WP) "Mr. Clinton strenuously argued against passage of the amendment on Wednesday in a meeting with Congressional leaders, saying it would undercut his Presidency and would be viewed internationally as a sign of weakness." (NYT)

In rejecting Sen. Boxer's (D-

Cal.), amendment to strip all language governing gays in the military from the 1994 defense authorization bill, the Senate approved a policy more restrictive than the President proposed. (WP) Sen. Nunn said Congress had a responsibility to act and contended it would be an "unfortunate abdication of our responsibility and obligations under the Constitution" if the Senate allowed the President to determine the policy. (WP) "The White House signalled earlier that Clinton would not veto the bill if Nunn's plan were included." (USA Today)

The Human Rights Campaign Fund accused the Senate of turning the "don't ask, don't tell" policy into one of "lie and hide."

(WP) NBC's Ed Rabel said the White House is putting distance between liberals and added that the Nunn plan is legislation that "Clinton can live with." USA Today's Bill Nichols and William Welch called the issue "a no-win political issue that just won't seem to stay dead," and reported that "it follows that President Clinton's reaction to the Senate's vote...will be to take his lumps from gay activists and give this issue a final burial." (USA Today)

A USA Today editorial criticized the Senate vote and said, "So where can gays turn now? Not to Clinton. He's on to other things and probably won't even fight for his flawed compromise."

Rep. Skelton (D-Mo.), wrote the counter-editorial.

BOSNIA -

In a meeting with members of Congress yesterday, Bosnian Muslim president Izetbegovic urged that the U.S. contribute a significant number of ground troops to a peacekeeping force if an agreement is reached. (NYT) A lawmaker who attended the meeting said, "He said what they really wanted was a U.S. commander for Sarajevo and talked about how he didn't think the French would protect them." (NYT)

STATE DEPARTMENT -

The Washington Times reported that the Justice Department said there is no "urgency in deciding whether a special prosecutor should be appointed to investigate reports that Administration officials violated the privacy act by searching the records of Bush officials. Sen. Dole and Sen. McConnell (R-Ky.), yesterday asked Secretary Christopher to provide prompt answers on the matter. (WT)

A Washington Post editorial said, "The disturbing pattern of slipshod or irregular practices -- so evident in the travel office fiasco but once thought to be confined to the White House -- has extended to the State Department....The President can't claim to be so absorbed in the affairs of state that he's oblivious to the foul-ups in his administration. He needs to clean up the act."

WHITE HOUSE NEWS REPORT

Tuesday, September 14, 1993

Prepared by the News Analysis staff, Rm 160, x7151

All major papers led with banner headlines and the photograph of the President coaxing Prime Minister Rabin and Chairman Arafat to shake hands.

"Rabin and Arafat Seal Their Accord As Clinton Applauds 'Brave Gamble'" (NYT)

"Israel and PLO Sign Peace Pact; Rabin, Arafat Pledge Cooperation on Day of Historic Diplomacy" (WP)

"Giving peace a chance" (USA Today)

"'Enough of Blood and Tears'

Israel and PLO Adopt Framework for Peace"

"Hopes for peace hang on handshake" (WT)

"Shalom, Salaam, Peace

Israel and PLO Sign Accord on Self-Government;

Clinton Hails 'Brave Gamble' of Arafat and Rabin" (Int. Her.Trib)

Reports of the ceremony led all three network newscasts last night, and all showed Rabin and Arafat shaking hands in front of the President.

Yesterday, Israeli Foreign Minister Peres and PLO official Abbas signed the Declaration of Principles for establishing Palestinian self-rule in the Gaza Strip and Jericho. (WP) PLO leader Arafat and Israeli Prime Minister Rabin shook hands in front of the President. (WP) CBS's Dan Rather interviewed Arafat. The President needed to give Prime Minister Rabin "just a little extra nudge in the back." (NYT)

The Washington Post's Ann Devroy and John Goshko reported that, "By evening, most White House officials were in an emotional swoon over a day in which a historical divide had been crossed, but they said more steps would be needed to cement the move toward a sustainable Middle East peace." The President called the signing "an extraordinary act in one of history's defining dramas," and noted that the accord is the most important milestone towards peace in the Middle East since the Israel-Egypt peace agreement signed in 1979. (WP) The New York Times's Thomas Friedman called the handshake a "triumph of hope over history." The New York Times's Maureen Dowd reported that, "If it was not the day the Earth stood still, it was close: It was the day Washington was not cynical." The Wall Street Journal's Robert Greenberger reported that the event "broke decades-old taboos."

ABC's Brit Hume reported that "more host than sponsor," the President "made clear that this was their day." NBC's Andrea Mitchell called the ceremony a "miracle of the Middle East that was predominated by two veterans of conflict and the young American President." NBC's Tom Dansig reported that Rabin urged Secretary Christopher to raise funds to secure the economic stability for Palestine to facilitate the peace.

The Washington Post's Glenn Frankel reported that, "In many ways, the new pact is far bolder than the agreement hammered out between Israeli premier Menachem Begin and Egyptian president Anwar Sadat. Since stories after the signing of the Begin-signing in 1979 focused on money the U.S. would give to Israel and Egypt, "Clinton aides went to extremes to stress any U.S. contribution would be modest." (USA Today)

Sadat

The New York Times's R.W. Apple reported that, "As he himself said, this was not Bill Clinton's day....Now, though, President Clinton will have to assume the central role if the momentum toward a comprehensive peace settlement is not to be lost."

At the reception after the ceremony, the President stressed to Arafat the importance of maintaining momentum, according to a U.S. official. (WSJ) Israel and Jordan are scheduled to announce an agreement in Washington today on an agenda that "sets the foundations for a treaty and diplomatic relations," according to Jordanian officials. (WP) On Monday, Israeli Deputy Foreign Minister Beilin said that Israel wants to negotiate an accord with Syria over the Golan Heights. (USA Today) Israel also wants the U.S. to "play broker" in the deal. (USA Today)

A new USA Today/CNN/Gallup poll indicated that 80% approve of the accord, and 53% favor creating a Palestinian state. Forty-six percent approve of how the President is handling of foreign policy. (USA Today) However, 58% gave the Bush administration credit for the agreement; 22% gave the President credit. The President's "brightest days in the polls have followed foreign policy events." (USA Today) The poll also indicates that more people now approve than disapprove of the President's job performance, 47%-

42%. (USA Today)

A New York Times editorial said, "This is by no means a final peace....Further progress will require not only the good will so obvious on the White House lawn but the continued encouragement -- moral, political and financial -- of the West, particularly the United States."

A Washington Post editorial said, "What happened yesterday at the White House was only a ceremony to sign a first-small-piece-of-peace agreement between Israel and the PLO. But what a ceremony!"

A USA Today editorial said, "And what of the United States? Right and naturally, it remains committed to the process."

A Detroit Free Press editorial said, "many more people must join [Rabin and Arafat], and more difficult times endured, before we achieve the promise held forth in President Bill Clinton's heartfelt greeting at Monday's ceremony."

"President Clinton today officially launches his campaign to sell the North American Free Trade Agreement." (NBC "Today") Former Presidents Ford, Carter, and Bush are expected to participate in the announcement. (NPR) The new USA

Today/CNN/Gallup poll indicates that 34% approve of the President's handling of trade issues.

In a speech to the Economic Club of Detroit, Sen. Dole predicted a narrow Congressional approval for NAFTA. (Detroit Free Press) "Dole pointed to a Clinton administration forecast that Detroit automakers would increase exports to Mexico by nearly $1 billion next year under NAFTA, producing an estimated 15,000 new jobs." (Detroit Free Press)

A Washington Post editorial said, "If NAFTA is to be passed, it will have to be done this autumn. Now is the time for Mr. Clinton and his Cabinet to get to work explaining to Americans why and how this agreement is in their own best interest."

A USA Today editorial said, "For a president who ran on jobs, jobs, jobs, and a nation needing them, NAFTA is something to hail. The only sucking sound to fear is that of unwary people being sucked in by phony job-loss figures." The counter-editorial was by AFL-CIO president Lane Kirkland.

A Los Angeles Times editorial, while supporting NAFTA, urges the administration to consider Rep. Torres's (D-CA) idea for a North American Development Bank to help with economic development and environmental protection.

CBS's Dan Rather reported that the Republicans will unveil their plan for health reform later this week: "Like the Clinton plan," it is to provide access to all, but the GOP version focuses on tax incentives rather than government regulation. (CBS)

The new USA Today/CNN/Gallup poll indicates that 43% approve of the President's handling of health care issues. The Wall Street Journal's James Perry reported that the Journal's panel of political experts agrees that "President Clinton is slowly gaining control of his political agenda, but he would be wrong to think that foreign policy triumphs like yesterday's South Lawn ceremonies will win much credit with voters." Celinda Lake said, "He's much more on top of the debate, and that helps." (WSJ) GOP strategist John Sears said, "He is hanging on, at least." (WSJ) The panelists see health care as the one issue on which the President could score a meaningful victory, though they are not yet convinced it is yet within his reach." (WSJ)

The Washington Post's Kathleen Day reported that Secretary Bentsen's speech to the National Restaurant Association yesterday did not go over well. NRA Chair Elmont said, "We cannot absorb the cost of providing health care." Elmont also called the idea of phasing in a mandate "kill me now or kill me later." (USA Today) Secretary Bentsen said the reform package would include no payroll tax and that the cost of providing coverage to workers would be reduced by lower medical insurance premiums. (WP) "Restauranters, who employ 9 million, were unimpressed." (USA Today)

The Washington Post's Dana Priest reported that the DNC cancelled its National Health Care Awareness Day. Kiki Moore said, "Our goal was to support people who wanted" to plan an event, and "That didn't happen." (WP)

The Wall Street Journal's George Anders reported that, according to the draft of the plan, Americans over 65 may get more of their medical care from HMOs if the plan is enacted. The working draft says the Administration wants to "improve and strengthen the Medicare managed care program," and spells out at least four potential changes in the ways HMOs are paid. (WSJ)

The Washington Post's Albert Crenshaw reported that the Administration is planning to make employers of domestic workers pay a share of their workers health insurance plans. A White House health care spokesperson said the obligation would be "just like Social Security." (WP) The spokesperson also said some undocumented aliens now get health insurance from their employers and that the administration does not want to strip them of it. (WP)

The Wall Street Journal's Greg Steinmetz reported that the President's health plan "leaves unanswered one of the more difficult questions in the reform debate: How to keep insurance companies from discriminating against the old, the sick and the poor." The 239-

page outline of the plan refers the problem to the National Health Board. (WSJ)

Russell Baker's New York Times op-ed said, "Mercy on us all! They are designing another nightmare as complicated as the tax law, with the same kind of opportunities for finagling and corruption."

A Wall Street Journal editorial said, "In assembling this giant contraption, the Clintons have assiduously avoided consulting anybody who would question the health care plan's premises," and that "Our sense...is that most people know this proposal is going to be mainly a waste of everyone's political and intellectual resources."

The new USA Today/CNN/Gallup poll indicates that 40% approve of the President's handling of federal spending.

Yesterday, the President eased the ban on trade with Vietnam by allowing U.S. firms to bid on development projects there financed by the World Bank and other international agencies. (WP) A White House statement said the Administration "will leave no stone unturned in the effort to determine the fate of those who served our nation" in the Vietnam War. (WP)

Three U.S. soldiers were injured in a two-hour street battle with Somali guerrillas who set up sniper positions in a hospital and attacked the U.N. headquarters with mortar shells. (WP) U.N. spokesperson and U.S. Maj. Stockwell said he had no details about the injuries to Americans but said two were being treated in field hospitals and were in stable condition; the third had been released. (WP) Following U.N. and U.S. military policy, officials did not report the number of Somali militiamen killed or wounded, or the number of civilian casualties. (WP)

Former president Carter said Somali warlord Aidid has offered to submit to the judgement of a special U.N.

investigative commission that he proposes, even if it means he would leave Somalia. (NYT) Carter noted that he could not vouch for Aidid's sincerity. (NYT)

The case of Joe Steffan, a midshipman who was expelled from the Naval Academy in 1987 for being gay came before the U.S. Court of Appeals yesterday. (USA Today) Government lawyer Steinmayer argued, "The principal line the Supreme Court has drawn provides considerable deference to the military." (USA Today) Judge Mikva said, "No question great deference is given to the military for its special needs in society. [But] we don't simply repeal the Constitution because the military is involved." (USA Today) The New York Times's

Stephen Labaton reported that "The Clinton Administration, using legal arguments Bill Clinton the candidate had sharply criticized, appeared in court...to defend the old policy that banned homosexuals from the military."

"In an implicit rebuke to Yugoslavia," the World Court in the Hague demanded "immediate and effective implementation" of its past orders that the Belgrade government refrain from committing or sponsoring acts of genocide in Bosnia. (NYT) The Court did not rule that the U.N. arms embargo against Bosnia was illegal. (NYT)

Today is election day for D.C. voters. Voters will select a council chair and decide on Initiative 37, which calls for a federal constitutional amendment to disarm.

All the evening network newscasts led with reports on the President's plan. USA Today led with the President's appearance in Florida. The New York Times ran a special section on health care today.

ABC's Peter Jennings reported that the President's plan will lead to a bill, but not necessarily his bill. CBS's Connie Chung reported that, "the President was pouring on the pressure but now the hard part begins as opponents from all sides open fire." NBC's Andrea Mitchell reported that calls were coming in to the White House 2-1 in favor of the plan.

The Washington Post's David Broder and Richard Morin reported that, "Toward the end of the President Clinton's health care speech as he described the fear and frustration of people struggling with the medical system, the murmurs of agreement from the dozens of Ohioans gathered in this Cincinnati suburb grew into an Amen Corner of assent. But when the speech ended, most of them said they wondered whether there really was a plan after all."

The Washington Post's Ann Devroy reported that during last night's town meeting, the President sought "to reassure questioners that in virtually all cases, they would be at least as well off, and sometimes better off," under the proposal. "Some of the questions to Clinton were so detailed and his answers so involved, the exchanges were almost incomprehensible. Some were wrong. The president late in the show had to correct two of his answers after misstating small details of the program and getting offstage advice" from Ira Magaziner. (WP)

USA Today's Judy Keen reported that the President "is putting a patriotic gloss on selling his health care reform plan," and "avoided talk of his proposal's costs." USA Today's Adam Nagourney reported that "Clinton appears to be on something of a roll, no matter how tentative."

The Washington Post's Ann Devroy also reported that yesterday's White House health care activities "looked for all the world like a flea market." Officials acknowledged that the lack of solid, detailed, facts accompanying the plan may have been a mistake. (WP) The Washington Post ran a chart listing members of Congress by their Health PAC receipts. ABC's World News Tonight showed clips of the talk show hosts and the rally at the White House, as well as clips of Cabinet Secretaries travelling the country. The New York Times's Thomas Friedman reported that the White House kicked off what staffers are calling "health care a-go-go," a "nationwide blitz of talk show appearances, radio call-ins, and visits to local diners intended to answer one question: What does the President's health care proposal mean for me?"

The Boston Globe reported that the White House confirmed that the President has ruled out a tax on liquor, and that the President will seek a 75 cents to $1 per pack cigarette tax increase. Kevin Anderson said alcohol has been ruled out as a source of additional revenue. (WSJ)

The New York Times's R.W. Apple reported that, "this week may have represented a turning point for Mr. Clinton, with the signing of a bill establishing a national service program, long a point of programmatic pride for moderate Democrats, and especially with the President's urgent, emotional appeal Wednesday night for the nation's support in his bid to 'give every American health care plan that can never be taken away.'"

HEALTH CARE REACTION -

Sen. Dole said, "It's going to be a long, long, tortuous road, and called the President's plan "a little overgenerous and underfunded." (USA Today, ABC) Rep. Gingrich (R-Ga.), asked Americans if they really wanted some bureaucrat making decisions on their operation. (CBS) Sen. Kerry (D-Neb.), said he opposed employer mandates. (NBC) NBC's Tim Russert said employer mandates would be the "BTU tax of health care."

The Washington Post's Clay Chandler and Spencer Rich reported that the President's plan "drew sharp fire from many economists, who charged it was more expensive than the president claimed and could hurt the economy."

The New York Times's Robert Pear reported that "Consumer advocates, economists and health policy experts said today that they generally accepted Mr. Clinton's principles as criteria by which to judge health care legislation." The President's proposal got an "A" in security, a "C" in simplicity, and a "D+" in savings from experts analyzing it. (NYT)

Former President Reagan's CEA Chair, Martin Feldstein said the plan would cost the government $120 billion more in its first year than Administration officials have estimated. (WP)

"Feldstein's estimate is the first public challenge -- that includes specific numbers -- made by a nationally recognized senior economist to the tentative budget figures attached to the president's health plan by the administration." (WP) Other economists said the plan could weaken the country by slowing growth, reducing jobs and raising the rate of inflation. (WP)

Yesterday, CEA Chair Tyson's scheduled briefing was "abruptly canceled," and an Administration official said she was unwilling to contend that the President's proposals would quickly generate new jobs and bolster growth. (WP)

Rosalynn Carter said, "I was hoping that mental health would be included just as physical health, that there would be no distinction." (AP)

The New York Times's Maureen Dowd reported that, "The health care debate began in earnest today with a high-pitched whine that signaled one of the biggest, most alarming disgorgements of faxes in Washington history."

The Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association suggested that parts of the President's plan would have a "devastating impact" on patients, mentioning his efforts to "blacklist" new drugs if they are excessively or inappropriately priced. (WP)

The Coalition to Preserve Health Benefits said the President's plan would reduce Americans' flexibility to choose their benefits, "returning to the one-size-fits-all health care policies of the 1950s and '60s, when male-dominated, single-earner households were the norm." (WP)

The Health Insurance Industry Association's Bill Gradison said the President would eliminate a choice that consumers now have and that under the President's proposal consumers and small businesses could not buy coverage directly from insurers but would have to go through a purchasing cooperative. (NYT)

In a front-page New York Times feature, Clifford Krauss reported that lobbyists are again trying to mobilize grass-roots support to influence the health care plan. Hill and Knowlton partner Frank Mankiewicz said, "It's the largest mobilization since Social Security." (NYT)

Anthony Lewis's New York Times op-ed said, "universality is...a key to the political redefinition that President Clinton seeks through the health plan. He was a 'new Democrat' when he called for 'responsibility' in his health speech, saying that people must pay part of their medical costs....But he was an old Democrat in proposing a universal system like Social Security."

A. M. Rosenthal's New York Times column said, "however the health plan finally reads, this President, no other, has persuaded the country that like education and police protection, health care is a right, never a charity to be carefully noted on the hospital record. He can hang that achievement on the wall, right now."

Similarly, in a Washington Post column, David Broder wrote, "What is clear is that both Clintons have earned a world of credit for bringing the proposal to the point where it can be debated." Broder also wrote that Hillary Rodham Clinton "is definitely there. And that's of benefit not just to the president, but to the country."

Charles Krauthammer's Washington Post column said the President is "hiding the cost," and that new taxes, regulatory bureaucracies, and price controls "are all in the plan, in disguise." (WP)

A New York Times editorial endorsed an employer mandate with a longer phase-in, recommended very loose premium caps, recommended a threshold of 500 employees for employers to opt out of purchasing cooperatives, and suggested a tax on high-cost health plans.

A Washington Post editorial said, "The administration has made an extraordinary proposal. It deserves, on the part of both parties, a kind of scrutiny and debate seldom seen in Congress. They say on the Hill that they want to resurrect their reputation. Mr. Clinton has given them a chance."

A USA Today editorial said, "Many women already have abortion coverage; it would be unfair to reduce it."

A Chicago Tribune editorial said, "Can it really be necessary to take apart and put together again the entire health care system in order to cover 37 million uninsured -- 15 percent of the population? We are, as the president said, embarked on an epic journey. Let us hope that it ends in national triumph, not tragedy."

HEALTH CARE POLLS -

"Nationally, initial public reaction to the president's health care proposals was cautiously favorable." (WP) The Washington Post-ABC News poll taken after the Wednesday speech showed that 56% of all respondents approve of the President's plan. Of those who saw or heard the President's address, 67% approve. (WP) Sixty-four percent of all respondents and 77% of those who heard the speech said the President's plan is better than the current system. (WP) Forty-five percent said they would support an increase in taxes to help pay for the plan; 52% of those who saw or heard the speech supported a tax increase. (WP) Of all respondents, 57% said most Americans will pay more for health insurance, and 42% said quality will stay the same. Of those who watched the speech, 54% said most Americans will pay more for insurance, and 42% said quality would remain the same. (WP)

The CBS poll indicated that 53% said the President's plan will improve health care, and 51% thought health care would cost more under the President's plan. (CBS)

A USA Today/CNN/Gallup poll taken after the speech found that 55% supported the President's plan; 76% of Democrats, 62% of women, and 61% of senior citizens supported the plan. (USA Today)

After meeting with the President, Lee Iacocca said Ross Perot is "completely wrong" to claim free trade with Mexico means 5 million lost U.S. jobs. (USA Today) Iacocca said he expects to appear in TV commercials promoting NAFTA but isn't sure what other role he will play.

An Atlanta Constitution editorial said, "Overall, NAFTA will force Mexico to dramatically reform its environmental policy, and give it the means to do so. And it will accomplish those tasks without any negative impact on U.S. environmental protection efforts."

RUSSIA -

Yesterday, Russian President Yeltsin closed parliament's newspaper, voided lawmakers' diplomatic passports and threatened to shut down any local councils that did not heed his order for new legislative actions. (WP)

The Senate "bowed to President Clinton's plea" and approved $2.5 billion in new aid to Russia by 88 to 10. (WP)

Yesterday, the Senate approved $25 million for the West Bank and Gaza Strip and waived existing legal conditions that curtail U.S. contributions to international organizations that help support the PLO. (WP)

Also yesterday, the Israeli parliament voted 61 to 50 to approve the limited Palestinian self-rule agreement, "a solid victory for Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, and wide enough that he can now resist demands for a national referendum or elections." (WP) Likud leader Netanyahu called the vote "a shriveled majority, 61 out of 120," and said, "The coalition is standing on chicken legs." (NYT)

The Washington Post led with the International Olympic Committee's decision to award the 2000 Summer Olympics to Sydney by a two-vote margin over Beijing. Sen. Bradley (D-NJ), said, "This is a good day for those who are struggling for human rights in China and a very proud moment for the Olympic movement." (WP)

The New York Times led with a report that the FCC's announcement of its rules for an auction of the nation's airwaves to provide a new generation of wireless services.

AMTRAK ACCIDENT -

Yesterday, Secretary Pena ordered the Coast Guard to review rules of navigation and licensing of towboat captains in inland waterways. (WP)

In the Keith Meinhold case, U.S. District Court Judge Hatter said Secretary Aspin and other senior defense officials must "show cause, if any, why you should not be held in contempt for continuing to enforce the Department of Defense's policy regarding gays and lesbians." (WP)

Rep. Hunter (R-Ca.), proposed an amendment to the '94 Defense authorization bill that would reinstate the practice of asking recruits about their sexuality. (WP) Secretary Aspin urged members to reject the amendment in letters yesterday. (WP)

PEACEKEEPING POLICY -

In a speech to the National War College, Ambassador Albright said, "This administration believes that...young men and women should not be sent in harm's way without a clear mission, competent commanders, sensible rules of engagement and the means to get the job done," outlining what the Washington Post called "stiff conditions" for U.S. troops participating in U.N. peacekeeping operations. She also said the U.N. must overhaul the way it plans and runs peacekeeping operations. (WP)

Yesterday, national security advisers and other Administration officials visited Congress and met with the House and Senate leadership and key lawmakers involved in foreign and defense policy. (NYT) Sen. Nunn said, "My big question will be not how we go about it, what our goals are, but how do we get out [of Bosnia] if the parties begin fighting again?" (NYT) Sen. Nunn told a group of editors and reporters of the New York Times that the U.S. must not repeat the mistakes made in Somalia. (NYT)
