PERSONAL December 18, 1996

Dear Mrs Clinton,

I want you to know how much Sam and I enjoyed our visit to The White House this past Saturday evening.

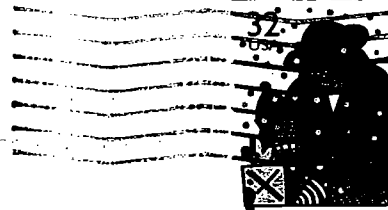

It was my first time in The White House and I was impressed with the lovely Christmas decorations as well as the gracious manner in which we were received by you and President Clinton.

As I mentioned, Sam continues to desire to head a humanitarian effort to Iraq to assist the starving and dying children of that country. It is our pleasure that you, also, recognize the need for adequate food, medicine, and in general the nurturing of these children. I would personally consider it an honor to help in any effort you might sponsor to alleviate the suffering of the children of Iraq.

With best wishes for the Holiday Season, I am

Sincerely yours,

Dear Hillary:

Beth and I want to congratulate you, Bill and Chelsea on Tuesday's victory. We were honored to be part of the celebration and enjoyed being with you. It was like waiting for your final exam grades or bar examination results. You worked hard and deserved it! Though not profound, Jackie Gleason said it best, "How sweet it is!"

I've enclosed a blurb from the Chicago Daily Law Bulletin that contains some comments Mike Conway and I made. I hope you find it supportive in the work you and the whole Clinton Administration will be doing during the next four years and beyond.

Again, Beth and I congratulate you all.

Sincerely,

Heading south, hoping for a victory bash

By CAROL McHUGH SANDERS
Law Bulletin staff writer

Two local lawyers are among the FOB traveling to Little Rock, Ark., to be with Bill and Hillary Rodham Clinton as election results are tallied across the country Tuesday night.

Arlington Heights attorney George T. Drost and his wife, Beth, will be among Hillary Clinton's Maine South High School classmates who are making the trip south, while Hopkins & Sutter partner Michael Conway, a law school classmate of both Clintons at Yale University, also plans to join the gathering in the Arkansas capital.

Drost, a partner in the Arlington Heights firm of Drost & Kivlahan Ltd., said his wife's group of Maine South High School friends, who had dinner with the Clintons in Chicago when the couple attended the Democratic Convention in August, will be on hand in Little Rock showing support for the famous classmate. "She really has not lost her roots," Drost said of the first lady, calling her a "gracious, kind, inclusive" person.

Conway, who met the Clintons at Yale in 1972, said he still has his canceled $10 check for the 1974 "Clinton for Congress" campaign. Clinton lost that election but won the Arkansas attorney general race the following year.

Conway has since been "adopted" by Hillary's high school classmates, he said. This is the litigator's second trip to Little Rock to watch the election results with the Clintons. And, he says he hopes this trip has fewer glitches than the one four years ago, when he missed a flight, arrived late and had to hunt down a substitute for the hotel room he had reserved.

Even so, Conway says he had a wonderful time on the previous trip and even had a chance to talk to the president-elect at a victory party thrown by Clinton's mother, the late Virginia Kelley.

The Drosts, Conway and others in the contingent will stay over Tuesday night in Little Rock at the Excelsior Hotel, which, like most of the city's hotels, requires a three-night minimum stay for guests staying on Tuesday.

"You have to pay for three nights to stay for one," said Drost. "It leads to a little bit of an economic boomlet for Little Rock."

A clip job?

Counsel for a hair transplant clinic was expected to ask a federal judge for $209,000 in attorney fees and $30,000 in costs at a Monday afternoon hearing in a case in which the judge already sanctioned the other side for conduct.

District Judge Milton I. Shadur conducted on his client's motion for sanctions in August. Shadur, in an Oct. 23 memorandum opinion and order, ruled that defendants Dr. Carlos Puig and his medical group and their former attorney, Michael Lee Tinaglia, should be sanctioned for misrepresenting matters to Shadur at a prior telephonic hearing.

The lawsuit filed by Cleveland Hair Clinic seeks a declaratory judgment and damages for breach of contract and fiduciary duty against Puig, a doctor of osteopathy, who wanted to terminate his long-term relationship with the clinic. The doctor's group performed the hair transplants for the clinic.

Shadur's opinion concentrates on events between June 28 and July 2, when Cleveland Hair's lawsuit was already pending in federal court. Cleveland Hair learned that another osteopathic doctor who worked with Puig's group was going to file a state-court action premised on the same facts as the federal court action, according to Rutkoff. Tinaglia, according to Shadur's opinion, had drafted the state-court complaint on behalf of Dr. Rodney Haenschen, and that suit was then filed by another Loop lawyer and friend of Tinaglia's.

Shadur found that Tinaglia had made misrepresentations to the court during the hearing by failing to disclose his involvement in the state-court lawsuit.

Rutkoff later learned that the other action had been filed when one of his partners saw it in a published list of new suits. The suit was filed at nearly the same time that Shadur was conducting the telephonic hearing with Tinaglia, Rutkoff said. The papers filed in state court, according to Shadur's opinion, included Tinaglia's fax machine markings on them. The state-court action later was dismissed voluntarily, Rutkoff said.

Shadur ruled that Tinaglia's answers concerning his knowledge of the state-court action was "not untruthful in the narrow literal sense," but amounted to a "misleading omission."

Tinaglia, of the Park Ridge firm of Di Monte, Schostok & Lizak, later withdrew as counsel for Puig and his medical group. Thomas L. Brejcha, a partner at Abramson & Fox, now represents Puig and his medical group, while Thomas Ging represents Haenschen. Neither Brejcha nor Ging could be reached for comment Monday morning.

Tinaglia is represented by Jerome H. Torshen of Torshen, Spreyer & Garmisa, who declined to comment on the case.

As I think of the furnace of fury you are enduring, I'm also reminded of II Corinthians 12:9, "My grace is sufficient: for my strength is made perfect in weakness."

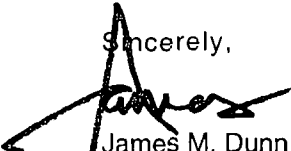

I don't want this caring note to sound like "Been there! Done that!" But I think I can identify with being publicly attacked, lied about, one's motives distorted and one's character, theology and personal integrity impugned. For the last 15 years the Southern Baptist Convention has made me their designated hitee.

Hey! You'll live through it. You'll be better. You'll be stronger and wiser, but you will never be the same.

The tough part is not what your enemies say, it is the silence, the sitting on hands and the failure to speak up of folks you loved and trusted.

We at the Baptist Joint Committee and thousands of others are praying for you. We're ready, willing and energized to do what we can to be supportive and concretely helpful. Please call on us. But most important, remember, He said, "My grace is sufficient."

Dear Hillary,

Election Day at last!

I know we will be successful

I have been doing a lot of Thinking. I believe I can be helpful continuing to work on the various issues that I have been concentrating on during the past year. I am very interested in working in the White House Counsel's office - regardless of the sacrifice involved.

I hope you'll give this some thought and discuss it with the President

My very best wishes to you and the President

Best regards,

Honorable William Clinton
President of the United States
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Mr. President:

I have only one suggestion on the character issue, in case it comes up. It has consistently worked for me on the various shows. It is: Character is an affirmative issue for you. There is no reason to be defensive. Here's what I consistently say:

"I support President Clinton primarily because of his character.

It takes character to stand up to the NRA in support of the Brady Bill and the ban on assault weapons -- in contrast to Senator Dole.

It takes character to stand up to the tobacco lobby in favor of protecting our children from the perils of tobacco addiction -- in contrast to Senator Dole.

It takes character to stand up to the polluters and spoilers of our air and water and land in favor of preserving our environment -- in contrast to Senator Dole.

And it takes character to defend the fundamental right of women to choose -- in contrast to Senator Dole, who supports amending the United States Constitution to eliminate that right. It was Senator Dole who caved in to the extremists of the Christian Coalition when he agreed to eliminate the word "tolerance" from the Republican platform plank on abortion.

The American people have known for a long time that President Clinton is not a perfect person. He is the first to admit that. Senator Dole's private life and private relationships have been far from perfect. The American people are not making their judgments concerning either man on this basis. Nor should they.

Rather, in the final event, the American people have shown that they want their President to demonstrate character on the issues and concerns they care about most -- that affect their lives most deeply. And that, in my judgment, is the primary reason why President Clinton has enjoyed such a substantial support compared to Senator Dole in this campaign."

Honorable William Clinton

Dear Hillary:

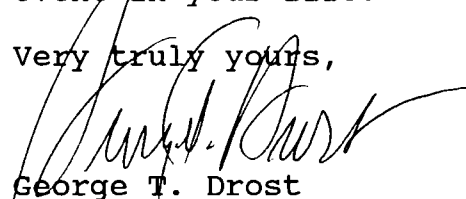

Beth and I want to thank you again for including us in your Convention week plans. Both the dinner and being there to hear your speech were great.

I also wanted to report that I recently returned from the Czech Republic on a legal education project. I brought some of the Convention and dinner photos. They were a great hit. You are greatly admired there, both within the American and Czech communities. People also fondly remember your visit to Prague in July.

I have enclosed an American Flag pin made of Czech glass which will fit nicely on your lapel. Also enclosed is a nice article which reported your visit to Prague.

We will see you in Little Rock to celebrate the next great event in your life.

Very truly yours,

Dear Hillary:

We're in our second week of vacation here — reading headlines like "Clinton in treno a caccia di voti."

We've been with good friends throughout and that makes Italy all the more wonderful: farm houses in rural Tuscany, lovely apartments in Rome and Milan. The boys have been very good.

All best wishes for the campaign! — which will be tough I'm sure.

Dear Ms. Cicetti:

I'm sending along a copy of my new book, "Getting a Life: America's Challenge to Grow Up," in the hope that you'll pass it along to Mrs. Clinton. Melissa Ludtke (my good friend and unofficial editor) gave the First Lady the galley several months ago and thought a signed copy of the "real thing" might be appreciated.

Certainly many of the themes the First Lady sounded at the convention are echoed in the voices and concerns of the people I met out on the road; the voices that fill the pages of my book. I think she might find it a relevant read.

All best and thanks for your consideration.

Getting a Life

America's Challenge to Grow Up

Leslie Dreyfous

This book is about growing up, getting a grip, giving a damn. And it's about the many people, in most cases strangers, who helped me finally to understand that there is no happy hearth waiting over some next hill. Home does not come in a bolt from heaven, nor is it some new gimmick on sale down at the mall. It's the way we live in the world every day, the plot of land that, side-by-side with others, we painstakingly tend.

As a reporter for The Associated Press, Leslie Dreyfous set out across America to investigate this country's obsessive search for happiness. Along her way, Dreyfous found people like Bob and Ann Echols, whose hard-earned financial prosperity was shadowed by the death of Bob's son from AIDS and who knew that happiness is about how well you get up off your knees. She met the Reverend K. Alfred Sloan, who preaches that "two are better than one"; Rachelle Burk, who finds true love and new perspective on her obsession with weight loss; W. T. Turner, who teaches Florida convicts roofing and a few moral lessons on the side—"like a daddy would," he says.

Much more than a travelogue, Getting a Life is an insightful and inspiring look at and listen to America's much-vaunted, too seldom heard "silent majority." Dreyfous's subjects are ordinary people who, facing the ultimate price of reneging on citizenship and responsibility, are meeting the challenge to grow up. More than just getting a life, they are building communities for themselves, their families, the future.

About the Author: Leslie Dreyfous joined The Associated Press in 1988 and was a national writer from 1990 until her departure in 1996. She has covered stories around the nation, from the North Pole to Bosnia, and in 1994 was awarded a prestigious Nieman Fellowship at Harvard University. Over her years reporting for the AP, she crisscrossed the country on myriad assignments, among them two in-depth series: one on Americans' relentless pursuit of individual happiness and another on the equally deep yearning for community connectedness and home.

Politics Tips the Scales in Whitewater

GERALDINE FERRARO: [voice-over] Tonight, Susan McDougal is sentenced to prison in the Whitewater case. Prosecutor Ken Starr says justice was served, but others charge partisan politics.

BOBBY McDANIEL, Susan McDougal's Attorney: From the beginning, it's been absolutely clear that the purpose for the prosecution of Susan McDougal was a means of getting at Bill and Hillary Clinton period.

GERALDINE FERRARO: Good evening, and welcome to Crossfire.

[voice-over] Today, in Little Rock, Arkansas, Susan McDougal, a partner in the Whitewater Development Company, was sentenced to two years in prison for loan fraud and was also ordered to pay the $300,000 loan with interest, to pay a $5,000 fine, and to serve three years of probation on release from prison. Her attorney, Bobby McDaniel, responded with a blistering attack on the special prosecutor Kenneth Starr charging that his client was a pawn in a political power play designed to hurt President Clinton's reelection. McDaniel said that, if Susan McDougal had had incriminating evidence against the President and first lady to trade with the special prosecutor, she wouldn't be looking at prison time. Yesterday, Jim Guy Tucker, the former governor of Arkansas, was sentenced to probation for his involvement in the business deal, and Jim McDougal, the principal player in the scheme, has had his sentencing postponed until November as he purportedly makes a deal to cooperate with the prosecutors.

[on camera] So, tonight, was Susan McDougal singled out for harsh treatment because she wouldn't or couldn't cooperate, and was justice meted out in an Arkansas courtroom or was politics tipping the scales?

Bob.

ROBERT NOVAK: Lanny Davis, you're a lawyer, officer of the court. Do you really think it serves much purpose to be defaming the legal system to— saying that she's a pawn in a game when she was convicted by a jury of her peers in Arkansas, which wasn't easy, and a judge— a federal judge appointed by Jimmy Carter gives her a sentence? Why trash our legal system?

LANNY DAVIS, Attorney: Because there's discretion in the prosecutor about what sentence to ask for. Starr asked for a sentence to send her to prison when she was a tangential figure, and her lawyer quoted Mr. Jahn. Starr's chief prosecutor, when he was asked, "What are you looking for?" and Mr. Jahn said, "We're looking for information about Bill and Hillary Clinton." The fact that she wouldn't lie and she wouldn't involve the Clintons clearly says to me that Mr. Starr has a political objective here, not a prosecutorial one. That's why he sent her to prison.

ROBERT NOVAK: Let me give you another theory that I'd like you to conjecture upon. Her lawyer is Bobby McDaniel who has been attacking Republican gangsters. I don't know what kind of lawyer you are, but— I don't know whether you talk that way in court about the prosecution, but Bobby McDaniel is part of the whole Clinton gang, isn't he?

LANNY DAVIS: I have no evidence or basis for—

ROBERT NOVAK: Maybe you're part of it, too, though.

LANNY DAVIS: I'm proudly part of the Clinton gang.

ROBERT NOVAK: Yeah, but isn't he—

LANNY DAVIS: No.

ROBERT NOVAK: Seriously, Lanny, isn't— I mean, everybody down— all the— I just got— talked— through talking to some reporters down there, and they all know that— they exchange information. Don't you think she was poorly served by a lawyer who wasn't representing her interests but Bill and Hillary Clinton's interests?

LANNY DAVIS: I'm told you're part of the Jack Kemp gang, as a matter of fact.

ROBERT NOVAK: I'm part of the capital gang.

LANNY DAVIS: Bob, the fact is you have a defense lawyer who said to the prosecutor, "My client won't lie to achieve your political objectives and—"

ROBERT NOVAK: You've said that.

LANNY DAVIS: "—involve Bill and Hillary Clinton." No. McDaniel said to Starr and to Jahn, "We won't lie to help your political objectives." That's not being part of the Clinton gang. That's being honest to his professional and to his ethical obligations.

ROBERT NOVAK: Are you saying— are you saying— now they have postponed James McDougal— Jim McDougal's sentencing until after the election. Are you saying that these people are going to take his kind of evidence and, if they don't think it's credible, they're going to give him an easy time anyway because he lied to them? You're not saying that. You don't believe that about a former solicitor general of the United States.

LANNY DAVIS: I'm saying— I'm saying that even Bob Novak— even Bob Novak should question the conflicts of interest and the political agenda of a prosecutor who represents the tobacco interests, who has—

ROBERT NOVAK: We're back on that again.

LANNY DAVIS: —who has a number of political ideological connections to the Republican Party, who has contributed money to his firm's PAC which supports Robert Dole, who decides to not sentence for 90 days James McDougal while he sends Susan McDougal to prison because she won't implicate the Clintons.

ROBERT NOVAK: All right. We'll talk about that more.

GERALDINE FERRARO: Well, let me— let me pick up a little bit about it so I can follow up on that. Let me just— in his conversations with the prosecutor, with Jahn, Jahn said that what he would do is he would get Susan McDougal probation, he would drop the theft proposal, he would make sure the tax-liability issue was settled. I

1, all of that is a real bargain, and he's quoted as saying, "You know the focus of our investigation is Bill and Hillary Clinton." Don't you think Kenneth Starr is kind of out of control in trying to pursue Bill and Hillary Clinton by using Susan McDougal in this instance?

TOD LINDBERG, "Washington Times": Well, no. In fact, I— if you look at the course of this prosecution, I think it's hard to reach any other conclusion except that it's proceeding according to the evidence and what evidence is being uncovered. I mean, of course, when you convict somebody, you subsequently talk to them about cooperating, particularly when you have the impression that they haven't been cooperating. That's what prosecutors do, Gerry. Come on. It—

GERALDINE FERRARO: I was a prosecutor.

TOD LINDBERG: Well, I— and I'm sure you were a very good one, and I'm sure that, in the course of your prosecuting, you talked to people who were in—

ROBERT NOVAK: That was—

GERALDINE FERRARO: After a conviction, you go to sentencing, and you don't base your sentencing solely upon whether or not a person—

TOD LINDBERG: The prosecu—

GERALDINE FERRARO: I mean, you don't go that far, to say, "I'll make sure that I get you off with probation," and instead slap her with two years in jail and—

TOD LINDBERG: Look, Web Hubbell—

GERALDINE FERRARO: —thousand-dollar fines.

TOD LINDBERG: —when he went up the river for his indiscretions at the Rose Law Firm, got a prison term of, what, 21 months? Isn't that right? This is not out of line, given the amount of fraud that we're talking about, given the givens. What is interesting and what is always a possibility is a witness who— whom prosecutors believe to have knowledge about something being offered something in exchange for that. That's—

GERALDINE FERRARO: Don't you find it—

TOD LINDBERG: That's how prosecution works.

GERALDINE FERRARO: Don't you find, though, that the— that the chronological delay in the sentencing itself is a little bit unusual? Usually, when a person is sentenced, either they're remanded because they're a threat to society, or they're given time pending appeal. They're given a stay pending appeal. Here, she wasn't given a stay pending appeal. She wasn't put immediately in jail. Instead, what they did is they said, "We'll give you two months to sit down and vegetate a little bit about this and to think about this and to maybe come up with something that we can use against the Clintons."

TOD LINDBERG: Well, sure, yeah, I— look—

GERALDINE FERRARO: Don't you think that—

TOD LINDBERG: No, I think—

GERALDINE FERRARO: —that's a little unusual?

TOD LINDBERG: No, I don't think that's particularly unusual. I think the bottom line here is that the prosecutors in this case are in the process of gathering information. It's been extremely difficult for them to do that, that there have not been a lot of people who are willing to talk candidly about what they know, that there are memory lapses, that there are all kinds of other difficulties.

GERALDINE FERRARO: Should she lie?

ROBERT NOVAK: Wait a minute. Wait a minute. Can I— I think Lanny Davis and I can clear this up.

LANNY DAVIS: Let's.

ROBERT NOVAK: Lanny, let's just review the bidding. The special prosecutor— the independent counsel was named by a court under law, and the independent counsel was not named to investigate the McDougals or Jim Guy Tucker, right?

LANNY DAVIS: Correct.

ROBERT NOVAK: Why would they— why do they have a special prosecutor?

LANNY DAVIS: Actually, he was named to investigate a transaction called Whitewater and its impact on the federal tax dollars Madison Savings & Loan—

ROBERT NOVAK: No, that isn't why. That would have been done by the Justice Department. Come on. I—

LANNY DAVIS: Well, because of the possible involvement—

ROBERT NOVAK: You can do better than that. Why did they name an independent counsel?

LANNY DAVIS: Because of the possible involvement of the President and—

ROBERT NOVAK: Ah! So the President from the very—

LANNY DAVIS: Possible involvement.

ROBERT NOVAK: So the President from the very beginning has been a target, and you say shocking, shocking that this should— that he should be a target. That's why we have an independent counsel, for goodness sakes.

LANNY DAVIS: Fortunately—

ROBERT NOVAK: Am I Alice in Wonderland?

LANNY DAVIS: Fortunately, Alice in Wonderland and Bob Novak have one thing in common. You forget the presumption of innocence and due process.

ROBERT NOVAK: No! But that's— that's the way prosecutors work!

LANNY DAVIS: The special prosecutor is supposed to be objective, non-political, look at the evidence. He's not supposed to hold a press conference and talk about an aggressive grand jury investigation in Washington, which is what Ken Starr did yesterday. He's not supposed to leak information to Senator D'Amato about fingerprints that are only inculpatory but not exculpatory.

ROBERT NOVAK: Well, you don't have evidence about that.

LANNY DAVIS: There is no question I do have evidence that Ken Starr sent up to Senator D'Amato information that only the grand jury knew about, fingerprint evidence.

TOD LINDBERG: Look— look, we can talk about Ken Starr—

LANNY DAVIS: This is a political prosecution.

TOD LINDBERG: Yeah, but what actually— what actually happened is the 12 people in Little Rock weighed the evidence in this case and convicted Jim McDougal, Susan McDougal and Jim Guy Tucker.

LANNY DAVIS: And also said—

TOD LINDBERG: Politics is not the issue in that courtroom. It never has been the issue in that courtroom.

GERALDINE FERRARO: Let me—

TOD LINDBERG: Another thing, Gerry— now, look, where did she— where did this wondrous, virtuous Susan McDougal come from? She's a convicted felon. She participated in fraud. Now you say—

GERALDINE FERRARO: OK. Let's talk—

TOD LINDBERG: Would she lie? She's been lying. That's the point that the prosecutors—

GERALDINE FERRARO: Let's talk a little bit about Susan McDonald. First of all, when she—

ROBERT NOVAK: McDougal.

GERALDINE FERRARO: McDougal. When she first got involved in this whole thing in 1978, she was a 22-year-old kid who was married to an older man who was a person who had been dealt in— dealing in real estate. I mean, how many— how many young wives would say to their husbands, "No, I'm not going to sign the paper." When she was— the matter for which she was indicted and convicted— she was 30 years old. This guy shoves papers in front of her, tells her to sign. Do you know how many wives do that in this country? So you're sitting there saying convicted felon.

ROBERT NOVAK: Well, let me—

GERALDINE FERRARO: Yes, she is, but—

ROBERT NOVAK: Let me ask you another legal question, Counselor.

GERALDINE FERRARO: —don't you think this is excessive?

TOD LINDBERG: I'm sort of baffled at the notion that you can sort of— you can put the whole thing off on to a husband and a young, unknowing wife— (crosstalk) Well, I think people— I think people have to be responsible for what they do and there is no particular—

LANNY DAVIS: That is factual. She was tangential. She had very little to do with the transaction. It is factual that they put on very little evidence against her. Her going— being sent to jail for two years is disproportionate. It's being used to try to twist her arm to lie and to implicate the Clintons, and you know that.

ROBERT NOVAK: Counselor, there is no waiver up to the age of 30, such as Gerry was talking about, is there?

GERALDINE FERRARO: Now I'm not suggesting that for one minute.

ROBERT NOVAK: I mean, she's liable under the law.

GERALDINE FERRARO: I'm not suggesting that for one minute.

ROBERT NOVAK: Well, the— I'm very glad. Let me ask you one other thing. If this is such a terrific political vendetta, why would the independent counsel, Judge Starr, say that, because of the election, he was not going to bring any indictments from now on until after the election? Why would he say that?

LANNY DAVIS: Well, I haven't heard him say that. If he said that, that would be improper. (crosstalk) No, I— that would be improper. He ought to do his job.

ROBERT NOVAK: He said— he said that is Justice Department practice, which, indeed, it is.

LANNY DAVIS: He ought to do his job regardless of the election.

ROBERT NOVAK: Don't you know that that's Justice Department practice, that you don't play politics?

LANNY DAVIS: I didn't think he ought to play politics. I don't think the Justice Department is wrong on that, but he shouldn't decide, on the other hand, to leak and to have his prosecutorial staff leak information during the conventions. That is a political leak.

ROBERT NOVAK: All right. All right. We're going to have to take a break, and when we come back, we'll try to find out whether the White House hit team has put its target— has put in its target once again Judge Starr.

BILL HENLEY, Susan McDougal's Brother: She was pushed by both David Hale and her husband, Jim McDougal, to sign documents, and now she's going to be the only one possibly to serve time on this matter. The governor goes home, house arrest. What have we come to in this nation?

KENNETH STARR, Whitewater Independent Counsel: The judge takes each instance for all of its facts and all of its circumstances, and he comes to the judgment that he thinks is the correct one.

ROBERT NOVAK: Welcome back to Crossfire.

In the Whitewater trial in Little Rock, the federal judge today threw the book at Susan McDougal, but was he aiming at Bill Clinton?

We're talking to attorney Lanny Davis and to Tod Lindberg of The Washington Times.

Gerry.

GERALDINE FERRARO: Thanks, Bob.

Jurors who convicted the McDougals and Governor Tucker said that, if Jim McDougal hadn't testified, they probably wouldn't have convicted him. They thought he was a terrible liar. If, indeed, Jim McDougal changes his testimony that the Clintons had nothing to do with the whole situation in Whitewater, I mean, where does his credibility go? Who could possibly believe him?

TOD LINDBERG: Well, I can tell you, obviously, he's exactly the kind of witness against you that you want on the stand as a defense lawyer because you want to take him apart and you're going to examine all of his inconsistencies and his general flakiness and all the rest. Nobody is trying to— I think— and if Ken Starr is trying to do this, he's seriously mistaken. Nobody's trying to paint this guy as some sort of sterling paragon of virtue or whatever. It's not going to work, but the question—

GERALDINE FERRARO: But for two years, he's been calling him a liar.

TOD LINDBERG: —but the question is, you know, can we point Starr in directions where he can gather provable facts, evidence and so forth in order to continue this investigation. If he can do that, then he is— you know, he's obviously worth something to this investigation, and if it has to stand on his word alone, obviously, that's a problem.

GERALDINE FERRARO: And it's a problem because he's been calling him a liar for a couple of years. Do you think that if, indeed, this McDougal changes his testimony that—

TOD LINDBERG: Well, there's always— by the way,

Gerry— but there's always the opportunity to redeem yourself and tell the truth, you know.

ROBERT NOVAK: Redemption and salvation.

GERALDINE FERRARO: Well, if indeed—

TOD LINDBERG: That is a great liberal principal. Last I checked anyway.

GERALDINE FERRARO: —he redeems himself and tells the truth, which is different from what he told on the stand, isn't that, indeed, perjury, and shouldn't Starr then move against him for perjury?

TOD LINDBERG: Well, as you well know, under such circumstances, you would probably work out some sort of immunity deal in relation to that kind of thing.

GERALDINE FERRARO: Wow! That is really—

ROBERT NOVAK: You didn't know that? You didn't know that?

GERALDINE FERRARO: Impossible. Impossible.

TOD LINDBERG: This is such a—

GERALDINE FERRARO: Lie once, and you lie—

TOD LINDBERG: This is such a disingenuously pristine view of the law that you are propounding here in order to slam—

GERALDINE FERRARO: Pristine view of the law? Perjury's perjury.

ROBERT NOVAK: Lanny Davis, indulge—

GERALDINE FERRARO: Truth is truth. That's not pristine.

TOD LINDBERG: And deals are deals.

ROBERT NOVAK: Indulge me for a moment because— we've been talking about Ken Starr. A lot of people might think he's some schlockmeister. Ken Starr was a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, the second leading court in the country to preside, and became solicitor general of the United States. He's a Republican, never been very much of a partisan Republican, a very distinguished lawyer, and the White House had been slamming him and hitting him and leaking all their favorite journalist stuff. It wasn't working, and they stopped. They suddenly started saying nice things about him. Now you're slamming him again tonight. My question to you, Lanny, did they— did Stephanopoulos or one of his minions tell you, "We've got to go back and hit Starr again," or is that— are you operating as a free agent?

LANNY DAVIS: You always ask me that, and I want to ask you— will you tell me who your sources are?

ROBERT NOVAK: I ask the questions.

LANNY DAVIS: No, I'm here as a free agent. I'm here—

ROBERT NOVAK: They didn't tell you at the White House to—

LANNY DAVIS: I'm here as an honest lawyer. That's not an oxymoron. An honest lawyer would say that a prosecutor who has— you're wrong about his being a non-partisan. He has partisan connections. He is directly involved with political ideological causes on the conservative side. You know that. The Bradley Foundation.

ROBERT NOVAK: Conservative?

LANNY DAVIS: And you know that he was appointed under circumstances where Fiske was fired, where Jesse Helms and Lauch Faircloth went to Judge Sentelle, and they appointed—

ROBERT NOVAK: That's a libel. That's a slander.

LANNY DAVIS: That is—

ROBERT NOVAK: You have no proof of that.

LANNY DAVIS: They—

ROBERT NOVAK: That is a slander!

LANNY DAVIS: You know that Judge Sentelle had lunch, and as a result of that lunch—

ROBERT NOVAK: You don't know that. That is circumstantial evidence.

LANNY DAVIS: I— if you don't think there's a cause and effect to that lunch—

TOD LINDBERG: Excuse me. Jerry Edwards [sp?] who's the chief judge of the D.C. circuit reviewed the ethics complaint against Judge Sentelle. He is a liberal. He is one of the court's most liberal members. He completely exonerated—

LANNY DAVIS: All right. If you think it was proper—

TOD LINDBERG: Completely exonerated.

LANNY DAVIS: —for Judge Sentelle to have lunch with Lauch Faircloth—

ROBERT NOVAK: Well, wait a minute. Wait a minute.

LANNY DAVIS: —who was criticizing Fiske and then Fiske gets fired—

ROBERT NOVAK: Senator— Senator Faircloth says that they did not discuss it at lunch. They were old friends. He'd punch you right in the nose. I know— you better keep away from him because you're not telling the truth about him.

GERALDINE FERRARO: Let me—

LANNY DAVIS: Let me just make one more comment about—

GERALDINE FERRARO: Go ahead.

LANNY DAVIS: —Ken Starr. He's a professional, and I don't criticize his professional abilities. I do criticize his judgment. He took to prosecution a case in Arkansas with these two bankers that wouldn't be a misdemeanor prosecution anywhere else in the country. He lost.

ROBERT NOVAK: All right. One—

LANNY DAVIS: He named Bruce Lindsey as an unindicted co-conspirator. He didn't have the guts to indict him. Now what is he doing? He's desperate trying to use— [cross talk] —to go after the Clintons.

TOD LINDBERG: I think if you put— if you put Ken Starr's whims next to his losses in the course of his investigation—

LANNY DAVIS: One and one.

TOD LINDBERG: I— well, what about the guilty pleas? Do those not count, Lanny?

ROBERT NOVAK: I want to ask you—

TOD LINDBERG: Those mean nothing? We have people doing some pretty serious time basically because they admitted they did the wrongdoing that they—

ROBERT NOVAK: I want to ask you—

GERALDINE FERRARO: But he didn't get his targets which are the Clintons.

ROBERT NOVAK: What did you think of the statement— I'd like to ask you what— Lanny what you think of the statement by Susan McDougal, "I want to be there at the end when Jim McDougal kicks Starr's butt up between his shoulders." I mean, are these the classy people that you're dealing with, huh?

LANNY DAVIS: I won't comment on her language, but I will comment on the unfairness of her going to prison when Ken Starr is trying to put pressure on her to lie in involving Bill and Hillary Clinton.

ROBERT NOVAK: How about telling the truth about it, though?

LANNY DAVIS: She says telling the truth consistently, as Jim McDougal has said, does not involve Bill and Hillary Clinton and, to this day, Bob Novak, you can't name a single shred of evidence about the Clintons' wrongdoing in Whitewater.

GERALDINE FERRARO: Let me—

LANNY DAVIS: Not one.

GERALDINE FERRARO: Let me just ask you something. Doesn't that whole period of time that things are going to be delayed until September 20th to see whether or not they could get testimony and then delaying of the sentencing of Jim McDougal until November or mid-November— doesn't that little window of opportunity called the election have any sort of impact on what Starr is doing?

TOD LINDBERG: I— no, I think Starr is being careful not to conduct a prosecution in such a fashion that it is going to affect the political process. In fact, I think a lot of people would say that he has been holding back, that he has been delaying in order—in order not to be—

GERALDINE FERRARO: So then you're saying that we will not hear anything more about this whole thing until after the election and, hopefully, we will be able to—

TOD LINDBERG: Well, I actually don't know. I'm sure we're going to hear a lot more about it from the White House. I mean, as Ted Koppel has described it, there has been a steady stream of faxes about Ken Starr out of the White House, and then, as Bob noted, it did stop, and now it clearly has— is starting up again. Look—

GERALDINE FERRARO: So it—

TOD LINDBERG: —if the White House— excuse me, Gerry.

GERALDINE FERRARO: [crosstalk] —the sentencing.

TOD LINDBERG: If the White House truly believes that this man is engaged in a partisan witch hunt against them, it has recourse. It can remove him, and if it's truly partisan as opposed to actually the pursuit of justice, then public opinion would support the President in doing that.

LANNY DAVIS: May I ask you a question? You are—you're a critic of the independent prosecutor. I happen to be someone who supported independent prosecutors. I now am coming to regret that.

ROBERT NOVAK: Well, at least I'm consistent. I've always been against it.

LANNY DAVIS: Let me give you a statistic. Let me give you a statistic for your viewing audience. Forty-one FBI agents, $30 million. More FBI agents investigating this case than investigated the World Trade Center bombing.

ROBERT NOVAK: Can I—

LANNY DAVIS: Isn't something wrong here?

ROBERT NOVAK: Can I make a suggestion that people of your ilk, Lanny—that you loved the independent prosecutor when it was prosecuting Republicans. You hate it when it's prosecuting Democrats. I think it's a bad idea all the time.

LANNY DAVIS: I'm coming to agree with you, I hate to admit that, but—

ROBERT NOVAK: But let me—I want to hear you criticizing it when—

GERALDINE FERRARO: Why don't we just—

TOD LINDBERG: Maybe Dole will sign the legislation to get rid of it.

GERALDINE FERRARO: Why don't we— well, that won't happen because he won't be in the White House, but why don't we just let it go at that since we're all in agreement. And, Tod Lindberg from Washington Times, thank you so much for being with us.

TOD LINDBERG: Glad to be with you.

GERALDINE FERRARO: And, Lanny Davis, thank you again for being with us.

LANNY DAVIS: Thank you, Gerry.

GERALDINE FERRARO: And Bob and I will be right back in a little while. We're going to resolve this whole issue about the sentencing of Susan McDougal.

[Commercial break]

GERALDINE FERRARO: You know, Bob, you mentioned before that I had said that she was 22 when this thing started, 30 when this final fraud action began. I usually don't give anybody a pass on these things, but I do know that, in many instances, women do just sign papers that their husbands put in front of them, and why I feel so very sorry for Susan McDougal— because she's facing a tougher sentence than anybody else and they're holding on to her and she doesn't have anything to give to the special prosecutor.

ROBERT NOVAK: Well, I'll tell you something, you know, I feel sorry for her, too. I feel sorry for anybody who's up against the federal Goliath, and even you, Gerry, if you were up against it, I'd feel sorry for you, but I—

GERALDINE FERRARO: Thank you, Bob. I appreciate that.

ROBERT NOVAK: —but this isn't anything to do with Susan McDougal. This has to do whether there was fraud by the President and the first lady. That's what we're going through. It's a very painful process, and all the faxes coming out of the White House and the hit men—

GERALDINE FERRARO: Well—

ROBERT NOVAK: —from the White House just are to obscure the fact that we have a real problem in this country when the President and the first lady are under investigation.

GERALDINE FERRARO: No one believes that for a minute.

From the left, I'm Geraldine Ferraro. Good night for Crossfire.

ROBERT NOVAK: From the right, I'm Robert Novak. Join us again next time for another edition of Crossfire.

Dear Mrs. Clinton -

Here is the article I mentioned during our dinner in Budapest. It does get into the Out of Africa theories a bit. Hope you find it interesting.

I have a few photos which I will send along - including the 13th a monastery next door to the women's art collective in Tallinn. Fascinating!

Thank you for your generosity on the trip. I got a lot out of it - seeing the other side of the equation after studying Russia for so long.

Sincerely -

Jill Dougherty

HEADLINE: More Recent Migration of Humans From Africa Is Seen in DNA Study

BYLINE: By KAREN FREEMAN

BODY:

WHEN molecular biologists tackle the problem of how modern humans evolved, they do not go on fossil-hunting expeditions as paleoanthropologists do. Instead, they look inward, into human DNA.

The DNA of every species undergoes slow but continuous change. So when molecular biologists find two human populations with very similar DNA at a particular region of their chromosomes, they can say the two populations are closely related to each other. A great degree of difference, on the other hand, would suggest the two groups had separated many thousands of years ago.

Most of this kind of DNA analysis has been done not on the principal store of human DNA, which is held in the nucleus of every cell, but on the DNA of mitochondria, tiny subcomponents of the cell that have their own, much smaller skein of DNA.

Many molecular biologists are now starting to analyze the more complicated DNA from the cell nucleus, and they are coming to the same conclusions drawn from the work on mitochondrial DNA: modern human populations outside Africa are descended from a group that emigrated from Africa quite recently in evolutionary terms.

How recent was that migration? Until now, most DNA studies have set the date at about 100,000 years ago, which seems to agree with the evidence from paleoanthropology, the study of fossil bones. But a study published in the current issue of the journal Nature Genetics dates the migration as much more recent, a mere 20,000 years or so ago.

The research, carried out by Dr. John A. L. Armour at the University of Leicester in England with the help of an international group of colleagues, used DNA samples from people at 11 different places throughout the world.

"All of the genetic data argue that greater than 99 percent of the modern genome comes from Africa very recently," said Dr. Kenneth K. Kidd, a molecular geneticist at Yale University and a co-author of the Nature Genetics paper. "You would need a phenomenally large number of loci studied in a huge number of people to extend that 99 percent to 99.9," he said.

The DNA analyses may help to choose between three rival theories of how

HEADLINE: More Recent Migration of Humans From Africa Is Seen in DNA Study

BYLINE: By KAREN FREEMAN

BODY:

WHEN molecular biologists tackle the problem of how modern humans evolved, they do not go on fossil-hunting expeditions as paleoanthropologists do. Instead, they look inward, into human DNA.

The DNA of every species undergoes slow but continuous change. So when molecular biologists find two human populations with very similar DNA at a particular region of their chromosomes, they can say the two populations are closely related to each other. A great degree of difference, on the other hand, would suggest the two groups had separated many thousands of years ago.

Most of this kind of DNA analysis has been done not on the principal store of human DNA, which is held in the nucleus of every cell, but on the DNA of mitochondria, tiny subcomponents of the cell that have their own, much smaller skein of DNA.

Many molecular biologists are now starting to analyze the more complicated DNA from the cell nucleus, and they are coming to the same conclusions drawn from the work on mitochondrial DNA: modern human populations outside Africa are descended from a group that emigrated from Africa quite recently in evolutionary terms.

How recent was that migration? Until now, most DNA studies have set the date at about 100,000 years ago, which seems to agree with the evidence from paleoanthropology, the study of fossil bones. But a study published in the current issue of the journal Nature Genetics dates the migration as much more recent, a mere 20,000 years or so ago.

The research, carried out by Dr. John A. L. Armour at the University of Leicester in England with the help of an international group of colleagues, used DNA samples from people at 11 different places throughout the world.

"All of the genetic data argue that greater than 99 percent of the modern genome comes from Africa very recently," said Dr. Kenneth K. Kidd, a molecular geneticist at Yale University and a co-author of the Nature Genetics paper. "You would need a phenomenally large number of loci studied in a huge number of people to extend that 99 percent to 99.9," he said.

The DNA analyses may help to choose between three rival theories of how modern humans evolved. There is general agreement on an ancient migration from Africa -- an odyssey by a precursor of modern humans, Homo erectus, who wandered out of Africa one million to two million years ago. The dispute is over what subsequently happened to Homo erectus.

One theory says Homo erectus populations evolved into modern humans in many different regions throughout the world, and that these populations later interbred with each other and with groups that subsequently emigrated from Africa.

Another holds that modern humans migrated out of Africa fairly recently and drove Homo erectus into extinction.

The third theory says that modern humans migrating out of Africa replaced nearly all members of Homo erectus but that there was some interbreeding, leading to the inclusion of some genes from the ancient population in the modern genome.

Dr. Kidd said the great genetic diversity found within Africa today and the great homogeneity outside it argue strongly against the first theory, but that it would be very difficult to rule out the third theory. "We'll never be able to absolutely exclude the possibility that one Homo sapiens man moving into an area found a Homo erectus woman and they had children, and some of those genes are still present," he said.

Not everyone accepts the out-of-Africa thesis. Dr. Alan Templeton, a geneticist at Washington University in St. Louis, argues that the greater genetic diversity found within Africa does not mean that the first theory, called the multiple origin theory, is wrong. He said the proponents of the out-of-Africa "bandwagon" were failing to consider other explanations.

"They're assuming that the level of genetic diversity reflects only the age of a population," he said. "But you would expect Africa to have great diversity because of its greater population sizes. There really wasn't a single event, a splitting of Africans from Europeans and Asians, because they had genetic contact at low levels." The different estimates for the time of the migration out of Africa are not surprising, he said, "because they're trying to put a date on something that never happened."

The time estimates of the researchers who support the idea of a recent African origin for modern humans are based on the idea of a molecular "clock," that the random changes taking place in certain regions of DNA are sufficiently regular over long periods as to constitute a measure of time. The only problem then is to decide how much change in DNA corresponds to how much time, a matter on which experts differ.

The authors of the Nature Genetics paper give 20,000 years ago as their best estimate for the migration out of Africa, but note that changes in their assumptions could yield an older date.

Estimating long-term mutation rates in nuclear DNA is much harder than in mitochondrial DNA, since nuclear DNA is changed by many factors. But it is worth the effort, Dr. Mark Stoneking of Pennsylvania State University believes. Dr. Stoneking is an architect of the African "Eve" theory, based on mitochondrial DNA, holding that the female ancestor of modern humans lived about 200,000 years ago in Africa. Much more information can be gained by looking at nuclear DNA sites, he said, which his group is now doing.

"Mitochondrial DNA is essentially a single gene," Dr. Stoneking said. "A history of a species can differ from the history of a single gene."

Jewish education will be a central focus of Congregation Beth El as it enters the twenty-first century. The renewed and renovated Religious School wing, combined with a top quality Jewish education for children and adults, will lead the way in the ongoing revitalization of this historic congregation.

The Beth El Religious School wing is home to nearly two hundred people every Sunday morning studying Jewish history and practices and experiencing the beauty of Jewish life. In addition, the Religious School wing is used by students of the United Hebrew School during the week, for Shabbat and High Holy Day children's services and activities, and for frequent youth group programming.

In its new design, the Religious School facility will have a new entrance and lobby, ten modern classrooms, a newly-constructed library, an outdoor succah, and space to house the most creative and up-to-date Jewish educational resources.

Dear Mrs. Clinton:

Congratulations on the re-election of the President and thank you again for taking the time to come to my apartment last week and meet with all those enthusiastic women. You made a very fine impression on all of them and I hope the additional funding raised was of some constructive benefit to the campaign.

I wish to call to your attention the importance of encouraging the nomination of a woman for Secretary General of the United Nations. There are a number of distinguished women who could handle this assignment with skill, not the least of whom would be Madeleine Albright but putting her aside, I think we have two important contenders from geographic areas that heretofore have not been represented in the General Secretary Generalship.

Mrs. Ogata, who is head of the refugee agency in the U.N. is an excellent candidate but would be very hard to get past the Chinese without a veto. My candidate, Senator Leticia Shahani, has all the qualifications and an extraordinary background to bring to this most important job. I have enclosed her curriculum vitae and a good deal of information about her accomplishments.

I don't think the United States is in a position to be too aggressive about this except behind the scenes. I sincerely hope you will give your maximum support to a woman candidate at this point as there is so much tension around the U.S. position regarding the Secretary General. A compromise could be reached with a woman candidate. There are many other possibilities including Prime Minister Gro Brundtland and President Robinson of Ireland. Regrettably, they both come from a geographic area that has already provided us with Secretary Generals. So the logical candidates become Ogata or Shahani.

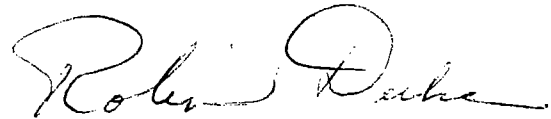

Any opportunities you have to influence the possibility of a woman leading the United Nations would be significant.

Thank you so much again for your presence at the fund raiser in my apartment and again I congratulate you and the President on a very successful race.

I might just add that Senator Shahani and I have worked closely on a number of U.N. conferences and you would be amused to know we were the two lone ladies at the conference on population and development in the Arab world 20 years ago. I won't claim that we made a big hit with the Arabs, but at least we got our toe in the door.

Best luck to you and the President in the next four years.

Sincerely,

Group Says A Woman Should Get Top U.N. Job

By BARBARA CROSSETTE

UNITED NATIONS, Aug. 23 — An international women's organization based in New York is opening a campaign in 75 countries this week-end to get a woman elected Secretary General of the United Nations.

The organization, Equality Now, has selected six candidates from what it says is a pool of "many qualified women around the world." The organization is circulating flyers to its 2,000 affiliated groups worldwide, with pictures of the candidates and the names and addresses of the Security Council delegates who must decide by the end of the year whether Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali will have another term.

The Clinton Administration has vowed to veto an extension for Mr. Boutros-Ghali, but has not named an alternative candidate, leaving a vacuum into which other countries are reluctant to move so long as the Secretary General refuses to withdraw. His term ends on Dec. 31.

Equality Now's potential candidates are Gro Harlem Brundtland, Prime Minister of Norway; Frene Ginwala, Speaker of the South African Parliament; Sadako Ogata, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees; Navanethem Pillai, a South African judge on the Rwanda war crimes tribunal; Mary Robinson, President of Ireland, and Leticia Shahani, President of the Senate in the Philippines.

Equality Now, a private organization, has been at the forefront of campaigns to help immigrant women in the United States and disadvantaged women in developing countries. It has also led the drive to have female genital mutilation recognized as a ground for political asylum. Now, it hopes to generate public awareness of qualified women who could be candidates for Secretary General in United Nations member countries where it has affiliates.

Surita Sandosham, the group's executive director, said the Fourth World Conference on Women, held in Beijing last September, had made a special point of noting that "the United Nations is continuing to deny itself the benefits of women's leadership by their underrepresentation at decision-making levels."

Women in the United Nations say that having a woman at the top might be the most effective way to reform the organization by eliminating at a stroke the old-boy networks that have kept a number of senior civil servants in sinecures for years. Few women have ever penetrated that circle, although women are being moved into more responsible jobs at lower levels.

Rosario Green of Mexico, an Assistant Secretary General for political affairs, is the highest ranking woman in the Secretariat. She is also regarded as a potential Secretary General by some women.

The United Nations has never lived up to the affirmative action pledge made in its Charter in 1945, said Sir Brian Urquhart, a former Under Secretary General who is also campaigning for a new look at how a Secretary General is chosen.

Madeleine K. Albright, the American representative and the only woman on the Security Council, is known to view at least some of the women on the Equality Now list positively, among them Mrs. Ogata, the refugee commissioner.

Mrs. Ogata, who is also looked on favorably by some Republicans in Congress, may be the most popular and respected official in the United Nations system now because of her humane yet strict management style in an agency that has had to cope with an unending series of crises in recent years.

Mrs. Ogata, who is 68, has told reporters that she is not a candidate.

Mrs. Robinson, the Irish President, has come closer than anyone on the list to declaring herself in the race. United Nations officials say she might be a tempting candidate for the Clinton Administration because her nomination would be popular with many Irish-American voters.

Some diplomats say a question remains whether many countries in the world are ready for a woman as Secretary General, since a number of members still deny the vote and other civil rights to women.

A Secretary General is chosen by the 185-member General Assembly on the recommendation of the 15-member Security Council.

Senator with an eye for higher office

DIPLOMACY and strong political roots have given Senator Leticia Ramos-Shahani, 67, a headstart in Philippines politics.

She has been mentioned as a potential vice-president — or even president — in the 1998 national election. Her name has also cropped up as Asia's candidate for the post of United Nations Secretary-General.

Mrs Shahani, who is Senate Pro-Tempore or vice-president of the Senate, takes all of it in her stride. She is cautious but determined.

Like her brother, President Fidel Ramos, she seems destined for higher things.

Senator Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo finds Mrs Shahani "profound", serious, and deliberate in her work — qualities that breed leadership.

"She can be stern. She can be charming at will. She can will her image when she makes a decision," said Mrs Arroyo.

Mrs Shahani's elder son, congressman Ranjit Shahani, 34, describes her as "an intellectually bright, socially caring and loving mother".

Those working for her admire her single-mindedness and diligence. Again, like her brother, she exacts discipline at work and demands thoroughness from her staff, right down to options and action lines in their reports.

"She leaves you to your work. She gives you autonomy and that is good because you learn to be independent-minded," said Mr Ronald Gonzales, a staff member in the senator's office.

Her sense of independence, largely due to her foreign education and exposure to different circumstances, came through clearly during the interview in her austere Senate office.

While studying in Paris, at 32, she married Mr Ranjee Shahani, an Indian writer and professor with whom she had three children, Ranjit, Chanda, 32, and Lilia, 28.

But her marital bliss was shattered when her husband died of a stroke.

"I had a short married life. Eight years," said the stern-looking, short-haired senator who could be mistaken for a teacher in her long linen skirt and matching short-sleeved jacket.

"I had to fend for myself. I was a single parent for the past 28 years."

The senator was reluctant to talk about that part of her life, which had clearly devastated her.

She was, however, eager to discuss her childhood days and politics.

"We never grew up in wealth. We were taught discipline and ethics. We were told not to flaunt money, not to waste it."

Mrs Shahani grew up in a middle-class family in a small town of Asingan in the northern province of Pangasinan. Her father, Mr Narciso Ramos, was a journalist turned Congressman and diplomat, who held the post of Secretary of Foreign Affairs before his retirement. Her mother was a high school teacher.

President Ramos is her elder brother and she has a younger sister, Mrs Gloria Ramos-Darroda, who is the Philippine consul in Los Angeles.

Mrs Shahani had her first taste of politics when, as a teenager, she and her brother helped organise campaigns for her father.

"We grew up in politics," she said. But those were the days when politics was simpler and not dominated by money and power.

Soon, she left her hometown for higher studies in America, majoring in English literature at Wellesley College in Massachusetts, gaining a Master of Arts in comparative literature from Columbia University and later a doctorate in Literature from the University of Paris in France.

"I always did what I liked to do. I wanted to read. I wanted to teach."

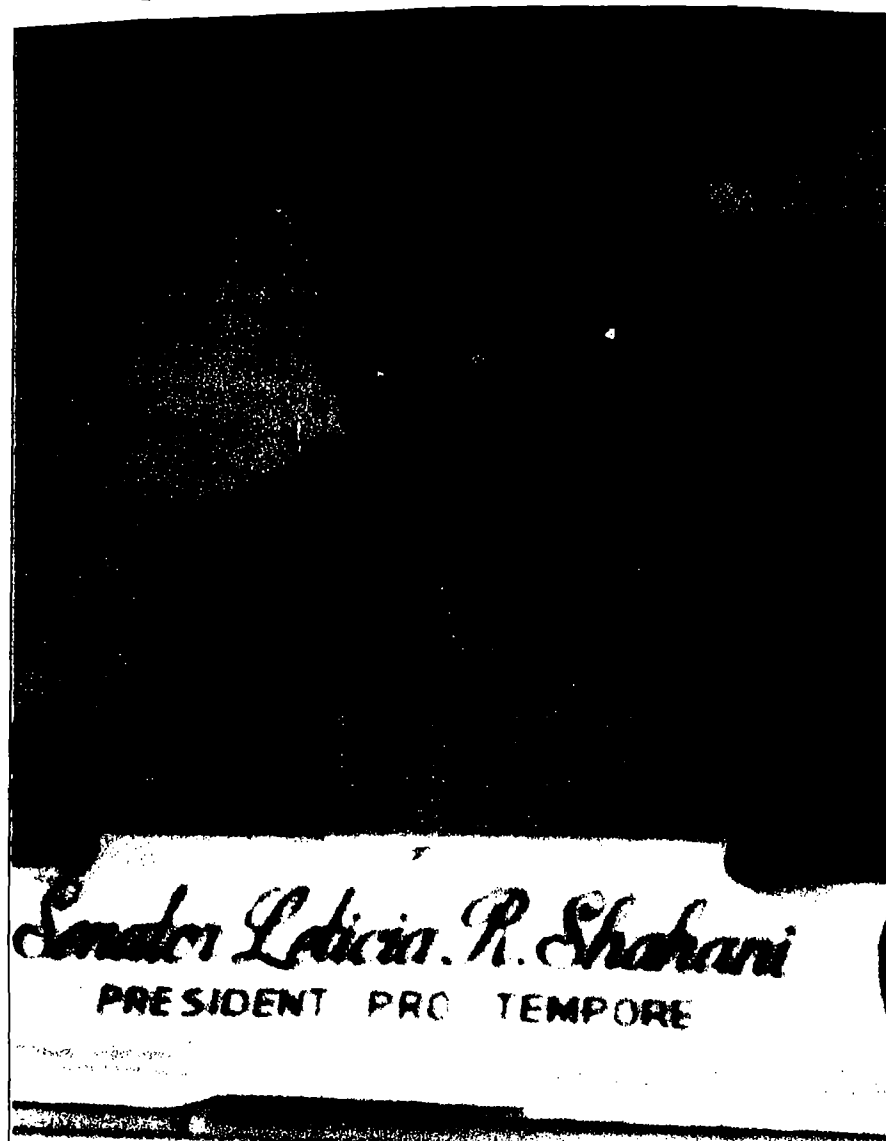

She did both.

Her first job was that of instructor at the University of the Philippines, earning 120 pesos a month. After her doctorate at the University of Paris, she taught French.

She also dabbled in journalism and was a prolific writer. She wrote subjects close to her heart — culture, foreign policy, social development, women and moral recovery.

Her journalistic forays led her to the world of diplomacy. She sat for an examination in the foreign service and, not long after, was on her way to the United Nations. She started out as a professional staff member of the UN Secretariat in

President Ramos' sister and possible successor, Senator Leticia Ramos-Shahani.

1964 and became an assistant secretary-general for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs in 1986.

Politics was then further from her thoughts.

But, in 1986, while she was on leave at the UN, she felt the birth pangs of democracy in her country and responded to the call of national duty. She fought the dictatorial regime of the late president Ferdinand Marcos alongside Mrs Corazon Aquino, then a presidential contender, and gained instant national fame.

When Mrs Aquino became President, Mrs Shahani was appointed Under-secretary of Foreign Affairs.

In 1987, still under the Aquino government, she ran for a legislative post and was elected senator. Her first term of six years has been stretched to another six, until 1998.

"I want to push for as much legislation as I can," said the senator of her work in the legislature.

She authored eight landmark pieces of legislation and was the prime mover in injecting more professionalism into the foreign service. She also helped small and medium enterprises to obtain financing more easily.

Other Bills which she initiated and which are before the Senate concern rape, population, agriculture and maritime affairs.

The list of Bills pushed by the senator clearly demonstrates her support for her brother's economic and social programmes.

"The Ramos administration is doing quite well," said the senator, who barely concealed her fondness for her brother.

Asked if working directly for her brother was too close for comfort, she declared stoutly: "I don't allow our brother-sister relationship to interfere in matters that concern the state.

"It is both an advantage and a disadvantage. It is how you handle it. I don't abuse it. I don't look at it as an official relationship."

Even today, the close sibling bond remains. The President's line is always open to his sister, if she ever needs any advice.

Displaying her admiration for her brother, who is 1½ years older, Mrs Shahani said: "Somehow I knew that he would go far because he was very bright. He was class valedictorian. He was very studious."

President Ramos graduated from the prestigious West Point military institute in the United States.

The senator's son, Ranjit, said the closeness between his mother and uncle was built on the mutual respect they have for each other — both at the personal and political levels.

He credits his mother for taking a key role in influencing his uncle to run for the presidency.

He said the senator is the "epitome of a working mother", ably balancing her career and family life.

The congressman said that, when he was young, his mother was always there for him when he needed her. These days, Mum still makes time to talk to him no matter how busy she is.

"She is a meticulous planner. She works very hard and is up at five in the morning," he said, showing great affection for his mother.

A workaholic, Mrs Shahani is already on the phone and buried in paperwork at her desk at home while many others are still having their breakfast. She goes to the Senate in the afternoon for rounds of meetings and debates. A typical day for her often ends at midnight.

Even on weekends, she keeps up the pace, visiting her constituents in the provinces and holding public hearings on the Senate Bills she has authored.

At the rate the indefatigable senator is going, Ranjit said, he would not be surprised if she got a more powerful position than that of her uncle.

"She may just become the first woman UN secretary-general," he enthused.

Does the senator have that burning ambition for higher office, starting with the presidency in 1998?

"It is still too far away. I will have to wait for the President's decision," she said.

But her detractors said her aloofness might work against her. A top banker said Mrs Shahani lacks the charisma that Filipinos look for in their leaders.

"She is too formal. She lacks the charisma to draw the huge number of votes," said the banker, who did not want to be named.

But the veteran politician is unfazed. "Politics is a matter of timing. I won't be drawn into any kind of premature announcement," she said.

She has the patience to wait.

BODY:

When she was 22 years old, Leticia R. Shahani fell in love with a man 15 years her senior. She spent the next 10 years finishing her studies and shaping her career before she married him. "My feminist philosophy has been shaped by my own life," she said in an interview.

"If a woman wants to achieve in her career, she has to delay marriage."

With 23 years' experience as a career diplomat and international civil servant, the 55-year-old native of the Philippines is no stranger to the demands made upon women in what is still very much a man's profession. As Assistant Secretary General for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, based in Vienna, she is among the highest ranking women in the male-dominated United Nations Secretariat.

But Mrs. Shahani believes that serving as secretary general for the official Decade for Women Conference, which opens here on Monday, outstrips previous professional challenges. "So far, at least," she added, smiling.

Since she was appointed a year ago, Mrs. Shahani has spent much of her time helping to prepare a conference document that looks ahead to what women can hope for economically, politically and socially. She believes such a document must be adopted in some form for the decade to be judged a success. The future of the 372-paragraph position paper is still in doubt, however. Described by delegates and those who helped formulate it as both unwieldy and overlong, it also contains 58 paragraphs to which various delegations object on political grounds.

Mrs. Shahani has overseen long preparatory meetings in an often futile attempt to get intractable parties to compromise. An experienced negotiator, she dismissed as "normal" the disagreements she had with her Algerian deputy, Chafika Sellami-Meslem, over the document's content.

In Nairobi, Mrs. Shahani is the woman in the middle - supervising the United Nations Secretariat staff, resolving protocol decisions, even checking on the availability of typewriters and accommodations for observers.

The New York Times, July 10, 1985

She is also a backstage referee at a political contest that will bring together what United Nations administrators say will be at least 3,000 delegates from about 130 countries. The pressing questions facing the delegates will be: Where has the past decade taken women? And where do they go from here?

Leticia Ramos Shahani was born on Sept. 30, 1929, in Lingayen in the province of Pangasinan in central Luzon in the Philippines, she lived in an upper-middle-class household steeped in politics.

Her father, Narciso Ramos, a journalist and lawyer, served in the First Filipino Congress after independence in 1946 and went on to assume a number of diplomatic posts before becoming Foreign Minister in 1965. Her brother, Lieut. Gen. Fidel V. Ramos, a West Point graduate, was made Acting Chief of Staff of the Philippine armed forces last fall. He replaced Gen. Fabian C. Ver, a cousin and close friend of President Ferdinand E. Marcos. General Ver took a leave of absence in the wake of an investigation into the assassination of the opposition leader Benigno S. Aquino Jr. Mrs. Shahani says she draws her inspiration from her mother, a high-school teacher who campaigned tirelessly for her husband and supported him in his political career. "She was his best campaigner," Mrs. Shahani recalls. "I saw at an early age that a woman could combine work and home."

After attending a local high school, Mrs. Shahani went on to Wellesley College, where she graduated with a degree in comparative literature in 1951. She holds a master's degree from Columbia University and a Ph.D. from the University of Paris.

She taught English and French at the University of the Philippines, and in 1962 married Ranjee Shahani, an Indian writer and journalist.

Shortly afterward, she and her husband moved to New York, where he wrote and taught, and she served as attache in the Philippines' Mission to the United Nations. She entered the United Nations Secretariat two years later as a researcher in the human rights division and the Bureau of Social Affairs.

In 1966, she began to research social and economic development issues for the United Nations' Commission on the Status of Women. Eventually, she chaired that commission.

"I was involved with women's issues when it wasn't fashionable," Mrs. Shahani said. "In those days, a seasoned male diplomat would have been embarrassed to include the subject" of women in his briefing reports. "It was a big joke," she said.

Because she had married an older man, Mrs. Shahani said she turned to a career in diplomacy: "I felt I had to prepare myself for a fallback position, just in case."

Her husband died suddenly in 1969, leaving her with three small children. "In a way, the problem of my career was solved for me because I was widowed," she said. "That's why I was so mobile."

Mrs. Shahani was one of her country's delegates to both the kickoff Decade for Women Conference in Mexico City in 1975 and the midpoint conference in

The New York Times, July 10, 1985

Copenhagen five years later.

She has served concurrently as Ambassador to Rumania, Hungary and East Germany and later as Ambassador to Australia. Since January 1981, she has headed the Vienna-based Center for Social Development in Humanitarian Affairs, a United Nations agency that researches the problems of youth, the disabled, the aging and crime. As part of her responsibility, she is leading the 1985 International Youth Year and will serve as secretary general of the United Nations Seventh Crime Congress to be held in August.

Mrs. Shahani pauses when she talks about feminism. "Feminist? What is a feminist?" she asked. "If you say by feminist a belief in the rights of women and their worth as human beings, then yes, I am a feminist, and a deeply committed one."

Increasing politicization of women's issues, she said, "is part of the evolution of women."

"We can't just talk about nutrition and employment anymore," she explained. "We can argue about equal pay for equal work, but if there is no work, you have to go back to structural imbalances in your country's economy and in the world economic system."

She lamented that women were not well represented in the higher reaches of the United Nations, in large part, she said, because "governments don't put forward the names of good women candidates."

The task of implementing the recommendations of the Decade for Women is also largely up to governments. "If the decade has fallen short of its goals, it's not the United Nations' fault," she said. "It's up to the governments to make things change for women."

UNITE NATIONS, Sept 18 (AFP) - Boutros Boutros-Ghali has no chance of remaining UN Secretary General beyond December 31, the US ambassador to the world body, Madeleine Albright said Wednesday.

At a press conference for foreign correspondents, Albright reiterated the US determination to exercise its Security Council veto power to bar the re-election of Boutros-Ghali.

"We are prepared to use the veto," said Albright. "We hope (Boutros-Ghali) will understand this."

The US representative said that in the eyes of Washington, Boutros-Ghali had failed to bring "reform" to the UN.

She added that a UN secretary-general must have the support of all five permanent members of the Security Council: China, the United States, France, Britain and Russia.

Asked if there was room for compromise after the US presidential election on November 5, Albright said that "the administration will not change its mind," if Clinton wins a second term.

Boutros-Ghali, 73, is seeking a second five-year term.

Albright did not give many details on what type of reforms the United States is after. The United States is at once the largest contributor to the United Nations, and its largest debtor.

For now, candidates are not exactly beating down the door to become UN secretary general.

The Nigerian Hamid Algabid, secretary general of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, announced his candidacy at the beginning of the summer and Leticia Shahani, president of the Philippine Senate, expressed interest in the job Wednesday.

As a general rule, secretary-generals complete two terms. Many African diplomats are worried that if Boutros-Ghali is not re-elected, Africa will lose one of its own at the UN's helm.

No date has been set for the election. Some sources are talking about the latter half of November, while others say it is December.

Filipino Senator Says Secretary-General Must Define UN Role With UN-General Assembly

^By ROBERT H. REID=

^Associated Press Writer=

NEW YORK (AP) _ A Filipino woman senator mentioned as a possible successor to Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali said Monday a new U.N. chief should focus attention on reform and "basic management" of the organization.

Sen. Leticia *Shahani*, a former diplomat, U.N. staffer and sister of Philippine President Fidel Ramos, also said the secretary-general must define a "practical vision of what the U.N. is and is not."

"I would look into the issue of reform," said Mrs. *Shahani*, a member of the Philippine delegation to the 51st annual session of the General Assembly, which opens Tuesday.

"That's what people are waiting for," she said in an interview. "One should go into basic management, the budget, but also develop a very practical vision of what the U.N. is and is not."

The United States has threatened to use its Security Council veto to block a second term for Boutros-Ghali. His current five-year term expires Dec. 31. Several names have been circulated as possible successors, including Mrs. *Shahani*, Undersecretary-General Kofi Annan, Irish President Mary Robinson and Sadako Ogata, head of the U.N. refugee agency.

U.S. officials maintain Boutros-Ghali has been reluctant to initiate reforms, including a streamlining of the U.N. bureaucracy. Some conservative U.S. critics also claim Boutros-Ghali has promoted ideas which infringe on national sovereignty. They cite a proposed U.N. rapid-reaction military force to respond to crises, saying that maintaining standing armies is an exclusive function of nations.

Mrs. *Shahani* said the United Nations had an important role to play in helping the 185 member states cope with problems such as the environment, women's rights and population "within a framework of international law."

"But it is not a world government," she said. She also said the United Nations should carefully review potential peacekeeping missions to restrict such operations to those "which it can deal with."

Mrs. *Shahani* also said the U.N. must explore ways of improving its personnel program to encourage talented employees to stay. The U.N. staff union has complained that the organization lacks a well-organized promotion and incentive program for career staff.

UNITED NATIONS, Sept 18 (AFP) - Philippines Senate President Leticia Shahani said Wednesday she was interested in becoming the next UN secretary-general, but that her government would wait before officially submitting her name.

"We are not challenging the incumbent, but at the appropriate time, the Philippines is interested in putting forward a candidate, and that candidate is a woman, with the name of Leticia Shahani," the 66-year old senator told AFP in an interview.

Shahani, who is a member of her country's delegation to the 51st UN General Assembly session which opened Tuesday, said that the fate of UN Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali was "linked to the election result" of the US presidential poll on November 5.

For that reason, Manila was expected to wait to put her name forward until "the period of nomination," once Boutros-Ghali's position had been clarified.

Washington has vowed to veto a second term for the 73-year old Egyptian, whose current five-year mandate expires on December 31.

But Boutros-Ghali supporters on the Security Council, including France, believe that the US position may change following the November elections, despite protestations to the contrary by Washington.

to the grade of Commander in the Order of Légion d'Honneur
Thursday, June 13, 1996 at 12:45 p.m.

(translated into English by the Alliance Française de Manille on June 28, 1996)

Madame le Président,

It gives me great pleasure to welcome you to Paris.

Your trip to France was contemplated during the very warm talks that President RAMOS and I had in Bangkok and I am deeply delighted that you could make it.

I am even more pleased because your visit allows me to pay homage to a faithful friend of France.

This friendship which links you to our country originated during the years when, as a young scholar of the French government, you prepared and successfully obtained a doctorate in Comparative Literature from the University of Paris in Sorbonne. This attachment was confirmed when you returned to your country. Your action within the Alliance Française de Manille where you taught French, demonstrated the strength of your feelings towards our culture and our language which you like to speak. Therefore, it gives me great pleasure to think that today, back in Paris, you feel at home.

This homage however , Madame, is not only addressed to the friend but also to the woman who, through her talent and hard work, built herself an exemplary national and international career.

You entered the diplomatic service in 1964. As Ambassador of the Philippines, you first went to Romania then to Australia. I am also aware of how important your role was, as Under-secretary of Foreign Affairs, in reorienting the foreign policy of your country towards Europe.

Within the framework of the United Nations, you took on great responsibilities numerous times. You have been appointed Deputy Director General of the Humanitarian Affairs and Development. These duties induced you to play an active role in big international conferences such as last year in Beijing, where you participated in the fourth World Conference for building of a more just international society.

It is with the same conviction and the same determination that in 1987, from your very first election to the Senate, you were deeply involved in the making of a modern democracy in the Philippines.

Women's Rights. Your action for women's rights in Manila as well as as in the United Nations rightfully qualified you for this mission.

I would also like to underline your commitment, in the international scene, to the values we share and which are the bases of democracy; it constitutes a well-appreciated contribution to the

Your important tasks, however, in the Upper House where you preside not only over the Committee on Food and Agriculture, but also over the Committee on Women and Family Rights, did not change the interest you never ceased to show in international affairs. In saying this, I also salute you today as the Vice President of the Philippine Commission to UNESCO who came to Paris on the occasion of the Philippine week organised to honour your country.

Lastly, your visit bears witness to the quality of the links which ties France and the Philippines.

Since the state visit to Paris of President Ramos, your brother, in 1994, our bilateral relations have been really boosted.

The recent meetings of the Franco-Philippine Military Committee and of the Mixed Economic Committee are proofs of this. And I am also sincerely satisfied by the equally increasing number of meetings between the officials of our respective Governments.

In the same way, the recent signing of contracts involving French and Filipino companies boosted our economic and commercial relations.

These positive evolution really partake of the spirit which presides over the new relations that will be established between Europe and Asia after the summit in Bangkok last February and it pleases me.

Everything you have done, Madame, militated in favour of bringing together France and the Philippines. To continue to work for the strengthening of our ties and our friendship is your ambition.

I wholeheartedly endorse this and I wish that you will also regard this ribbon of Commandeur de la Légion d'Honneur, that I am very happy and very proud to confer today to an old friend of France, as a proof of my very sincere esteem, consideration and friendship. To these warm congratulations I am addressing you, I would like to add my utmost encouragement to persevere in the same path under the high authority of President RAMOS for the privileged links between France and the Philippines to be further developed and reinforced, a very dear wish of mine.

Dear Mrs. Clinton,

Enclosed please find my resume, which I am forwarding to your office with the hope that an opportunity for employment might be available for an individual with my interests, international education and professional background.

I am currently in the final semester of undergraduate studies at Georgetown University, School of Foreign Service. I have chosen to major in Foreign Service, with a concentration in International Affairs.

In the early Fall of 1994, I was an invited guest-speaker at the White House during the inaugural ceremonies for the AmeriCorps program. There, I took the opportunity to personally present Mr. Clinton with his invitation to be the keynote speaker by giving the Carroll Quigley Inaugural Lecture during the opening ceremonies commemorating the 75th anniversary of the Walsh School of Foreign Service.

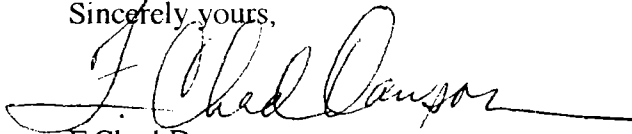

Much of the success which I have enjoyed in the areas that I have outlined for you in my resume are to be attributed to the values and work-ethic that I developed as the youngest member of an African-American family of ten children and two parents. Having grown up in a working-class neighborhood, I learned that hard work, without a solid education, would not suffice in our modern information age. After gaining valuable experiences while serving my country as a member of the U.S. Army in Eastern Europe (110 miles behind the Iron Curtain) and personally witnessing the fall of the Berlin Wall, I recognize a new world in the making and I truly wish to be a part of it in some strategic and international capacity.

I am appealing to you, thoroughly convinced that I can be an asset in the executive branch or in a number of foreign service-oriented departments of government, where I would distinguish myself through efficiency, dedication and purpose. Additionally, I have an extensive foreign language background to offer in an international environment. Any opportunities, of which you might be aware in the executive branch would be of great interest.

I will appreciate any opportunity which may come to the notice of your office, or any suitable other. The receptiveness of your office to me as a citizen and student has been most moving.

Sincerely yours,

F. Chad Dawson
