Mrs. Clinton,

I am sure that you have received a lot of mail regarding health care reform since you have started your task force.

The whole health care problem is so complex that I know there aren't simple answers. I do feel that it is most important to involve people in your fact finding mission who are directly involved in the patient care area so they can tell you what their problems are. It seems that so many people that become involved in changing policy etc. (or are asked to help) are in the administrative level and have not been involved in patient care for a long period of time, and are out of touch.

One of the big problems seems to be with Medicare reimbursement to the hospital or care facility. It appears that the people who work for this agency can come and audit charts and set patient care criteria as they are auditing charts. If the audit then shows to be deficient, reimbursement will not be made. It seems outrageous that reimbursement can be withheld because the criteria were not met, when we didn't know what the criteria were when the pt. was being cared for.

I also feel that a big contributing factor to the spiraling health care costs is the malpractice insurance premiums that the physicians have to pay, which is directly related to the malpractice suits that are being filed. As a nurse I feel strongly that the malpractice issue needs to be addressed as quickly as possible. People are being encouraged to sue for big settlements for reasons that are not necessarily within the physicians fault. I know this is not a popular stance, but lawyers do gain a lot of monetary reward out of malpractice suits. Due to the threat of malpractice suits, physicians do tend to order a lot of diagnostic tests and practice defensive medicine, which is expensive. Even nurses are being encouraged to carry malpractice insurance since patients are now suing nurses, physicians and hospitals. I am not saying that patients should not be allowed to sue but caps on settlements should be set, juries should have medical personnel on them, etc.

I am so happy that you are involved in this. I know it will be an incredible job, but hopefully everything will work out great.

Take care,

Marianne

THE WHITE HOUSE

September 25, 1996

Mr. Norman Fleishman
1430 Palm Drive
Lakeport, California 95453

Dear Norman:

Thank you for your thoughtful letter following my conversation with Benn. Having visited Billings in 1993, I am very familiar with the city's courageous response to hate crimes. Good luck with "Not in our Town!" and I look forward to seeing you again soon.

With warm regards, I remain

Sincerely yours,

Hillary Rodham Clinton

MICROSECOND

August 19, 1996

Hillary Rodham Clinton
The White House
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Hillary,

Our son Benn just called, higher, I think, than we have ever heard him, as he shared the thrill of doing the show...

And then his conversation with you after!

(Of course we were totally unaffected!)

What are we doing?

(I was just about to write you! I said that yesterday to Diana about writing to Dick and Laura - and then went to the mailbox and found the announcement about Jessica!)

(And a "PPS" the way only Laura can write it, after all these years, naming me as the planter of the "seed" for her activism!)

I have a brand-new project, called "Not in our Town!"

It's a spin-off from the 1993 Billings, Montana "incident" of hate crime. I'm sure you know that one by heart: starting with anonymous phone calls and fliers, villifying Hispanics, Indians, blacks, gays and welfare recipients. Special venom for the city's 48 Jewish families. "Staring down" blacks as they attended church, spray-painting Swastikas, and so forth.

Then the cinder block through a child's window - that had the nine-candled menorah displayed - nobody hurt (physically!) but Billings (reserved, rugged individualists, the opposite of "activists!") heard the crash. The Billings Gazette did an editorial side-by-side with a black-and-white picture of a menorah - and a full-page one in color - asking those who would manifest support to put it in their windows...in a few days 10,000 did!

It's a moment.

Daphne Weisbart looked me up and drove over here to Lakeport (where we've just moved, two blocks away from our oldest daughter Saro, her husband Jim - who has taught history at the local high school for six years, and our two heaven-sent granddaughters, Cori 9 and Darcy 6) and spent half a day with me and Diana. She had just met with Mario Cuomo and Louis Rudin - who loved the idea of getting the most out of the extraordinary expression in Billings. Daphne has known of my work in Hollywood for fifteen years. She and her husband live near San Francisco, he makes documentaries.

I don't know what's going to happen. There's no money yet. Daphne just came here a week ago. I sent her to Diane Meyer Simon and to Casey Kasem - we have worked with Casey a lot on tolerance. There is a film by PBS that is quite good, that tells the story simply. It will be shown in December and we will generate nationwide awareness as we can. (I gave my copy to the mayor of little Lakeport and he will show it to the city council. That could certainly be done productively all over the place!)

My "wrinkle" - as you might imagine - was, in the hours of talks with Daphne, to say that the stakes are unimaginably high, that if hate continues to grow in a world where nuclear "weaponry" exists (and exists in nations that are getting poorer and more desperate all the time) the two awful entities are bound to meet - unless preventive action is taken!

And I said to Daphne what I've felt ever more strongly since the night Carl Sagan spoke at Bruce Paltrow's (and Blythe Danner's - and Gwynneth's - Saro used to tutor her!) and talked about the damage one nuclear bomb could do.

"Just" one.

The bombs are much bigger, humankind is vastly more besieged by problems and infinitely more fragile.

No one can say that one bomb like that in a population center would not be too much (magnified, as it would be, beyond comprehension by all media) for civilization's resiliency.

Before we can do what's needed about such a danger we must admit that it exists...

I think the people in Billings (inspired, by the way - I mean the paper was specifically inspired, by King Gustavus - was it Sweden or Denmark - who hung a yellow star around his neck when Hitler ordered all Jews to?) knew something.

That's why they acted as they did.

That if we don't stop the hatred early (that glorious word "prevention" - we worked in Planned Parenthood all those years...and then nine years as the miracle grew as people saw the insanity of nuclear war preparation!) our collective goose is cooked!

You two of course know all this - you exhibit it every day! (There was just the remarkable bit on TV with the President at the black church in Tennessee, helping rebuild it, saying that we can't let what is happening so many places happen here, that if we "look down" at people because of "differences," it will happen here! That the choice is to see each other as "children of God!"

Yes! Yes! Yes! Bless you! (I'm telling everybody to watch your speech that you will be glorious, fresh, experiential, that you will have humor, wisdom, frankness and will hold us in the universality of your love!)

We love you,

Norman

Ann Stock
Social Secretary to the First Lady
The White House
Washington, DC

Dear Ms. Stock:

I found this attached article written by my daughter-in-law in her association's newsletter. I am a great admirer of Hilary Rodham Clinton, and this article flattered me, and I thought I'd share this with her.

The First Lady has many admirers and enthusiasts among the young people. My daughter-in-law is one of those who are head-over-heels about Hilary. In fact, after 23 years in this country she finally decided to take her U. S. citizenship last September 10 just so she can vote for the President.

But that's beside the point. I think this article is cute. The phrase "It takes a village" is now a household word in the nation, but when my Magina (daughter-in-law) took it up as if it were her own speech in a smaller scale, it floored me! She told me that she imagined herself to be Hilary when she wrote her article.

Enough said. I just want to share this with the First Lady. Thank you for taking the time to read and -- esp. the Article.

Yours very sincerely,

Mrs. J. E. Felicitas

•Leyte Association Education Assistance Scholarship

by Rolly Militante

Four deserving students from the lucky towns of Palo, Burauen, St. Bernard and San Miguel were named recipients of the Leyte Association's Educational Assistance Scholarship for the 1996-97 school year. Liaison officers for each selected town were responsible for contacting each town's High School Principal, selecting the scholars and making the necessary communications.

As the Liaison Officer for the Palo scholarship, I am proud to inform you that the Leyte Association was able to send $120 (approximately three thousand pesos) in support of one 4th year student. This inspired Nellie and me to personally support two more students from the same school in the name of the Leyte Association. Recently, I received communication from St. Mary's Academy of Palo that the school as well as the scholars, have expressed their gratitude to the Leyte Association.

Three more students from the towns of Burauen, St. Bernard and San Miguel will be selected.

•Reno Trip A Big Success

by Nellie Militante

The Reno trip on August 31st was a BIG SUCCESS. Fifty members and friends of the Leyte Association of California, Inc. tried their luck playing at the Virginian, Sundowner, Eldorado and the Silver Legacy Casinos.

To warm up the gambling spirit, non-stop Bingo games were played all the way to Reno, producing the following winners:

Game 1— Leding Bautista and Yollette Manibay

Game 2— Marian Advincula Santiago

Game 3— Edith Pitom and Lily Raagas

Game 4— Marina Radam

The Reno excursion raised approximately $550 through bus tickets sold and another $50 from the Bingo games, all of which went to the Leyte Association to help in future events and projects. Thanks to the generosity of our fellow member Edith Pitom, who donated her cash Bingo winnings to the Association.

Lots of winners came back home with pockets full of cash courtesy of the casinos, like Ernie Ruben, Jared Manibay, Osserman Caceres, Oscar Poblete, Nannette Aguirre (who was also celebrating her birthday) to name a few. Of course, the casinos of Reno took some of that money back from our other members like Rolly Militante, Elliott Tiu and Greg Arpon.

But we all had lots of fun both in Reno and during the bus ride. No doubt, the comedic antics of Orville Tuca, who played waiter and Bingo game assistant, added to the festive atmosphere during the bus trip. Coffee, orange juice and donuts were served in the morning and brown bag lunches were provided for each excursionist. Goodies included empanadas (courtesy of Orville's uncle and aunt), candies, chips, and my famous baked roscas, plus sodas and

Dear Hillary,

This recent Eleanor thing has gotten me so infuriated, I just need to share some random thoughts with you. (I'm too frustrated to organize them.)

- Smeargate-- that's the real scandal. It's just too easy to leak accusation after accusation and hope some will stick for awhile-- or at least raise questions in people's minds that lead to doubt and distrust. Isn't that what the McCarthy era was all about? What brought that to an end?
- The good news is that the Republicans must resort to this tactic because they don't have a real plan, much less a clue, on how to face the President on the actual issues and his excellent record. Using you, your friends and associates to try and get to him is a cowardly thing to do-- but nothing new for them.
- One of my other big frustrations is that so many of these tactics go unchallenged and unquestioned by the press and by citizens who complain among themselves but don't know how to make their feelings known. To help remedy that situation, I am faxing out the enclosed "Fight back. Write back." flyer to everyone I can think of. We progressives have just been too damned polite. Enough already!
- On a much nicer note. We were really proud to read your comments in Exceptional Parent magazine about Kate. It will be a great addition to her already voluminous scrap book. Thank you so much for that and for making clear your strong feelings on adoption.

In conclusion-- I think your best defense is your humor and grace under pressure. Let lots of people see both. All our love from us to you, the President and Chelsea.

Hannah, Noah & Kate.

Are you just sick up to here with the media treatment of the President and First Lady? Are you disgusted with the smear-by-accusation tactics being used in this campaign? Stop muttering to yourself and your friends. Stop holding “mental press conferences. Let your facts, feelings and outrage be known where it counts. Write or call the media listed below. Don’t be shy. You don’t have to be brilliant— just sincere and to the point. (And be sure to include your name, address and daytime phone number so they can verify your letter.) actually going to be in the living quarters of the White House, I went to Tyler Dennett's biography of my paternal grandfather John Hay, who at age 23 came to Washington with President Lincoln as his assistant private secretary and found himself sharing a bedroom with his friend John G. Nicolay. I know now in what corner the two secretaries slept thanks to a diagram in one of the books in our sleeping quarters - How ~~very~~ exciting it is to be given the "Lincoln Room"! And how wonderfully treated we have been here. We will never forget it.

Meanwhile I found in the same book the enclosed account which we xeroxed for your entertainment - since you are the author of the Antithesis of Mary Todd Lincoln. Keep up the great work. You are a true First Lady.

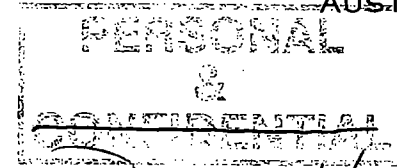

Thank you again for the thrill of a lifetime.

Dear Hillary,

As you must know, Creekmore and I are ardent supporters of you both. We were happily surprised and honored to be invited as overnight guests to the White House and we thank you and the president warmly for this gracious and hospitable gesture.

When I realized I was

from JOHN HAY by Tyler Dennett

ABRAHAM LINCOLN AND JOHN HAY 37

letters as "Assistant Secretary to the President," but subsequently he was "one of the Secretaries to the President," and he exercised the franking privilege, writing his name in the upper right-hand corner of the envelope on official correspondence.

From the time when the great democrat, Thomas Jefferson, served as Secretary of State, the Department of State has always been the repository of precedent and the guardian of tradition for the White House. From Mr. Seward the secretaries lost no time in securing such advice and suggestions as seemed necessary to safeguard the dignity of the President in his formal social relations. There were lists of the social functions which would be expected, and even hints as to suitable dress and the use of visiting cards. The department also furnished a list of the cases of disputed precedence, indicating what people should not be invited to sit together. There was little gaiety, but there were the usual formal receptions, and the traditional state dinners, for which one or the other of the secretaries made out the seating diagrams, placing the President and Mrs. Lincoln opposite each other in the middle of the long table, and sometimes placing themselves opposite each other at the far ends.

The young men tried loyally to save the President's wife from her own rashness and lack of tact but in this effort they were not wholly successful. The character of the exchanges is well illustrated by Mrs. Lincoln's pencilled reply to a very courteous note from John Hay, stating that the Secretary of the Navy had called to inquire whether she had any objection to having the Marine Band to play on the lawn the following day. The Secretary was waiting in the office for her answer. This was on May 23, 1862. The reply was queenly if nothing more: "It is our especial desire that the Band does not play in these grounds this Summer. We expect our wishes to be complied with."

The most cherished tradition of the Department of State, handed down unbroken until very recent years when it has been somewhat badly battered, was a style of correspondence which billows and rolls with suspended sentences, rounded periods, much dignity, and, at the hand of the unskillful, considerable affectation. It amused Hay and seems to have amused also the President. Only two months after his arrival in Washington, Hay, always an apt literary imitator, tried his hand at the style with so much success that the resulting letter was Cheryl concurs wholeheartedly that the First Lady should not 1) provide recommendations for anyone she does not know personally; and 2) provide recommendations for career civil service positions based on anything other than merit (which is tied to #1, since if she does not know the person, she would not be able to comment on the person's qualifications).

SUBJECT: recommendation

I don't think you want to go into the reasons why she cannot do the recommendation (to allow us some room for exceptions in the future), so I would suggest very basic language along the lines of "The White House Counsel's Office has advised that Mrs. Clinton may not provide a recommendation for _____." or "Upon advice of the White House Counsel's Office, Mrs. Clinton is declining your request for a recommendation for _____."

Call me if you have any questions.

Mrs. Hillary Clinton

Washington, D.C.

Dear Mrs. Clinton:

Our newspaper recently ran a series of articles on the Social Security program, accenting its importance to many people.

One of the Social Security officials here who helped us put the series together was James J. Keeler, the same gentleman who is seeking a job as an analyst in the Social Security Administration's Congressional and Legislative Affairs Office in Washington.

I wrote to you before about Keeler, who is a great spokesman for Social Security here. (I'm enclosing one sheet of our series in which he is quoted twice.)

Keeler, who has worked for the Social Security Administration for 25 years, has applied for the Washington job and an appointment by Shirley S. Chater is now pending.

Keeler knows Social Security inside out and would be an excellent choice for the job. In particular, he has ideas on how Social Security might be reformed in President Clinton's second term.

Keeler is a doctoral student of the University of Southern California's Public Affairs Center in Washington. He has completed all his classroom work and needs only to write his dissertation, which will be on the Social Security Independent Agency Act.

I wouldn't push a guy without being absolutely sure he has the right stuff.

Believe it or not, I just got a copy of a video tape today on the visit of you, your husband and Chelsea at Eileen Miner's home in South Scranton last October. I enjoyed watching it. That was a nice day, in church and at the party.

By the way, Bob Casey Jr., son of the ex-governor, has been nominated by Democrats for state auditor general, which was an office his father once held. Bob, who's 31, is openly and forcefully for the re-election of the president. I thought you'd like to know.

I just got your book a few days ago and plan to write a column about it after I've read it.

I passed that information on to the parents of Jonathan Jones, the child whose Pennsylvania medical card isn't being accepted in New York. They love the doctor in New York and are agonizing now over what to do. I'll keep you posted.

With warm regards

Disabled Man Is Grateful for Benefits

BY DAVID SINGLETON
THE SCRANTON TIMES

William Needham always thought Social Security would be his comfort margin, a little something to supplement his company pension when he retired from the Topps Chewing Gum Inc. plant in Duryea.

That was before the three heart attacks, before the quadruple bypass surgery, before William Needham — at the ripe old age of 51 — reluctantly joined the ranks of the permanently disabled.

With that, Social Security became something far more concrete to Needham than the distant promise of a few extra bucks to ease his passage from the workday grind into leisurely old age.

It became his salvation.

"What happened to me is something that ruins families," said the South Scranton resident, now 56. "When I got that first Social Security check, I just dropped to my knees and thanked God."

Needham is among 4,100 former workers in Lackawanna County and 4 million nationwide who, because they are physically unable to hold a job, receive disability benefits through the Social Security program.

He and others like him are often overlooked in discussions over whether Social Security is a "good deal" for American workers.

Ida Mae Fuller, the nation's first Social Security recipient, probably would have argued she received a good deal.

At the time she got her first check for $22.54 in January 1940, the retired law clerk from Ludlow, Vt., had paid a total of $22 in Social Security taxes. By the time she died in 1975 at age 100, her accumulated benefits totaled more than $20,000.

The Social Security Administration readily acknowledges that people now getting retirement benefits or who plan to retire soon will recover, on average, far more than they paid into the system.

For example, a worker with average earnings who retired in 1995 at age 65 will need less than eight years to recover all the taxes plus interest paid into Social Security's old age and survivors insurance. When disability insurance taxes are factored in, the recovery period increases to nine years.

SSA officials allow a recovery period for workers retiring in 1995, though those workers will continue to receive more benefits than they paid in.

A Baby Boomer who retires at age 66 will recover the value of his old age and survivors insurance taxes in about 14 years, and the value of his disability insurance taxes in over 14 years.

"There is no program that gives you more than you put in."

JIM KEE
SSA spoke

But SSA officials point out that people who live long enough to receive Social Security benefits are a bad deal. They ignore one of the program's tenets: Social Security is a retirement program, not a disability program.

According to the Social Security Administration, one out of five of today's 20-year-olds will die before reaching age 65, and almost one out of five will become disabled before reaching retirement age.

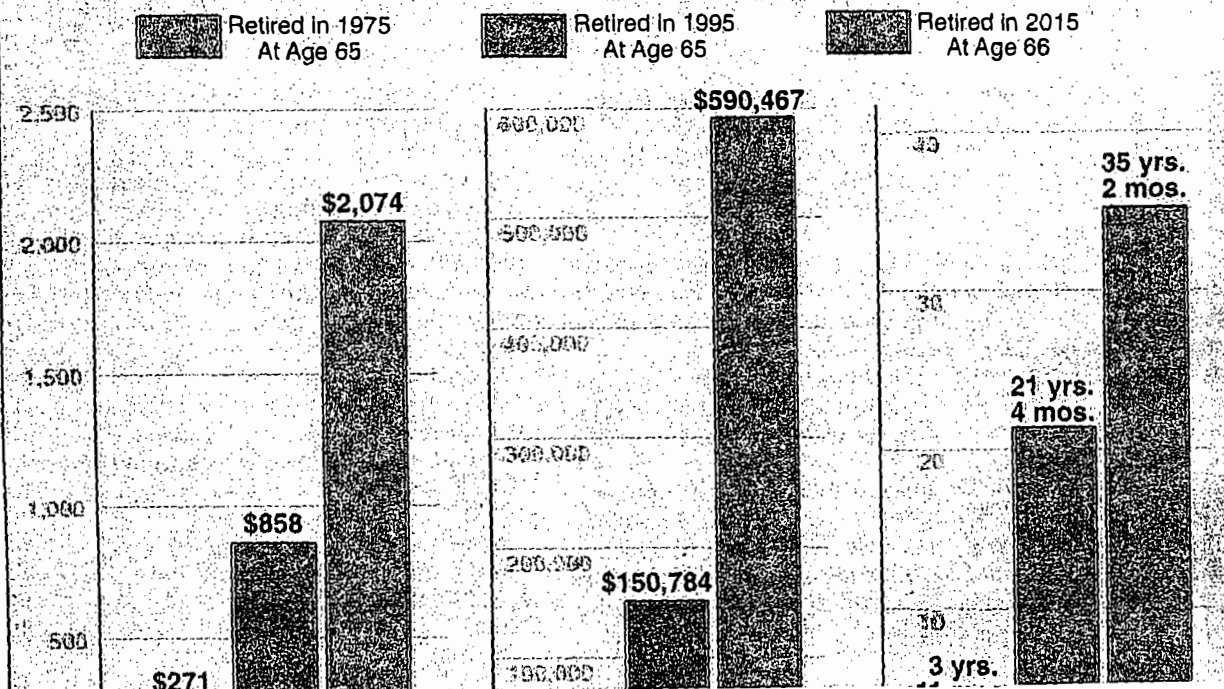

"It is a family program," said Jim Kee, SSA spokesman for the Scranton Times. "There is no better Social Security in the family. It serves as a safety net for working families."

For an average spouse and two children, the Social Security benefits value as a $295,000 policy or a $203,000 insurance policy.

Needham laughs when he expects to receive Social Security benefits. When you can't work, you wake up as a

At the time she got her first check of $22.54 in January 1940, the law clerk from Ludington had paid a total of $22 in security taxes. By the time she died in 1975 at age 100, her accumulated benefits totaled more than $100,000.

The Social Security Administration readily acknowledges that people now getting retirement benefits or who plan to retire will recover, on average, more than they paid into the system.

For example, a worker with average earnings who retired in 1965 will need less than 10 years to recover all the interest paid into Social Security's old age and survivors insurance. When disability taxes are factored in, the recovery period increases to 15 years.

SSA officials also concede the recovery period will increase for workers retiring in the future, although those workers on average will continue to receive more in benefits than they paid in taxes.

A Baby Boomer with average wages who retires in 2015 at age 66 will recover the accumulated value of his old age and survivors insurance taxes in about 12 years, and the value of all taxes — including disability — in just over 14 years.

'There is no better program than Social Security in protecting the family.'

JIM KEELER
SSA spokesman

But SSA officials also point out that people who label Social Security a bad deal for workers ignore one of the program's basic tenets: Social Security is more than a retirement pension system.

According to the SSA, one-fifth of today's 20-year-olds will die before reaching retirement age, and almost one-third will become disabled before they're old enough to retire.

"It is a family protection program," said Jim Keeler, spokesman for the Scranton SSA office. "There is no better program than Social Security in protecting the family. It serves as a floor of protection for working people."

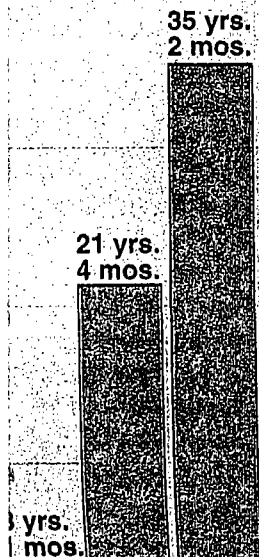

For an average worker with a spouse and two children, Social Security benefits have the same value as a $295,000 life insurance policy or a $203,000 disability insurance policy.

Needham laughed when asked if he expects to receive more from Social Security than he paid in. When you count every day you wake up as a blessing, he explained, it's not something you

William Needham, who is disabled by a heart condition, takes a walk in the South Scranton neighborhood where he lives. People like Needham are often overlooked in the debate over the future of Social Security.

It took more than a year for the SSA to approve Needham's disability application. As the months passed, he and his wife of 32 years, Florence, raided their savings to make ends meet. They were down to their last $501 when the first check came, Needham said.

Needham doesn't even like to think where he would be if Social Security hadn't been there.

"I'd have no recourse. Where would you turn?" Needham said. "The things that go through your mind — there goes your home, there goes your car, there goes everything you ever worked for."

At 23, Mike and Cathie Langan are more concerned about saving for a house and for their 2-year-old daughter's college education than about retirement, which is four decades away.

The Peckville couple is aware, however, that Social Security is in trouble.

"As far as I'm concerned, I really doubt it's going to be around," Mike Langan said. "Congress robbed the system, and they're not going to put it back. They pretty much robbed themselves blind."

Langan has an engineering degree but is working in a union position fixing elevators. His wife works as a part-time secretary at Community Medical Center.

He would be putting money into an Individual Retirement Account or a 401(k) plan if the government were not taking out Social Security taxes. But the family cannot afford both.

"If (the government) went about it properly from the beginning and invested it," Langan said, "there would be no problem. The interest would be astronomical."

The Langans are typical of young families with children. Many are just getting started in a career and do not have disposable income to bank for retirement. Even if they are more established, concern about owning a home or saving for college takes priority because they are more immediate needs.

But unlike their parents, couples in their 20s and early 30s are not assuming that the government will take care of them after retirement through Social Security and Medicare.

Joe Mariotti, 30, and his wife Kara, 28, both contribute to retirement plans. The young attorney and his wife, who works at a drug and alcohol treatment service, have no children. Immediate expenses like child care are long-term worries of a not yet a concern.

Keep Tabs on Your Estimated Benefit

The information may help people decide how much they will need in savings, private insurance and investments for their retirement.

BY DAVID SINGLETON
THE SCRANTON TIMES

You don't have to wait until you retire to find out how much you will receive from Social Security.

In fact, the Social Security Administration encourages working individuals to review their benefit information every three years by requesting a Personal Earnings and Benefit Estimate Statement.

The statement — known as a PEBES — provides an estimate of the benefit you can expect to receive upon retirement or in the event you become disabled and cannot work. It also shows how much your family would get should you die.

In addition, the statement includes a year-by-year display of your earnings on which the benefit estimates are based.

Dana Edwards, public affairs officer at the SSA regional office in Philadelphia, said PEBES serves a two-fold purpose.

First, he said, it permits the recipients to check the accuracy of their earnings record. Because benefits are based on earnings, an error could result in a lower benefit amount.

"It's a lot easier to correct those if there's a problem with them if people still have a W-2 form," Edwards said. "That's why it's a good idea to check these every three years."

Secondly, he said, the statement lets you see "in black and white" what your approximate Social Security benefit will be when you retire so that you can plan accordingly.

Jim Keeler, a spokesman for the Scranton SSA office, said the information can help people decide how much they will need in savings, private insurance and investments to see them through retirement or to protect their family if they become disabled or die.

"They'll understand on a personal basis what Social Security means to them," Keeler said. "A younger person with a family needs to make a decision on disability or life insurance really should."

People can order a PEBES request by calling the SSA's toll-free number: 1-800-772-1211. Four to six weeks after the request is turned, the PEBES will arrive in the mail.

Beginning last October and continuing each year through 1999, people who are turning 60 and who are not yet receiving Social Security benefits will automatically receive a PEBES from the federal government.

The agency will expand the program by the turn of the century so that everyone age 25 or older will automatically receive a benefit estimate statement annually to help them plan for their financial future.

Kara Mariotti is the more pes- simistic of the two in terms of So- cial Security, figuring there will be nothing left when they retire.

"As long as people continue to work, there will be something," her husband said. "It's not going to be the gravy train that it is to- day. I think back then people were made to think they could rely on it. Our generation is more, 'We'll take care of our- selves.' We don't have the secu- rity part of Social Security."

Joe Mariotti favors raising the retirement age and reducing ben- efits of higher income senior citi- zens in order to keep the system solvent.

"It's a socialist program, so it has to be run like a socialist pro- gram," he said. "Right now, it's run the old American way — the more you made, the more you get."

Lorraine and Mark Perry, both 34, live in Dunmore with their two children, ages 3 and 5. Another one is on the way. For the Perrys, like the Langans, sav- ing for retirement is a secondary priority.

"The kids' education, buying a bigger house, we're dealing with that first," said Lorraine Perry, in terms of their priorities. Mrs. Perry is employed by NatWest, and both she and her husband contribute to 401(k) plans.

'The kids' education, buying a bigger house, we're dealing with that first.'

LORRAINE PERRY
On saving for retirement

Mark Perry, an attorney, be- lieves that Social Security will continue to exist but in a much different form.

"Hopefully they're making ad- justments so people will realize it's not their main source," he said, adding that Social Security will most likely become more of a supplement to private retirement savings.

He also thinks the government should slowly phase in a reduc- tion of benefits for people who are now in their 20s and 30s.

"You don't want to penalize people" who are collecting now, he said.

Why Retirement Age Might Go Up

The new Scoal Security administrator says an increase in the retirement age may be necessary. A look at why this might happen:

Fewer workers to support retirees

When the Baby Boom generation — the huge group of people born between 1946 and 1964 — retires, there will be fewer workers to support Social Security beneficiaries.

Workers will be retiring later

Retirees now get full benefits at age 65, but longer work lives are ahead as a result of a 1983 law that ultimately delays retirement to 67.

Dear Mrs. Clinton:

On behalf of the American Associates, Ben-Gurion University of the Negev I want to thank you for your gracious words spoken in the video you taped for the ceremony to name the University's new Joyce and Irving Goldman Medical School. It is always impressive to have a greeting from the First Lady, but it was especially meaningful to all of us that this video came from you. My colleagues and I at the American Associates truly admire both you and the President for all you have done to foster world peace, especially in the Middle East. Our colleagues who work at the University in Israel share our appreciation for everything the Clinton Administration has done for the people of Israel.

As you pointed out in your remarks, the work of the Medical School is helping to build bonds which, we hope, will lead to lasting peace with Israel's neighbors. There is something spiritually satisfying in the fact that according to the Bible, Beer-Sheva, Ben-Gurion University's home, is the site of the first peace agreement made by the Jewish People. For it was here that Abraham made an agreement and swore an oath of mutual assistance with Abimelech.

We are grateful to you for your willingness to share your enthusiasm for the work of the University's Medical School with all the dignitaries who will be attending our ceremony. Again, thank you for your help.

Sincerely,

Dear Mrs. Clinton:

I'm sorry my blunt questions caught you at such a stressful time last winter. I hope you know that however tough-minded I must be regarding you and the president, I struggle to be fair. But I still feel pretty rotten today; I guess critics don't like to see the human cost of their handiwork. I'll try to learn from this; I hope I wasn't out of bounds.

You and the president -- both before and after I ruined your Wellesley homecoming -- have been unfailingly gracious to my wife and kids and to me. It's no small sign of your class and grace that I got an invitation to the White House dinner for President Robinson in the mail on the day after Todd's article appeared.

Dee and I will be delighted to attend. Perhaps someday when your life moves back toward normal and we're all in our dotage we can return your generous hospitality. We serve mean margaritas and lasagna. On the other hand, I can see how you'll have had your fill of reporters by the time you leave Washington.

Best wishes to you and yours.

Dear Mrs. Clinton:

I am sorry I did not have the opportunity of presenting this to you personally during my visit with Sarah in November, but your schedule was a bit full.

A brief explanation may be appropriate; this is the original drawing of a political cartoon that appeared on the editorial page of the Sacramento Bee (Sacramento, California) in September, 1995. Dennis Renault is the newspaper's feature political artist and, over the past several years, I have purchased a few of his original drawings for my courtroom and office, primarily those he drew pertaining to migrant farmworkers, OSHA, and workers' compensation---all fields I have worked in at various times as an attorney and administrative law judge for the state of California.

When I saw this one in the paper, I decided you should have it; I contacted him, purchased the original, and asked him to inscribe it to you. It is a pleasure to present it to you in recognition of your courage and commitment, on so many levels, on behalf of progressive social issues.

With great respect and devotion,

BARBARA DUNFEY FRANZOSO

Dear Hillary,

It was so wonderful being able to spend a few moments with you this week. My late mother-in-law, whose life embodied so much of what is in your book, would have been very proud to know that you were the recipient of her award.

I know that these have been stressful times for you and I marvel at your continuous grace under pressure. You have the support and love of so many people like me who can only remind you that this too shall pass!

I would love to take you up on your gracious invitation to visit when your schedule permits. If there is anything I can do beyond the New Hampshire level to assist you in the campaign, don't hesitate to call upon me.

With love -

Barbara

Dear Hillary:

I am writing to encourage you to continue to rise above the viciousness that is being directed at you today.

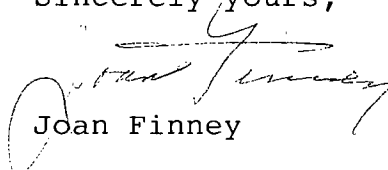

As you know, I have been involved in government for many years, am a survivor in six statewide races, and the first woman Governor of Kansas.

Through the years, I learned to never underestimate the intelligence of the electorate nor overestimate the amount of information they have. Time-and-again, I have observed the amazing insight of the people. Be assured that they will realize the purpose of these attacks on you.

In the meantime, as you pursue the dignified course you have charted for yourself, I hope you will keep in mind what I told you when you first assumed the role of First Lady: You will do more for women than anyone since Eleanor Roosevelt. She had a tough time too.

With every good wish, I am

Sincerely yours,

Dear Hilary,

I'm sorry I didn't say goodbye on Wednesday evening, but you were busy with the receiving line and I was afraid that I might embarrass myself by begging to stay! John was also waiting at LaGuardia for me and I was bursting to tell him about my adventure.

I want to thank you for a perfectly wonderful evening. I guess I've had more great experiences in the past twenty years than a person is entitled to in a lifetime, but Tuesday night is right up in the top ten.

Not only was it fun to hang out in the kitchen with you and the President as I do with my own family, but the enormity of your position really hit me as I watched staff and security surround you. It brought back memories of the '84 campaign and a reflection on how I might have handled it all. After being with you, I am even more convinced of how right you both are for the job.

I love this country. It has given me much. And I respect the office of the Presidency. I felt when I got the nomination in 1984 that I had been blessed and I was humbled. Tuesday night, after my midnight tour with the President, I realized I was not alone in those feelings. I'm sure you know that he explained every historical piece of furniture and every painting all the way down the hall. Though I found the facts interesting, (I too enjoy touching history) what really fascinated me was how he told them. Bill Clinton is as much in awe of the Presidency as those of us who never came close. He understands and appreciates the historical significance of what he is doing. He knows that the impact of his actions will be felt for generations to come. And he knows he will be judged as we judge those whose story he tells. You could feel it.

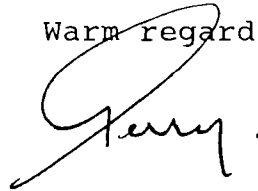

I guess part of the reason we have so many problems in this country is that Ronald Reagan never had the intellect to understand the position he occupied and George Bush came from a time and place where he thought he was entitled to it.

After I took my bath and got into bed, this woman who usually is out before my head hits the pillow, couldn't fall asleep. All I could think of was what my grandfather who was a street cleaner in New York City and who spoke very little English would have said if someone had told him about my visit with you. He would never have believed it.

I took home a copy of the breakfast menu and have tucked it away. I will show it to my grandson Matthew and tell him about Tuesday night when he is old enough to understand. My grandfather wouldn't believe it, but I want to be sure my grandson does.

I know the year ahead is going to be tough for you both. If there is any way I can make it easier, please call.

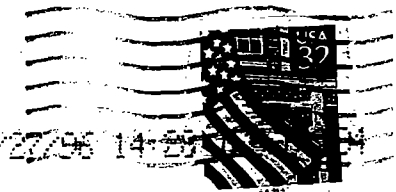

Warm regards,

P.S. I'm glad I got to meet Chelsea once again. It's obvious you've done a good job.

Dear Mrs. Clinton:

I have just returned from serving as the public member of the United States Government delegation to the 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in Geneva for which you so kindly nominated me, and I thank you for that extraordinary experience. Through it I entered a world of policy and diplomacy touching on some of the most important issues of our times: the treatment of war victims, humanitarian values and world response to international crises. Participation provided not merely the opportunity to observe important events, but to engage in them personally and fully.

The U.S. delegation, working with representatives of the American Red Cross, examined a broad range of issues and developed sensible and sensitive responses to them. In a moment I shall long remember, I had the great honor of delivering the United States position on humanitarian values and response to crisis before the body considering policy development in those areas.

Among the important things I was privileged to observe was the remarkable competence and dedication of U.S. diplomats at work. Headed by Ambassador Daniel Spiegel, a very talented mission staff was joined by a group of outstanding professionals from the State Department led by Assistant Secretary Phyllis Oakley and several very capable military and civilian experts from the Pentagon. Under the able leadership of Ambassador Spiegel and Secretary Oakley, the team worked literally 15 hours a day crafting positions and negotiating outcomes. At every step the process was illuminated by thoughtful discussion and meticulous preparation, and the results justified this outstanding effort.

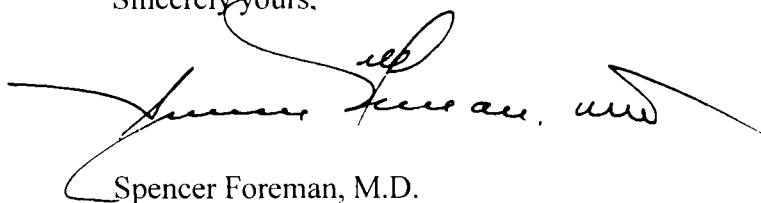

Beyond any doubt, one of the most remarkable people I have ever had the privilege to meet is Governor Ann Richards who stepped in at the last minute to head the delegation filling the shoes of Cyrus Vance who had to withdraw unexpectedly. This outstanding American, ably assisted by her long time associate Ms. Jane Hickey, was an absolute joy to work with and to be with. Tireless, indefatigable, effortlessly engaging, with an incomparable sense of humor and the ability to master complex material in unfamiliar areas, she projected American good sense and good intentions through personal diplomacy and effective leadership.

I regard the opportunity to participate with all of these outstanding people in the important work of our government and the International Red Cross and Red Crescent movement an incomparable honor and privilege; one that I shall long remember. I thank you for it.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Hillary,

Elizabeth was supposed to have given you these items when she was there in Dec. but obviously that didn't happen. They were "buried" in her room and just recently discovered as she gathered up her belongings to go back to school. The woman who sold the stuff to me assured me it was very "hot".

Elizabeth was also supposed to ask you two things but did not because she does not want to appear as if she's taking advantage of your friendship. She would like either you or Mr. President to speak at her graduation. What would she have to do, or who would she have to contact, to see if that would be a possibility. There is also going to be a meeting of Math/Science H.S. and someone wanted a video presentation or greeting from Mr. President. I am not sure what it is exactly that they want but if you can let her know who the contact person is for such items, Elizabeth or the school personnel can provide the details.

I know you are no longer involved in the health care proposals but wanted to give you some information that loss. I realize that the hospitals overcharge, but 8 of surgery costs more than $2000. This is not an isolated case according to the woman in billing, hospitals incur losses such as this on a daily basis. It is easy to figure out that hospitals cannot stay solvent at this rate. Somewhere along the way the insurance companies have gotten a lot of clout and have the hospitals over a barrel. I'm obviously very worried about this since this is my livelihood.

Hope all of you have a wonderful A96.

Dear Hillary, Chelsea, and Mr. President:

From the 11th floor of Cal Bigger's office, one block from center stage on the evening of November 5, we watched with a lump in our throat as the three of you made that long walk through the hall of the old State House into the waiting cheers of a captivated throng of admirers and supporters; Jean, James, Stephen, and I were among those cheering and applauding. We are so thankful to have you in the White House as our nation's first family for another four years.

Your collective strength, resilience, and vision are a source of great hope for our nation. The price you have paid to carry the weight of this office and do the wonderful job you have done has been a great light in a sometimes dark period of history. While some of the society seems to be in a terribly regressive mode, you have opted for and offered adventures of new ideas and new directions. While the disgruntled minority has wanted to turn the clock back on our history, our children's future, and our progress as a nation of justice and compassion, you have forged the trail of tomorrow with a visionary and insightful sense of renewal and possibility.

When the criticisms have come without substance and without civility, you have chosen the "more excellent way," to borrow a phrase from the Apostle Paul. You have answered cruelty with kindness, mean-spiritedness with compassion, and senseless rhetoric with a reasoned and measured response of good will. You have led this nation and her citizens with a right heart and a great spirit. Thank you, to all three of you, for the many ways that your leadership and presence in the White House have reminded us of what is best and noblest and highest in our ideals as human beings and as a nation.

May the days ahead be the best, for each of you, and may your faith carry you through the difficult times. Please know that as one of the pastors to your family I stand ready to be of service in Christ's name to you in any way that I am able. Know that always my prayers are upholding you and my support is firmly with you. Always remember, as I know you strive to, that God's grace is encircling all of us with the strength and empowerment and love that can only come from God's loving presence. May you know and feel that wondrous presence in these coming days.

Dear Hillary:

First of all, congratulations to you and the President on his reelection. Although it would have been easier to have a Democratic Congress, the President is as well-suited as anyone could be to deal with this situation and make progress on the issues that matter. We and our friends are also thrilled we will continue to have your leadership as First Lady during the next four years.

Having rested up and spent some wonderful time with my family since leaving the Department of Justice in the summer, I would very much like to be part of the new administration if there is an appropriate job. As I mentioned to you in an earlier note, I became fairly deeply involved in computer/information policy at DOJ, where I chaired a coordinating committee and served as the Department's representative to the Information Infrastructure Task Force. I enjoyed trying to resolve some of the complex issues presented by the development of new telecommunications technologies, including the Internet. This involved balancing concerns about public education, access to government information, encryption, counter-terrorism, intellectual property, privacy, and the First Amendment.

Positions that would allow me to contribute in this area of interest would include Assistant Secretary for Communications and Information, NTIA, at Commerce or serving as one of the Commissioners at the FCC. I would like to be considered for such positions and to have an opportunity to discuss these and other possibilities with someone knowledgeable. I am sending a resume directly to Bob Nash (copy enclosed), but am concerned it may get buried in a very large pile. Four years ago, you were kind enough to help me find meaningful work in the first Clinton Administration. I hope it's not imposing to ask for your support again.

For your information, I did contact your office after Ronna and I saw you and the President at the Sidwell back-to-school night. I was told they would try to schedule a brief visit with you for me and the kids in December. Hope to see you soon.

With warm regards,

Paul

- ◆ Chair, Civil Justice Reform Task Force (developed proposal leading to the Attorney General's Alternative Dispute Resolution Initiative)
- ◆ Chair, DOJ IITF coordinating committee and Departmental Representative to the Administration's Information Infrastructure Task Force (developed policy on issues such as regulation of encryption and indecency, protection of privacy and First Amendment rights, and public access to legal information on the Internet)
- ◆ Chair SF-86 Working Group (developed recommendations, most of which were adopted, for major revisions in the content of the standard background investigation forms required of all government applicants and employees)
- ◆ Member, Executive Committee, Executive Office on National Security (for which I received top secret and code-word security clearances)

Other activities as Deputy Associate Attorney General included presenting Congressional testimony; briefing Congressional staff; organizing major events; and public speaking.

EF&B: As cofounder and managing partner of Ennis, Friedman & Bersoff, a litigation firm, I was responsible for all aspects of that "small business," including decisions on office space, equipment purchase and leasing, financing, employee benefits, hiring and firing, office systems, and client development.

Mrs. Hillary Rodham Clinton
The White House
Washington D.C.

Dear Hillary:

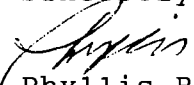

I'm so delighted that my friend, Meri Stevens, is bringing a sampling of our wines to you!

I wanted you to know that in a few weeks we will be bottling our 1995 vintage and plan to set aside a portion of that for the re-release of VICTORY WHITE, per the enclosed mock-up label. We originally released the wine to celebrate the election and now look forward to having VICTORY WHITE available for convention related events. We hope it will set the stage for November.

Surely there is a great deal of work to be done between now and the election, but it is encouraging to see the latest polls and to watch the President in action!

Ben joins me in sending our best wishes to you and the President. Please know of our continuing support.

Sincerely,

(Phyllis Rich Feder
