Dear Hillary:

I am writing for two reasons: First, to express my sincere appreciation for my appointment to the United States District Court; and, second, to offer my support to you in what must be very difficult times.

I am deeply grateful to you and the President for the opportunity to serve as a District Court judge. I will do my best to serve the country well and to be a credit to this Administration.

As far as the current political climate, it must be of little comfort to know that it was all but inevitable that as the President grew stronger and more successful, you would become the subject of debate. This letter's purpose, however, is not to offer political advice -- I am sure you have considered every possible political solution to these outrageous and vicious attacks. It is just to let you know that you have friends out here who support you and who are thinking good thoughts on your behalf. We know that you will continue to be strong and do what you believe is right.

On a lighter note: We learned after the Brown-Wilson campaign, when I did Kathleen's debate negotiations and preparation, that the Wilsonites nicknamed me Kim "Rodham" Wardlaw. I could not have been more flattered, and my husband could not have been more proud.

Again, thank you for everything. This too shall pass, and, in the end, you and the President will actually have achieved some good for this country. We're looking forward to celebrating in November.

Sincerely,

Kim

CONGRATULATIONS ON THE PUBLICATION OF YOUR BOOK FOR S & S. I HEARD YOU LAST NIGHT ON NPR'S "FRESH AIR" WITH TERRY GROSS AND YOUR VOICE SOUNDED CONFIDENT AND WARM. REGARDING QUESTIONS ON CREDIBILITY [I REALIZE IT IS EASY TO QUARTERBACK IN HINDSIGHT] BUT IT COULD BE SAID THAT TAXPAYERS SHOULD REALLY BE QUESTIONING THE CREDIBILITY OF THE EXPENSE OF THE WHITEWATER INVESTIGATION, REGARDING A REAL ESTATE VENTURE TWENTY YEARS AGO, AND OF COURSE MANY IN NEW YORK KNOW THAT ALFONSO D'MATO AND JAMES McDOUGAL WERE TWINS SEPARATED AT BIRTH.

1996 IS ALREADY MUCH BETTER FOR ME THAN LAST YEAR, AND I APPRECIATED VERY MUCH YOUR CHRISTMAS CARD OF THE BLUE ROOM.

Dear Alice:

Thank you so much for your kind and interesting letter. I appreciate your words of encouragement, and I am delighted to learn of The Edible Schoolyard project.

I agree that in facing the challenges of tomorrow, we must continue to recognize America's deepest values and obligations -- from helping our youth prepare for the future and restoring hope in troubled neighborhoods, to revitalizing the bonds of family and the spirit of community. We must work together to make this country a place where opportunity and responsibility go hand in hand.

You have my best wishes.

December 9, 1995

Dear Mr. President and Mr. Vice-President:

When we met not long ago in San Francisco, you both talked inspirationally about building community. This is a goal that I believe all Americans wholeheartedly endorse. All of us would agree that it has to do with people taking responsibility for one another and communicating with one another. But how can we reasonably expect people to know how to begin to do this when so many of them believe that nothing they do will make any difference?

A sense of community rarely happens spontaneously (except maybe at a concert—or in a crisis). It doesn't work to just exhort people to be responsible. It has to be demonstrated—with determination and persistence, over and over again. The best way is when something that you do every day of your life has community values right at its heart.

I am convinced that food can again be, as it once was, the everyday vehicle for learning mutual responsibility. When food preparation and service was both the solemn shared duty and the reward of family living, community values were instilled at the dinner table. Families eating together passed on values such as courtesy, kindness, generosity, thrift, respect, and reverence for the goodness of Nature.

The ritual of coming to the dinner table was once the very basis of community. As Francine du Plessix Gray wrote recently in the New Yorker, "The family meal is not only the core curriculum in the school of civilized discourse; it is also a set of protocols that curb our natural savagery and our animal greed, and cultivate a capacity for sharing and thoughtfulness....[T]he ritual of nutrition helps to imbue families, and societies at large, with greater empathy and fellowship."

The bonds between people that give them a sense of community are forged not only at the table, but throughout the whole process of putting food there. Meaningful feeling is built up from small relationships—such as the one with your baker: you go down to the bakery and say hello and buy your bread. Repeated contact makes people become sympathetic to one another's situations and lives. The bonds that are formed create an atmosphere of caring and sharing.

Buying food in the anonymous way you do in a supermarket simply does not allow for these kinds of transactions to take place. If the staff of life comes to you prepackaged, from far away, you may belong to a virtual community, but not to a real one.

If we choose to feed ourselves responsibly, if we feed ourselves with fresh, living, local food, we have to interact with purveyors who are trying to live on the earth in a harmonious and responsible way. After several years of buying food from such people in a farmer's market, one has all kinds of understanding: about agricultural economy and risk, and the heroic effort required to husband the land and its life-sustaining resources; about who the farmers are and what they grow best; and about the freshness and seasonality of food and what things smell and taste like. And these kinds of understandings contribute to the health and stability of local agriculture and to a real sense of belonging to a local community.

When I say these things, often somebody will complain that it is all very well for me—the owner of an expensive restaurant, with a sophisticated clientele, located in a mild climate, with a long growing season—to prescribe this kind of eating, but for most Americans it is a luxury that is all but out of reach. Not so! Wherever there is a farmer's market, there is always someone there who is selling unbelievable food—plentiful, ripe, and inexpensive. If people continue to want to shop this way it will come to pass. Farmer's markets are spreading and farmers everywhere are diversifying and re-connecting with people who live in their regions. Community-supported agriculture is the most positive-spirited movement in the country. Not only have farmer's markets proliferated, bringing pleasure to everyone who goes to them, but consumers are cooperatively supporting farms, and programs like the WIC program—food stamps for women, infants, and children to be used at farmer's markets—make it possible for the most disadvantaged people to enjoy ripe, pure food.

Over the past twenty-five years I have seen an interdependent community of producers and consumers grow up around Chez Panisse. This makes me feel certain that the same growth can happen nationwide. Fresh, nourishing food need never again be stigmatized as élitist. Wholesome, honest food must be the entitlement of all Americans, not just the rich, and its availability should be a public goal. In my experience, people react strongly and positively to these ideas. If you were to talk about food with the same fervor with which you now talk about Americorps, it could accelerate and strengthen our movement toward a healthier diet and a saner society.

Part of the problem is that we are brought up to believe that food just isn't that important. Unfortunately, the study and practice of growing and eating food is not now part of most school curriculums. At the beginning of this century, however, the state of California actively encouraged school gardens. In 1909 an educator named James Ralph Jewel wrote a booklet entitled Suggestions for Garden Work in California Schools. He said: "School gardens teach, among other things, private care for public property, economy, honesty, application, concentration, justice, the dignity of labor, and love for the beauties of nature."

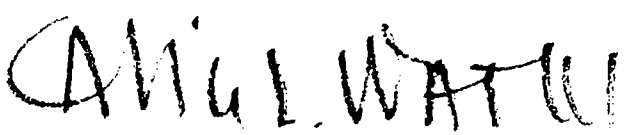
In my own neighborhood, we have formed a partnership between the local junior high school and many neighbors, parents, and interested small businesses. Our purpose is to educate our children about food. Our project, called The Edible Schoolyard, plans to create and sustain an organic garden and landscape that is wholly integrated into the school's curriculum and lunch program. Students will be involved in all aspects of farming the garden—as well as in preparing, serving, and eating the food they grow. The purpose of this is to awaken their senses and teach the values of community responsibility, good nourishment, and good stewardship of the land. I am delighted that Delaine Eastin, the California State Superintendent of Education, has decided that a school garden should be an integral part of each demonstration school that is participating in the United States Department of Agriculture's Team Nutrition program for improving school lunches.

I have long maintained that the two most honorable professions are farming and teaching. Yet politics is an honorable profession, too, when politicians articulate a national yearning and get people to follow them. The present administration has the chance to invigorate public dialogue by turning our attention to how food must be at the center of our lives. We long for a positive vision for change, but we will never have community until we are all participating in solutions to our current crises.

Help us nourish our children by bringing them back around the table, where we can pass on our most humane values. Help us create a demand for sustainable agriculture, for it is at the core of sustaining everyone's life. Talk about it; promote it as part of the school curriculum; encourage the spread of farmers' markets; and demonstrate it with organic gardens on the grounds of the White House and the Vice-Presidential mansion. To do these things would be in the spirit of Thomas Jefferson, who believed that we had to be a nation of farmers in order to preserve our values of freedom and community.

Your administration began by invoking Jeffersonian ideals. I believe that this is your best opportunity to bring them to life.

With admiration and support,



Alice Waters

Dear Hillary,

Last evening an Israel Bonds dinner was held at the Ritz Carlton in Palm Beach, to honor 36 local families for their contributions to the Jewish world. More than 400 people were in attendance, almost all of whom were with us a little over a year ago when you joined us there to launch our 1995 campaign.

During the dinner, our Israel Bonds campaign video was projected onto a large screen (a copy of which is enclosed). I wanted you to know that when your image appeared, the room erupted into a spontaneous thunder of applause. It was truly one of the most moving moments I can remember; it was as though you were with us again.

Your appearance last year for Israel Bonds was the talk of our campaign all year long. And last night, it was abundantly clear why that was so. You made such an impact on our organization and I wanted you to know what a ground-swell of support was still reverberating through Palm Beach, one year later, last evening.

On behalf of the national leadership of Israel Bonds, I thank you for all that you and President Clinton have done in support of the State of Israel. I wish you both all the best in the year to come.

With warmest wishes,

JOANNE WOODWARD

September 12, 1995

Mrs. Hillary Rodham Clinton
The White House
Pennsylvania Avenue
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Mrs. Clinton:

I am writing to invite you to speak as a Joanne Woodward Lecturer this academic year at Sarah Lawrence College. I know you receive a great many such invitations but Alice Ilchman, the President of Sarah Lawrence, and I would be so pleased if you could accept ours. Your integrity and leadership as a woman in public life has been an inspiration to young women throughout the country, a most particularly, the strength and courage you have shown in your speeches recently in China. My congratulations to you for that outstanding display of intestinal fortitude.

Let me tell you a little more about the series itself and the larger program of which it is a part. Although I began college in 1947, I did not graduate until 1990, undoubtedly making me the oldest living undergraduate by quite a few years. Upon y graduation, my husband gave me the most wonderful graduation gift. He endowed a Chair in Public Policy in my name at my alma mater, Sarah Lawrence College.

This gift means a great deal to me. I have longed felt that our society desperately needs more young women and young man of intelligence and character who will devote their lives to public service. The program funded by the Chair which supports a visiting professor annually, is intended not merely to encourage a career in the government but also to explore the many available avenues in which one can serve ones country as well as to provide an academic foundation in practice and theory.

A significant and complementary component of the endowment is the Joanne Woodward Lecture Series. This program is intended to feature one or two outstanding speakers each year who, through their life's work, exemplify the contributions possible through a career in public service. Past speakers have included the historian, David McCullogh and your former colleague, Marian Wright Edelman. Persons like yourself who have been recognized for their public policy contributions will,

860-6655 Emily Diane O'Hara

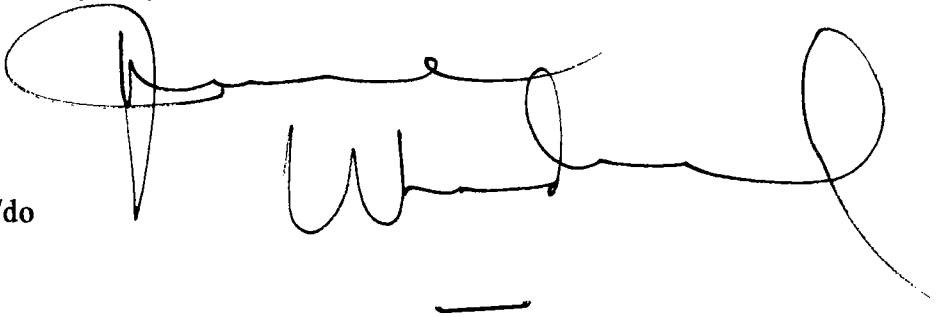
I believe, strongly reinforce the ideals of the program and motivate its graduates. A first lady of the United States may be such a person although not all first ladies have been as involved in public policy as you.

However, that is not the only reason why I would like you, in particular, to speak. I'm inviting you because in the times I have been fortunate to spend with you, I have been very impressed by both your personal qualities of warmth and intelligence, as well as your personal commitment to the goals of public service. I also know that you are a compelling speaker. I must say that although Sarah Lawrence now is a co-ed institution, my personal sympathy and concern lie with its women students. Your example and your career touch so many areas that overlap between women's lives and public policy, from balancing family, career in public life, to working for laws and policies that support women, children, work, and family that you would really be an outstanding lecturer for the series. Your concerns highlight those areas that are of importance and interest to me and to the women at Sarah Lawrence.

I do hope that you will be interested and available - - - this is a wonderful forum. You will have a supportive audience, and you may take the opportunity to address any issues that you wish. The Lecture may be given in the spring or the fall semester, and of course we will accommodate your schedule as to particular dates. However, I know I am asking you rather late (for the fall, at least), and if you are interested, it would be helpful to know that fairly soon.

Thank you very much for your serious consideration of my invitation, and I hope to have the opportunity to see you again in the near future.

Yours very truly,



JW/do

Barbara Walters called to express how upset she was with the NYT story. She forwarded the attached email to you. Mike and I have told them we cannot consider doing anything until the fall. She is fine with that.

Have a terrific trip to Denver. I know everyone there is excited about your trip. I will get all the specifics from Todd Rudham and he'll give it to you.

F A X to: Mrs. Hillary Rodham Clinton

Dear Mrs. Clinton,

I was very distressed when I read the NEW YORK TIMES article on me, although in general, the article was very good. It quoted me as saying I should have been tougher on you in our interview. I do not have to tell you that sometimes one line is removed from an entire sentence or thought.

What the reporter actually said was, "You were criticized for not being tough enough on Mrs. Clinton." After our interview aired, the NEW YORK TIMES excoriated me for being too soft. I thought I was being fair. So what I told Elisabeth Bumiller was that some people had criticized me for being too tough, and other for being too soft. She then asked, "Don't you think you could have been any tougher?" I said, "Well, I don't know, perhaps I could have ben tougher." And from that came the one line.

I thought our interview was superb. I thought my questions were tough. I thought you were honest, forthright and perfectly charming. The interview continues to have an enormous response, and most people felt they understood you better after seeing our conversation.

I just wanted to clear this up.

With admiration, as always,

Barbara

Dear Hillary:

I hope this letter finds you and Bill in good health and in good spirits.

I want to bring the following to your attention in connection with a possible appearance in Southern Westchester County this Spring, Summer or Fall.

You may have heard of the series of anti-semitic incidents that took place in my community, Mamaroneck, New York, a few months ago, because what happened attracted some national news coverage. In fact, that one piece of bad news obscured some very considerable good news, and those isolated bad acts have only served to stimulate more good actions.

Last night, for example, many Jewish people from my local temple (Larchmont Temple) attended a service at the largest African-American church in Mamaroneck (Strait Gate Church). After prayers, Rita Grunbaum, a Holocaust survivor and member of my Temple, spoke to the assembled congregations about her experience. This was only the most recent in a series of highly meaningful joint religious exercises between the Temple and the Church that began in the past year.

Further, the wonderful and growing relationship between Larchmont Temple and Strait Gate Church is only one element of a very constructive dialogue across racial and religious lines that is occurring here. And I am happy to say that I have been in the thick of things in that regard, as evidenced by the attached.

I don't say this to 'toot my own horn'; I am not interested in any reward or further attention.

What I am interested in is this: (a) further promoting the growing sense of community and solidarity here, and encouraging similar developments in other communities, and (b) helping the re-election effort. And it occurred to me that the two could be combined.

If you think that any kind of appearance in Mamaroneck in connection with these developments would be useful, I am sure that we could arrange something meaningful -- whether participation in one of our joint religious exercises; a visit to the Mamaroneck Community Action Program Center, with its refurbished children's library and many programs for children; a stop at one of the local elementary schools where our two-year-old mentoring program for fourth and fifth graders is a great success; or something else entirely.

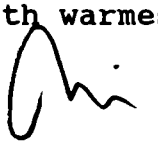
Whether or not this makes any sense, be sure that there are many, many people out there who you do not hear from but who appreciate your work.

With warmest regards,



Marvin Wexler

PROCLAMATION

DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR. was an important leader, visionary and role model who dedicated his life to the pursuit of a dream which would guarantee equal justice for all men and women; and

IT IS FITTING AND APPROPRIATE for our community to come together to study, remember and highlight the ideals Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., held forth and to honor those who have distinguished themselves in our community by taking actions which exemplify those high ideals; and

WHEREAS, Marvin Wexler is a Larchmont citizen who has an outstanding record of supporting human rights; and

WHEREAS, Marvin has created the Diverse People Committee, has arranged tutoring programs, has established a link between Larchmont Temple and the Mamaroneck Community Action Program Center, and has founded AIM for Success, a not for profit group funding youth programs; and

WHEREAS, at the Mamaroneck Community Action Program Center, he has established a free legal advice clinic to aid those facing eviction,

THEREFORE, I, Cheryl W. Lewy, Mayor of the Village of Larchmont, on behalf of the Board of Trustees and citizens of the Village of Larchmont would like to extend our congratulations, admiration and thanks to the recipient of the 1994 King Award established in memory of Peter Fousek for his dedication and concern for all the citizens of Larchmont/Mamaroneck. On this Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Day of January 12, 1994, we congratulate Marvin Wexler for his work to ensure "Liberty and Justice for All," human decency and acts of concern and kindness.

Cheryl W. Lewy, Mayor

Dated: Larchmont, New York
January 12, 1994

PROCLAMATION
Marvin Wexler

WHEREAS, As a member of the Social Action Committee of Larchmont Temple, MARVIN WEXLER has consistently championed the causes of the underprivileged by employing his professional expertise: to aid our residents threatened with eviction procedures and to support the Community Action Program by creating tax-exempt status for its foundation, Aim For Success; and

WHEREAS, MARVIN has worked quietly and determinedly to foster more effective communication and understanding among our richly diverse racial and cultural groups in Larchmont/Mamaroneck by bringing together over twenty churches, synagogues and civic groups representing six hundred people to hear Dr. Cornel West, a well respected and international authority on race relations; and

WHEREAS, MARVIN has continued to be the motivating force in sustaining the [illegible] generated by Dr. West's lecture by organizing [illegible] People Committee which seeks opportunities [illegible] people together.

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESO[illegible]

that I Elaine [illegible], and the members of the Town Council of the Town of [illegible]roneck on behalf of all Town residents are honored to recognize MARVIN WEXLER's contributions to the well being of our community; contributions which help to nourish "The Dream" and vision of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the Town of Mamaroneck to be affixed this 12th day of January 1994.

Dear Pam,

We were recently at the Hungry Mind Bookstore in St. Paul and couldn't get this picture signed by Hillary there. Hillary said if I sent it through you, she'd gladly sign it. It's a picture from our 30-year reunion last Summer in Wash. D.C. We had a great time!

Thanks very much.

Dearest Hillary—

I send you warmest autumn greetings knowing the remarkable energy you are giving to all you encounter during this campaign.

You are in my prayers.

I want you to know what an extraordinary moment it was on the South Rim of the Grand Canyon to hear the President utter the words, "Grand Staircase—Escalante National Monument. . . ." We wept with joy after decades of work — thousands, hundreds of thousands of citizens working around the country on behalf of their preservation. These sacred lands are a reservoir for our spirit. They are safe now.

Thank you.

And thank you to President Clinton for his bold, visionary act.

I enclose the remarks I made prior to his announcement.

Please know of my continued love and respect for who you are and all you are in the world we live in. You carry such dignity.

These canyons of the Escalante await you — they are holding the solitude, silence, and peace you may need but are unable to find right now. I send you sage —

In sisterhood,

May we call their names.
May we praise their names.

Wilderness is not a belief. It is a place. And in Utah, we know these places by name.

What do these places have to say to us as human beings at this point in time?

The Pink Cliffs, the White Cliffs, the Vermillion Cliffs of the Grand Staircase, what do they have to say about life during the Cretaceous, Jurassic, and Triassic Eras? What do they have to say to us about the erosion and uplift of our souls and imaginations?

What voices are carried by the seven species of amphibians (I salamander, 5 toads, and I tree frog) Bufo punctatus, red-spotted toad among them?

Or the twenty-nine species of reptiles also living in the Kaiparowits Basin (I turtle, I6 lizards, I2 snakes) Crotalus, rattlesnake coiled and hissing exposed on the slickrock?

Think about the I83 species of birds and the 74 species of mammals, Aeronautes, white-throated swift; Corvus corax, raven; Canus latrans, coyote; Felis concolor, mountain lion. All presences on the plateau. We may see them or we may not. But always, they are watching.

And what kind of standing do the 84I species of plants have, especially the 42 threatened species, almost half of all those listed in Utah as endangered? Do we recognize them?

There are songs still being sung and stories that long to be told in the places where people lived thousands of years ago, places that braid the Kairparowits Plateau together. In so many ways, the Anasazi have never left.

These lands are alive. When one of us says "Look, there's nothing out there --" What we are really saying is "I cannot see."

The Colorado Plateau is wild. There is still wilderness here. Wilderness holds an original presence giving expression to that which we lack, the losses we long to recover, the absences we seek to reverse. Wilderness revives the memory of unity. Through its protection, we can find faith in our humanity.

We have a history in this country of environmental courage and its roots are found in direct contact with the beauty of the natural world that sustains us. The sacred heart of this continent beats in the unaggitated and free landscapes of North America.

The Kairparowits Plateau is the heart of the heart. Mysterious. Remote. And quiet. It is a monument, a testimony of time. Kaiparowits -- a Paiute word, "Home of the People."

Wallace Stegner writes in Beyond the Hundredth Meridian of " A Blueprint for a Dryland Democracy," referring to John Wesley Powell's 1877 "Arid Lands Report."

Powell's report was, in Stegner's words, "a complete revolution in the system of land surveys, land policy, land tenure...in the West, and a denial of almost every cherished fantasy and myth associated with Western migration and the American Dream...."

Almost 120 years later, these arid lands are still inspiring a revolution of thought. Public lands within the Colorado Plateau possess spiritual values that cannot be measured in economic terms. They dare us to think in geologic terms: Kayenta, Moenavi, Chinle, Shinarump, Toroweep, Coconino and Supai. We are absorbed into a rich, vibrant community of time and space so much larger than our own. We are we're because of love.

We can learn something from this redrock country as we stand on its edge looking in -- We can learn humility in the face of Creation; Reverence in the presence of God and faith in ourselves for exercising restraint in terms of what land should be developed and what lands should be preserved.

The Hopi Elders have told us this morning, it is time for healing. A healing must begin within our communities, within ourselves, regarding our relationship to the natural world. We are not separate.

By establishing this National Monument, President Clinton has chosen to listen not only to the people but to the land, and issue a benevolent caress upon these western lands. When the Bard of the Plateau, Edward Abbey wrote, "Sentiment without action is the ruin of the soul." This action taken by our President restores our soul.

It is a vow made and taken by our President that acknowledges the political will of this country manifested by an impassioned populace and an engaged citizenry that defies politics, who have said again and again for generations, simply this, "These lands are sacred."

62-year debate comes to end

By Charles Wilkinson

The struggle over the redrock lands in Southern Utah has raged for more than half a century. In 1934, Interior Secretary Harold Ickes proposed a 4.5-million-acre Escalante National Monument, but local interests defeated it. In 1964, major parts of the area were protected by creation of Canyonlands National Park.

The battle intensified in 1979, when the Bureau of Land Management released its inventory of roadless areas proposed for wilderness. Then, in 1990, Utah citizen conservation groups produced a report, Wilderness at the Edge, calling for 5.7 million acres of wilderness. Bills to make the citizen proposal into law, however, failed in the Congress.

In 1995, after the Republicans took control of Congress, the Utah delegation introduced a bill — vehemently opposed by conservationists — that would add 1.8 million acres to the wilderness system, although the lands would be subject to many kinds of uses not normally allowed in wilderness. All other Southern Utah lands would have been thrown open for development. In the face of a rising tide of national support for conserving Southern Utah land, the Utah delegation was unable to put the bill through either house.

On Wednesday, President Clinton took one of the most dramatic steps in public lands history, proclaiming the 1.7-million-acre Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument.

The adjoining remarks by Terry Tempest Williams, naturalist-in-residence at the Utah Museum of Natural History and author of several books, including "Refuge," are adapted from her talk at the dedication ceremony on the South Rim of the Grand Canyon.

Charles Wilkinson is a University of Colorado law professor.
