Dear Ms. Williams:

The Annual Survey of American Law is proud to dedicate its 1995 volume to Hillary Rodham Clinton. Enclosed please find 250 copies of the tributary reprint; these materials will also be bound in the front of Annual Survey's 1995 hardcover volume, as part of our permanent tribute to the First Lady. That volume of the journal is due out at the end of the calendar year.

Copies of the Dedication were sent to each of the contributing writers, and to some of the guests who attended the ceremony on April 25th.

We are pleased with the final product, and hope that the First Lady enjoys the much deserved praise. Thank you again for all your assistance with this year's event.

Sincerely,

Annual Survey of American Law

Annual Survey of American Law, an honorary, student-edited journal at New York University School of Law is now beginning its fifty-third year of publication. Annual Survey features notes and articles exploring current legal trends and interpreting significant decisions and legislation. Annual Survey's focus on recent trends in the law is unique. Our subscribers comprise major law firms, libraries, and law schools throughout the world. More foreign lawyers subscribe to Annual Survey than nearly any other law journal in the nation.

Each year, Annual Survey sponsors a symposium, which focuses on a developing topic in a single area of the law and features prominent legal scholars who present papers on a developing legal issue. Past symposiums have covered environmental law, bankruptcy law, and hate crimes. This year's program, "Fundamental Rights on the Information Superhighway," explored how the advent of the Information Superhighway will impact fundamental rights in the areas of property, privacy and expression.

Each Annual Survey volume is dedicated to an exemplary legal figure. The Board of Editors of Annual Survey is proud to dedicate the 1995 Volume to Hillary Rodham Clinton.

Dear Ms. Williams:

On behalf of the membership of the Annual Survey of American Law, I am writing to thank you for your help in organizing our Dedication ceremony for the First Lady. We realize that planning this event demanded a good deal of time from your already crowded schedule, and we appreciate your assistance. It also was a great surprise that you were able to be in New York and participate in the evening.

Although you must hear this compliment often, I was extremely impressed with everyone in your office. Marjorie Tarmey was particularly helpful and patient during our innumerable phone calls and fax communications.

On a more personal note, coordinating the Dedication was a terrific experience for me, and the opportunity to share the evening with Mrs. Clinton and pay tribute to her was truly the highpoint of my years in law school.

When the tribute issue is published, which I anticipate will be in the next several months, copies will be forwarded to your office.

Sincerely,

Lauren Aguiar

Students concerned over possible the reduction of AmeriCorps funding; NYU supports program

As first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton expressed a positive outlook on the AmeriCorps program during a visit to Seward Park High School yesterday, the NYU students working at the school through Project SafetyNet, a project of AmeriCorps, had mixed feelings about the possibility of reduction of AmeriCorps funding.

The GOP's proposed cuts to the program would "kill AmeriCorps," representatives from the Cooperation for National Service, which oversees the project, said. Some consequences, they said, would include an immediate dismissal of 1,000 AmeriCorps members from across the country, an additional 15,000 would be phased out this summer and 29,000 would not be able to begin their service in September.

After joining Clinton at Seward Park, SafetyNet National Director Leslie Berlowitz, also NYU's vice president for Institutional Advancement, calls the possible results devastating. "It sends out a message that discourages people," she said.

Noting that the benefits of AmeriCorps far exceed the costs, Berlowitz said a reduction of the program would suggest to prospective participants and to the public that it is the other way around. "It would be a great loss to the commitment of young people," she said.

Senate rescission proposals would include cuts to national service by $105 million. If this occurs, 72 percent of funding for AmeriCorps would be cut. Such cuts would reduce the number of AmeriCorps participants by 1,000 with additional reductions taking place over the next few months.

Though aware of a possible reduction in AmeriCorps funding, many members felt assured on the most part that the program would remain intact.

"I'm not really stressed about it," said Aileen Chen just before Clinton arrived. "NYU is behind this project enough that they would fund it... with the support we've been getting today, it's really obvious."

At NYU, the commitment to insuring a continuation of the program was expressed. NYU has pledged to back the program even if cuts are made in the national program.

"Community Service is and always has been a high priority for New York University," said NYU President L. Jay Oliva in a statement. "We are especially committed to assisting New York City's public schools. We are dedicated to continuing our tradition of service through the AmeriCorps program."

When asked what the experience has been like so far, Chen said coming to a school and working there is "a lot tougher" than the members first thought. But the work is about communication.

Chen said, "it's really about relating to the students," adding, "that's one of our strongest points."

One of the group's accomplishments at Seward Park, Chen said, was extending conflict resolution workshops to the ninth and tenth grades.

Congresswoman Nydia Velasquez,

Democrat from Manhattan for the Lower East Side District, observed the session yesterday at Seward Park as she sat two seats away from Clinton. "She feels positive about it," said Clara Morris, press secretary for Velasquez, on the congresswoman's position on AmeriCorps. "She's here to observe first hand."

Velasquez spoke positively on the program during the session, saying that AmeriCorps members "protect the safety net of our nation."

Roderick Harris, a Tisch School of the Arts [TSOA] junior said he is not particularly worried about the project's funding being cut. "I try to be optimistic about things and I know the Republicans have power right now," he said. "But I think they realize some of the consequences of what's going to happen to this country if a program like AmeriCorps is cut."

When asked why he got involved with the program, Harris put it simply: "To give something back to the community." He described his purpose as a member. "I'm the liaison between AmeriCorps and Seward Park High School. I'm the middleman, making sure communication is given to both sides and working very closely with the students in whatever capacity they need me."

Shetal Sheth, a TSOA freshman, joined AmeriCorps as an extension of her previous commitment. "Well, honestly I have always been involved in community service," Sheth said. "I heard about the program and thought it would be great. I've been serving and learning. It is part of my day. The relationships that you form there carry on to your life"

First Lady speaks on service, accepts honor

*Clinton stresses need for service,
justice in her Law School speech*

Katie Thomas
Associate Features Editor

Stressing a need to focus energy on public service and justice, first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton accepted the dedication of the latest volume of a student-edited journal. The dedication took place in Tishman Auditorium yesterday.

"This is a great, great moment in our history," said Law School Dean John E. Sexton, who opened the ceremony attended by invited Law School faculty, students, and guests. Sexton called Clinton "a spectacular lawyer who stands as a goal for each of us to seek."

The Annual Survey of American Law dedicated its 1995 volume to the first lady in honor of her "many contributions to the legal world and her advocacy for children's issues in the political and social arenas," according to Annual Survey Managing Editor Lauren Aguiar. Past honorees include Supreme Court Justices John Paul Stevens, Harry Blackmun, and Thurgood Marshall.

NYU President L. Jay Oliva delivered the opening remarks, saying Clinton's visit stands for the "public service in this law school, for community service in this university."

Oliva compared the goals of education to a three-legged stool: the first leg, he said, was self-enrichment, the second, a tool for professional advancement. The third, Oliva said, teaches people "how to live with each other."

"[We should] thank Hillary Clinton for reminding us of this third leg," Oliva said.

Indeed, the focus of the day seemed to be on such service.

"We have here a force who would not come here just to receive something, but to give something," Oliva said. Earlier in the day, Clinton visited Seward Park High School to speak with NYU students involved in the AmeriCorps project, celebrating the first annual National Day of Service [see related article].

All of the speakers stressed

Clinton's dedication to public service and commitment to social progress. Speakers at the dedication included NYU President Emeritus John Brademas, recently named chair of the President's Committee on the Arts and the Humanities; Boston Globe columnist Loretta McLaughlin; Boston University Professor and 1986 Nobel Peace Laureate Elie Wiesel; Ernest Boyer, president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching; and University of Arkansas Professor Diane Blair.

Wiesel praised Clinton's dedication to helping children in particular. The Nobel Laureate said that while "we are witnessing a degradation of our children's conditions in the world," Clinton is one of the few who has been "sensitive to [the children's] needs, their concerns."

"You have made the children your reason for using the law as a powerful weapon," Wiesel said.

Many compared Clinton to former first lady Eleanor Roosevelt, known in her time as an outspoken advocate for human rights and social progress. Boyer noted the strong American tradition of woman social activists, citing past reformers as Dorothea Dix and Jane Addams. "Hillary Rodham Clinton is profoundly a part of this great tradition," Boyer said.

Others acknowledged the qualities which set her apart from past activists and presidents' wives. The only first lady to be a fully accredited lawyer, Clinton stands as a role model to many other professional women. "She's one of us—a working woman," McLaughlin said. Clinton "simply thrills American women who see a small piece of themselves in her," she said.

McLaughlin cited Clinton's ability to handle "such an enormous and difficult job in a terribly difficult time."

That ability touched a chord with Aguiar, who said Clinton's life "serves as an example of the successful composition of a life." Her flexibility "demonstrates strength of character and wisdom," Aguiar said.

Clinton opened her address on a very personal note. "It is for me to say thank you for the inspiration ... all of [these speakers] have meant something to me in direct and personal ways," Clinton said.

The first lady expressed concern for the victims of last week's bombing in Oklahoma City, suggesting that as we "grieve over last week's terrible disaster in Oklahoma, [we should] join in tribute to two great ideals." These ideals, she said, are service and justice, particularly pertinent to her Law School audience.

The "true servants of justice," Clinton said, "are found among the nameless rescuers" who donate their in Oklahoma. They "understand better than most the meaning of service and justice," she said.

The work and heart of Hillary Rodham Clinton are happily coincident in her chief contributions to the law in Arkansas. The interests of women and children hold a primary claim on her emotions, and it is precisely in these areas that her legal legacy to the state is most significant. Her public commitment to these concerns has a long history and promises to extend indefinitely into the future.

By 1972, when she was still a law student, Hillary had already worked one summer with the Children's Defense Fund and had begun her association with the Yale Child Study Center. Twenty-three years later and less than a month prior to this writing, with her daughter at her side and the world's attention upon them both, Hillary was in Asia, still in the process of educating both herself and others about the problems faced by women and children.

In 1975 Hillary and Bill met me at the airport on my first trip to Fayetteville, Arkansas, and immediately took me to a volleyball tournament involving law faculty and students. Between games, students were sharing their excitement about participating in the University of Arkansas Legal Clinic, a newly-instituted program which gave law students hands-on experience and provided counsel to students and representation to people unable to afford an attorney.

Though the clinic was on the drawing board before she arrived, Hillary, as its first director, gave it life. Without diminishing the clinic's effectiveness, she skillfully designed the structure to minimize the opposition voiced by some members of the local bar who viewed it as a potential competitor for fees. Through the professionalism and thoroughness she inspired in the students, she won over the judges who were initially concerned about allowing students to be advocates in their courts. The program also benefitted from the reputation she quickly established, through her own court appearances, as an extraordinarily effective lawyer.

The windows of my law school office face the handsome building into which the clinic has recently moved. I more than occasionally glance at the folks entering the clinic and enjoy the thought that for more than two decades these clients, predominately women, have been finding assistance from an institution Hillary helped to shape. I could duplicate the experience if I were across town, observing the activity at Ozark Legal Services. There, too, she played a critical role in its inception while on the law faculty. Later, in 1976, President Carter appointed Hillary to the board of the Legal Services Corporation. She pushed hard for expanded access by the poor to legal assistance, drawing heavily on her experience in setting up both the University of Arkansas Legal Clinic and Ozark Legal Services. Now, in part because of her efforts, in county after county across the nation, the scene from my window is, at least for the moment, daily repeated.

In addition to such institutional impact, she also significantly influenced the law through the attitudinal changes she engendered. Many of her students have now assumed significant leadership roles as judges, lawyers and legislators, and none passed through her classroom unaffected, especially in regard to two areas. First, her high expectations of the students raised their expectations of themselves. Hillary was no less demanding of herself then, without the pressure of the White House glare, as she is now. And by both example and exhortation, she made it clear that she expected others to push toward their potential as well. In particular she had no patience with the argument, occasionally voiced then, that she was importing standards which were inappropriate for Arkansans, and I believe that she succeeded in dispelling, in most instances, that pernicious notion.

Second, she was a role model. There, I've said it, though aware that the phrase is daily less fashionable. But we're talking the seventies here, and for anyone who was there, that is exactly what she was. Word was out that she was a tough litigator, that she had played a significant role in the Watergate hearings, that she had a Yale law degree, and that she could have gotten virtually any legal job she wanted. They saw that she was smart as hell and was in complete control of both her classroom and her subject matter. Their contact with Hillary was for many of these students, male and female alike, a catalyst that triggered a rethinking of the roles they assigned to "lady lawyers".

When Bill was elected Attorney General in 1976, they moved to Little Rock, and the lawyers and judges there were no more immune to her ability to confound conceptions than were their counterparts in Fayetteville. She joined the Rose Law Firm and consciously set out to hone further her skills as a litigator. In short order she became the firm's first female partner and helped to create opportunities for other women lawyers across the state.

Ultimately specializing in commercial litigation, Hillary savored its competitiveness, appreciated the living it provided, and both enjoyed and deeply respected her colleagues at the firm. That work, however, did not fully engage her emotionally. It was not her mission. She continued to take cases involving children's rights, devoted considerable energy to the formation of Arkansas Advocates for Children and Family, took a leadership role on the board of the Children's Defense Fund, and actively participated with her husband in thinking about how they could help address the significant social and economic problems Arkansas faced.

In November 1980, Bill was seeking election to his second term as governor. On election day, Hillary came to Fayetteville to vote and to work the five o'clock shift change at the Standard Register Company. I drove her back to the airport. Unsuspecting of the impending defeat, Hillary was tired, ready for the campaign to be concluded, and eager, she said, to get back to work. The work she had in mind was not her law practice, though she was thankful it would be there. Rather it was for her the reviving process of using her talents to improve the lives of women and children.

After an electorally enforced two-year hiatus, Bill returned to the governor's office, and Hillary began the work that would become, in my opinion, her single greatest contribution to Arkansas. In his inaugural address in January 1983, Bill singled out educational reform as the critical component in any plan to improve Arkansas' economic future. He then appointed Hillary as the chairperson of the Arkansas Education Standards Committee, a commission he created to devise a set of minimum standards for public schools. Her task was two-fold: to craft the standards and to create a public consensus about their desirability in order to make a tax increase to implement them politically feasible.

She held hearings across the state, both gathering information and dispensing it. If there is a high school gym in Arkansas where she did not meet the public, I am unaware of it. Her extraordinary knowledge, her exceptional skills as a facilitator, and, most important, the depth of her conviction about the rightness of this project galvanized public opinion. Less than eleven months after the creation of the standards committee, Arkansans passed a sales tax increase to fund the standards, which included minimum class sizes (no more, for example, than twenty students in a kindergarten class), a longer school year, a much lower counselor/student ratio, and enhanced curricular offerings, especially in the areas of science and math.

Back to my office window. A month ago, before the leaves intervened, I could see, to the left of the Clinic and a few hundred yards behind it, Leverett Elementary School. There, too, Hillary is still at work.

In 1985 Hillary brought to Arkansas a preschool program that had impressed her on a trip to Israel five years earlier. The Home Instruction Program for Preschool Youngsters, known as HIPPY, was a logical extension of her work on the standards. She had found that a critical determinate of a child's performance in school is the educational level of the mother. HIPPY involves home visitations by teams of educators to show impoverished mothers how best to teach their preschool children in the home. It continues to be an enormously successful program.

Hillary has a good friend, Dr. Robert A. Lefflar, who was her former law faculty colleague and who has a special connection to New York University. In fact, she lived in his Fayetteville home one summer when he was teaching, as he did for decades, at NYU's Appellate Judges Seminar, which he was instrumental in creating. At 94, he is the towering figure in the history of legal education and reform in Arkansas and ranks respectably among the great legal minds of the nation in this century. His autobiography, ONE LIFE IN THE LAW, modestly recounts his immersion in those pursuits. The definitive biography of Hillary will surely recount a similar immersion and a similar effectiveness.

The nation is now the beneficiary of the intellect, spirit, and commitment that continues to enrich Arkansas through the people and institutions Hillary Rodham Clinton touched. "How do these decisions affect women and children?" has become a refrain in the Clinton Administration. This is not an accident.

It's a privilege to joint in this tribute to Mrs. Clinton, a First Lady Americans know for her first-rate intellect, her engaging personality, and her commitment to serving the public.

B.A. and I have known eight First Ladies. I think each one has felt her job was the best job in America.

Over the last 40 years, each has followed a great tradition, using her special office to highlight a need in our country or help others improve their lot. They've all made contributions, as Americans would expect them to.

But I can't recall ever seeing anyone so committed to an issue and anyone work with the intensity and feeling that Mrs. Clinton and the President did this past year on health care. When Congress reforms this country's health care system, we'll have Mrs. Clinton to thank.

The President often says we live in a time of change, and Mrs. Clinton--because she's been a working mother and an extraordinary lawyer--has changed the role of a First Lady.

She still maintains the great traditions. I've seen her at State Dinners, serve as a gracious hostess in America's most honored home. I've seen her raise funds for charities, and work with children who need special help, as every other First Lady before her has done.

But she also has taken on added responsibilities. I had never been in a policy meeting with a First Lady, until Mrs. Clinton entered the White House. I watched the President, in his moments of decision making turn to her for advice and counsel in areas she's the expert on.

They're partners. They're a team. And their collective wisdom guides our country.

In a different time, this may not have worked. If Mrs. Clinton wasn't as talented as she is, it may not have worked. Knowing human nature, some of the people in the room would probably have played to her, thinking through her, they can get to the President.

I believe as more couples have two careers, and as more women enter public service, Mrs. Clinton serves as an inspiration to them.

she has a huge fan club in this country, and B.A. and I are proud to be among the admirers. You've picked a very worthy lady and lawyer to honor.

A TRIBUTE TO HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON

In Carol Shield's recent novel The Stone Diaries, one character observes, "Life is an endless recruiting of witnesses." When Hillary Rodham moved to Fayetteville in 1975, to teach at the University of Arkansas, nobody was consciously "recruiting witness." Rather, as two of only a handful of female faculty members, she in law and I in political science, we quickly discovered many strong mutual interests (books, politics, children, education, the status of women) which drew us together and have sustained our relationship ever since.

However, as the friend with whom I once batted worn tennis balls in the city park and rode in a truck moving furniture became a national figure (and a media obsession), I have frequently been called by the press to share my memories and observations. At first, I was eager to do so: when one is familiar with and enthusiastic about a subject, sharing is a pleasure. And so I happily recalled instances of Hillary's devotion to her own daughter and her abiding interest in my five children; of her concern for her parents (and, again, for mine); and of her knack for thoughtful acts of friendship. I gave the inquiring press vivid vignettes illustrating her determination to bring out the best from each of her students when she was a teacher, and then her resolve to excel in the courtroom as well as the classroom. I gladly recounted the courage and wisdom and tenacity she demonstrated in leading the battle for better schools in Arkansas, working to upgrade Arkansas Children's Hospital, and helping establish Arkansas Advocates for Children and Families, and a statewide Single Parent Scholarship Fund.

Little of which was ever reported, or even--I began to suspect--recorded. As I enthused on about this attentive parent, devoted daughter, fun-loving friend, supportive spouse, talented teacher, advocate extraordinaire, the clicking computer keys of my interviewer would slow, and finally grow silent. And then, often, would come the question: "Yes, but what is she really like?"

It may well take future historians, more interested in telling the truth than in "exposing" imaginary evils, to offer the complete portrait of Hillary Rodham Clinton; but perhaps this dedication issue, contributed to by those who actually know her work and her life, is a good contemporary beginning. So, for the record, here are a few moments I have "witnessed" since my friend became First Lady, and what I think those incidents signify.

President Clinton's first State of the Union Address, in February, 1993, was a home-run, a thrilling triumph. Afterwards, when aides and friends gathered in the Solarium to toast a very sweet success, someone called for a special salute to the First Lady, for whom the standing ovation from Congress had seemed especially heartfelt and fervent. Hillary was not there to receive the tribute, however. Upon returning to the White House she learned that Chelsea needed help with her homework, and so she had quickly excused herself from the celebration and hastened to her daughter's side.

BLAIR TRB / Version: 4-21-95 Printed: April 21, 1995

In September, 1993, the national media gave rave reviews to Hillary's marathon, flawless, sequential presentations before U.S. Congressional Committees on health care reform. While I was delighted to see some positive press for my friends in the White House, two things struck me about these stories. First, there was something almost insulting, certainly patronizing, about the seeming astonishment (no staff! no notes!! complete and thoughtful sentences!!!) that a woman, a mere spouse, could execute so excellently on so public a stage. Second, what seemed so impressive to me about Hillary's achievement was that on the day preceding her unprecedented performance, (a day when most of us would have been demanding seclusion, cramming information, snarling at subordinates, and putting our families on hold), Hillary traveled to New York because it was important to the President that she be present for his first address to the United Nations, then rushed home for a school meeting where her presence was important to Chelsea. Only then, late at night, did she have time to fully focus and prepare.

None of these, or countless other daily juggling acts, makes Hillary Rodham Clinton eligible for martyrdom. Rather, as she would be the very first to point out, they simply illustrate the lives that most of the women who are her contemporaries are now living: trying to meet and balance all of our responsibilities, and find ways to usefully exercise all our talents.

The press grows impatient, I think, because they want an easily identifiable image, a simple story, someone who either cares about making herself and the White House look good, or cares about health care and women's rights. But most of the women I know (and surely many women in the media, which makes some of the strange stories especially bewildering) care about all those things, and many more besides. Few of us today have the luxury of choosing this or that, homemaker or professional, wife or worker. We are all those things, because they all must be done. Hillary Rodham Clinton simply happens to be the first of our First Ladies who has dared to do them all openly, and well, and without apology.

When I was a schoolchild I was both fascinated and horrified by stories of the canaries who were caged down into the mines as early warning systems for the miners; if poisonous gases started seeping into the mine-shafts, the canaries would quickly expire, thereby giving warning to the men in the mines. I wonder now whether Hillary is playing the risky part of national canary for the women of America. If she can survive the distortions and misrepresentations, the poisonous slurs and constant criticisms, it will be easier breathing for us, and our daughters, and all the millions of women who are coming on behind. The smart money is on the canary.

TRIBUTE TO HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON

I have the honor for a third time of paying public tribute to the First Lady of the United States, Hillary Rodham Clinton. The first occasion was in March 1992 when, as President of New York University, I introduced Mrs. Clinton as principal speaker when the New York University School of Law marked its "Celebration of 100 Years of Women Graduates." As a woman who is herself a highly regarded lawyer, Mrs. Clinton was a most appropriate and distinguished speaker at a salute to the education of women in the law and recognition of their achievements in the legal profession.

Since then, of course, Mrs. Clinton has become our First Lady and has elevated her long-time advocacy of children's rights, public schools and universal health care to the level of national debate and attention.

On September 21, 1994, President Clinton did me the honor of appointing me Chairman of the President's Committee on the Arts and the Humanities while asking the First Lady to serve as Honorary Chair. At a reception at the White House that day, Mrs. Clinton spoke eloquently about this responsibility. She said then:

We want to support and nurture our artists and humanists and the traditions that they represent. And we want also to bring those traditions alive for literally millions and millions of children who too often grow up without opportunities for creative expression, without opportunities for intellectual stimulation, without exposure to the diverse cultural traditions that contribute to our identity as Americans.

Too often today, instead of children discovering the joyful rewards of painting, or music, or sculpting, or writing, or testing a new idea, they express themselves through acts of frustration, helplessness, hopelessness and even violence.

. . . We hope that among contributions this Committee makes, it will be thinking of and offering ideas about how we can provide children with safe havens to develop and explore their own creative and intellectual potentials.

The arts and humanities have the potential for being such safe havens. In communities where programs already exist, they are providing soul-saving and life-enhancing opportunities for young people. And I am delighted that as one of its major endeavors, this Committee will be considering ways of expanding those opportunities to all of our children.

Last month I had the privilege of being at the United Nations to hear the First Lady speak of the challenge to men and women everywhere, and particularly women, actively to participate in promoting social progress. Clearly Mrs. Clinton has been inspired by the life of one of her eminent predecessors as First Lady, Eleanor Roosevelt. And like Eleanor Roosevelt before her, Hillary Clinton breaks new ground in public service.

Like Eleanor Roosevelt, Hillary Rodham Clinton has

TRIBUTE TO HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON

Day by day, Hillary Rodham Clinton is building an enduring contribution to our national life that can be discerned even amid the rush and tumult of current events. She is serving the nation in one of its defining moments and when historians place these events in perspective, surely she will be given a prominent place. By her style, her sensitivity, her presence and her competence, Mrs. Clinton has already expanded the nation's understanding of the role of the First Lady. Never again will it be limited to the single role of national hostess and helpmate. Called by circumstance and equipped with the extraordinary gifts of grace and intelligence, she has broken that mold--a task that has often placed her in an unenviable position and that places all those who follow in her debt.

This is what history may say, but for those who identify themselves as people of faith we acknowledge Hillary Rodham Clinton today, and in all the days to follow, as a woman of faith.

The New Testament urges believers to "be doers of the word and not merely hearers" (NRSV James 1:22). Hillary Rodham Clinton has taken this admonition to heart, as is evident from the way her many achievements have contributed to the common good.

In the language of theology I salute her tonight as an incarnational person, in that her words become incarnate in deeds. Throughout her life she has been deeply involved in work that protects children, that upholds the dignity of women, that supports families in concrete, meaningful ways and that seeks health and wholeness for all people.

As a very busy attorney, she showed her commitment by giving time and energy as an active president of the Children's Defense Fund, advocating a morally grounded and highly practical approach to caring for all children, and especially for the very young who suffer from the effects of material and spiritual poverty. As First Lady, her work toward health care reform in this nation combined passionate caring with knowledge and skill. Because of the sacrifices she made to pursue this work, the issue was raised to a level that it had never been raised to before and in a way that ensures it can never be removed from the American agenda. Most recently I admired her role at the United Nations Social Summit in Copenhagen where she spoke eloquently on behalf of the people of the United States on the issue of social development and the role of women in that process.

Examples abound of the care and high seriousness with which she takes every assignment that life gives her. More testaments to her grace, integrity and competence could be shared in a lengthier forum. Taken together, her work provides a powerful model for women everywhere. She is the image of a woman with expertise, poise, and credibility. In recasting the role of First Lady she helps all women to be taken seriously, and at the same time, she demonstrates those qualities that have been

Hillary Rodham Clinton is a woman of extraordinary intelligence, understanding, compassion and commitment. In more than thirty years of involvement in health policy at the federal, state, and local levels, I have never met an individual who was able to grasp the complexities of health care organization, delivery, and financing as well as Mrs. Clinton. She not only has this extraordinary ability to grasp complex information, but she was able to communicate it to a range of audiences, professional, and public, more clearly and accurately than anyone in my experience. While these talents are important, even more important is her capacity to listen to individuals and families about their experiences in order to learn fully how the system does and does not operate. Her deep compassion was evident as she listened to individuals and families throughout the country-- from tribal chiefs in Montana, to parents in a children's hospital in Washington, to a broad range of citizens in Lincoln, Nebraska, to sick patients in nursing homes, parents of disable children, and to citizens of the broadest range across the country. She read the thousands of letters sent to her by people from throughout the nation in order to better understand what health care meant to people and what needed to be done to assure everyone in the United States access to a decent level of health care.

These are all great qualities and ones to be admired, but I think, even more, I admire Hillary Rodham Clinton's integrity and strength of character. She has a clear sense of who she is, what her values are, and what she believes. She does not wet her finger, stick it up to the wind, and determine what she will believe on a particular issue at a particular moment in time.

Finally, Mrs. Clinton has been an inspiration for many of us who have had the opportunity to work with her as Presidential employees. When the times are toughest, when the road is most rocky, when the tasks seem insurmountable, she has been a source of not only encouragement, but energy and inspiration. While many of us have been beneficiaries, directly and individually, of her support, her knowledge, her understanding, her commitment and her incredible energy, all of the American people benefit from her extraordinary qualities, but most of all from her integrity.

A TRIBUTE TO HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON

When I was eleven years old, I had the opportunity to listen to a speech by, and then spend precious moments with, Eleanor Roosevelt. As part of the multiple celebrations that year marking the tenth anniversary of the United Nations, my mother organized a remarkable evening for several thousand New Yorkers, featuring Mrs. Roosevelt.

My mother organized the event on an unpaid, voluntary basis, but she decided to retain two "perks" for her family. First, she made sure that her only child would go on stage to present a bouquet of roses to the former First Lady immediately upon the conclusion of her speech. Then, she made sure that we would transport Mrs. Roosevelt from the event in our family car--an arrangement that undoubtedly presaged the need for a tighter and more protective Secret Service.

That evening, 40 years ago, is etched indelibly in my memory. Mrs. Roosevelt was eloquent and compassionate, dignified and warm, purposeful and friendly. She inspired a genuine sense of goodness about public life.

Years later, I carefully observed my daughter's reactions when she met--and when she watched television interviews with--another very remarkable First Lady, Hillary Rodham Clinton. My daughter Sarah, who (unlike her younger brothers) is not particularly awed by famous people, has an unmistakable glow when she listens to the First Lady. On one such occasion, during the Presidential campaign, Sarah declared most emphatically: "Hillary Clinton makes me feel very good!"

As Sarah later explained to me, Hillary makes her feel good to be a woman. Sarah finds inspiration and reaffirmation from women who are strong and gentle, determined and kind, and who have a finely-tuned, life-affirming social conscience. It is those qualities that Hillary enlivens in Sarah.

Above the din of shrill acrimony and demonization that passes as political discourse these days, Sarah--through Hillary's example--has gained a much better understanding about the positive potentialities of public service.

Sarah's perceptions about the First Lady are well grounded. Of Hillary's many fine qualities that abundantly substantiate Sarah's impressions, three are particularly salient for me.

First, empathy. Although the First Lady's virtuosity in testifying before five Congressional committees on health reform was properly chronicled, her interactions in meetings with ordinary people were, in my judgment, even more impressive. For people experiencing unfathomable emotions watching loved ones bear the direst consequences of an inequitable health system, Hillary was a reassuring presence. She listened. She consoled. She explained. She gave hope. She infused strength, and she seemed to gain strength in return.

Second, an indomitable spirit. No one can deny that the First Lady has had to confront difficult, and undoubtedly emotional, moments of a profound adversity during the past four years. But, even during the most troubled periods of the campaign, and the denouement of the health reform fight, and this past November's elections, the First Lady demonstrated a resiliency that is truly remarkable. She remains focused. She moves on. Through her example, and with her words of encouragement, she helps us to find the next, highest ground.

POLLACK TRB / Version: 4-21-95 Printed: April 21, 1995

Third, her unswerving support for low-income and other vulnerable constituencies. Time and again, throughout her career and her ascendancy to national leadership, Hillary Clinton has been a steady, reliable and thoughtful voice for people who are poor and deserve a helping hand. At the Legal Services Corporation, in the fight for universal health coverage, as an eloquent spokesperson for America's children, and in the quest for improved educational opportunities, Hillary Clinton has effectively opened doors and championed new possibilities for "the other America." In so doing, she has enriched us all.

Sarah instinctively knows why I and our family's best friends, felt overjoyed on the night of November 8, 1992. For so many of us, it was an opportunity to dream once again. Although we now know better how difficult it will be to achieve our dreams, Hillary Rodham Clinton's vitality, inspiration and encouragement will keep us going, keep us working, keep us fighting--and keep us dreaming.

Hillary Rodham Clinton is an unusual woman who has spent her life doing extraordinary things.

She graduated from law school at a time when few women chose law as a profession. Since then, she has balanced with grace the demands of public life with the pressures of protecting and nurturing a child being raised in the national spotlight. And with great effect, she has used her personal and professional experiences as an advocate for women, children, and families, and to advance their rights in the eyes of the law.

There is no constitutionally defined job description for the role of First Lady. She can look to tradition, to the times in which she lives, to the demands placed upon her by the President and her family. But the women who have made the greatest impact on our nation are the ones who have blazed a trail that is uniquely their own.

This is the course Hillary Rodham Clinton has followed so remarkably these last two and one-half years.

As First Lady, she has opened the White House to more Americans than have visited the First Family's residence in our history. On health care, she opened the policymaking process to victims of disease, families haunted by extraordinary health care expenses, and to the community of healers, practitioners and administrators. As a result, we are closer today than ever before to reforming our nation's health care system.

Most of all, she has opened the minds and hearts of Americans about the role, the pressures and the opportunities that come with being a First Lady, a mother, and a President's partner at this important time in our history.

As a member of the President's Cabinet, and as a former member of the President's staff, it has been my privilege to know and admire Hillary Rodham Clinton. She is a wise counselor, an enormously sensitive, decent and compassionate person, and someone to whom we have well entrusted the role of First Lady in our national life.

Hillary Rodham Clinton is worth knowing better. The more closely one observes her, the more impressed one is by her intellectual curiosity and human sensitivity.

A woman with a mind of her own, deeply committed to social values, she sets high standards for others and ever higher ones for herself.

She does what she says and says what she wants to say--not what others want to hear.

Whatever she does, she does well, with genuine though subdued enthusiasm.

Her language is clear, her words precise, her initiatives courageous. She knows what she wants, though she also knows that one cannot obtain everything one wants.

I wish she were appointed by the President of the United States to the unpaid cabinet position of Secretary for Human Rights--a field in which she could do wonders for all those who need an intercessor.

HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON DEDICATION
BY HER MAJESTY QUEEN NOOR OF JORDAN
AMMAN, APRIL 1995

I was very pleased to be asked to write a few words of dedication about Hillary Rodham Clinton, because it allowed me to express some of my thoughts about a truly remarkable person, who has also become a good friend.

Hillary Clinton, in many ways, has enhanced the importance of the challenging roles of public servant and First Lady through her unfaltering personal courage and sense of compassion, her unwavering support for social justice and human rights, and her dedication to the welfare of American society, particularly to those whose voices are too seldom heard, such as children. Those qualities, coupled with Mrs. Clinton's education, legal experience and political and social awareness, have enabled her to be an articulate champion of issues of concern to many throughout the world.

But it is Mrs. Clinton's personal integrity, her intellectual honesty and commitment to dialogue and understanding in international relations that have impressed me most.

In the past year, Jordan has witnessed some of the most critical and momentous events in its history. In July of 1994, the Washington Declaration, signed on the South Lawn of the White House, ended 46 years of conflict between the State of Israel and the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan. Mrs. Clinton was more than simply a gracious and generous hostess; she was a partner in Jordan and Israel's shared hopes for a better future for the Middle East and all its peoples. Like a mirror of her country, the United States, she was our partner in peace.

Tribute To Hillary Rodham Clinton
by
Ernest L. Boyer, President
The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching

In every generation, since the United States began, notable women have turned their talents to great causes, often becoming advocates for the least advantaged. Going beyond mere good works, and private acts of benevolence, these leaders, of great competence and conviction, profoundly influenced the public-policy issues of their day.

Consider, for example, Dorothea Dix, the Unitarian school teacher in Massachusetts, who led a national mental health crusade. By the time of the Civil War, in large part through her labors, twenty-eight states, four cities, and the federal government constructed public institutions to treat, more humanely, the mentally disabled.

In 1889, Jane Addams, with Ellen Gates Starr, founded Hull House in a dilapidated mansion, in a crowded Chicago neighborhood. Addams combined a remarkable capacity for human sympathy with a brilliant gift of theoretical insights, derived from personal experience. Far from being a naive do-gooder, Jane Addams viewed settlement houses as a way to help new immigrants become empowered.

Earlier in 1882, Florence Kelley, a graduate of Cornell University, was refused admission to the University of Pennsylvania law school. Still, with her formidable political and legal skills, she crusaded against child labor—investigating, for example, the shocking working conditions of children, including the glass-bottle factories of Alton, Illinois, where boys as young as seven and eight worked from dawn to dusk, carrying trays of red-hot glass bottles throughout the factories.

At a time, when protecting wildlife was gaining national attention, Kelley angrily noted the paradoxical neglect of children: "Why," she demanded, "are seals, bears, reindeer, fish, . . . buffalo, [and] migratory birds all found suitable for federal protection, and not children?"

Largely through Kelley's efforts, the Illinois legislature, in 1893, prohibited child labor. In 1912, Congress created a federal Children's Bureau, through her influence. And then, six years after Kelley's death, Congress finally banned child labor.

Josephine Baker, a physician in New York City at the turn of the century, understood the link between health and learning. She aggressively promoted school nurse programs and basic health services for needy children that became routine throughout the country.

All of these women possessed a passion for the downtrodden. They also brought sharp wits, political skill, and, not least, infinite patience and persistence, in the face of setbacks. They overcame the prejudicial barriers of their times, pursuing self-fashioned careers that helped shape, profoundly, the history of this nation.

Hillary Rodham Clinton is a part of this great tradition. Her intelligence and determination, brilliant flashes of humor, plus an unswerving commitment to human justice, and most especially, to children, make her a worthy successor to Dorothea Dix, Jane Addams, Florence Kelley, Josephine Baker, and a host of other leaders who have made America a more just and caring country.

Hillary Clinton is, above all, a consensus builder. In her commencement address, upon graduating from Wellesley, she told the audience: "The challenge now is to practice politics as the art of making what appears to be impossible, possible. . . . It is such a great adventure. If the experiment in human living doesn't work, in this country, in this age, it is not going to work anywhere."

Years ago, I followed, with great admiration, Hillary Rodham Clinton's remarkably successful efforts to implement as the First Lady of Arkansas, Governor Clinton's comprehensive plan for school renewal. She conducted meetings in every one of the state's 75 counties, and eloquently asserted a common sense reform strategy that raised academic standards, tested teachers, increased salaries, and improved performance.

More recently, I have been struck time and time again, that key ideas in our work at The Carnegie Foundation could be traced to the State of Arkansas where Governor and Mrs. Clinton pursued a shared vision of excellence for all.

This leadership became dramatically apparent at the National Education Summit meeting in 1989. On that historic occasion, Governor Clinton argued forcefully, and with success, that the nation's first and most essential education goal should be school readiness for all children. The Governor credited Mrs. Clinton for articulating the importance of the early years. The Carnegie Foundation, persuaded by the importance of this first national goal, issued a report in 1991 called Ready to Learn: A Mandate for the Nation.

While preparing that report, I kept hearing about the HIPPY program in the state of Arkansas—which stands for the Home Instruction Program for Preschool^{Youngsters}ers. This program, which Hillary Clinton brought from Israel to Arkansas, has spread nationwide. It's now in twenty-four states reaching 20,000 families.

On yet another front of child advocacy, Hillary Rodham Clinton confronted the agonizing problem of teenage pregnancy, moving the infant mortality rate in Arkansas, from one of the highest, to one of the lowest in the nation.

Our most recent Carnegie Foundation report called The Basic School, brought us to the state of Arkansas once again. We learned that through Hillary Clinton's supportive leadership, that state mandated, in 1991, counselors for every elementary school, which has become a model for the nation.

As First Lady of the United States, Hillary Rodham Clinton's commitment to children has remained energetically unchanged, beginning with health. She brought common sense to an enormously complicated problem. And we have no choice as a nation but to achieve reform, not for political or even fiscal reasons, but for the sake of all Americans and, most especially, our children.

Today, when the climate seems particularly unreceptive to calls for caring and compassion, Hillary Clinton reminds us, with elegance, about our obligations to the coming generation. "There is no such thing," she said, "as other people's children. There are only the hopes and dreams all parents share, which we must do everything in our power to preserve and strengthen."

In accepting the Lewis Hine Award, Hillary Rodham Clinton said: "No matter how much work we do, from the White House to the courthouse, up and down every street in every large city and every small town, what children need more than anything else are adults who care about them and love them, teach them, and discipline them, and are willing to stand up and fight for them in a world that is often cruel and unfair."

One of my favorite American authors, James Agee, wrote on one occasion, "With every child who is born, under no matter what circumstances, the potentiality of the human race is born again."

Hillary Rodham Clinton has devoted a lifetime to affirming both the dignity—and the potential, of all the nation's children—of every child.
