SIMPLE ABUNDANCE

December 8, 1995

Ms Maggie Williams
Chief of Staff
Office of The First Lady
The White House
Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Ms. Williams,

This must be the busy season of hustle and bustle for Mrs. Clinton, yourself and your staff— as it is for women all over the country. Please accept an offering of holiday spirit for the First Lady and everyone on her staff— a copy of my new book, Simple Abundance.

May you find within these pages moments of comfort, glimmers of joy and a deep awareness of the "simple abundance" that surrounds us all.

I am sending in this box personal greetings to Mrs. Clinton, Ann Stock and yourself. A separate box contains 8 more books, inscribed but not personalized because I do not know the names of the women who work with you. (Undoubtedly I have also probably not included enough books. However, I realized for security reasons this information

I have not sent enough copies, and it will be my pleasure to send more.

Please convey my very best wishes to Mrs Clinton for a blessed holiday season, as I wish for all of you.

Sincerely,
Eurae Bee Breathnach

Dear President and Mrs. Clinton,

I wanted you to have the first published copy of my new book, Illuminata. I'm honored to give it to you -- I hope you find it a light on your path.

I'll be near Washington this Friday and Saturday, and hopefully back again to speak at the National Theatre in December. If I can ever be of the slightest service to you, please call me.

I think you are both very courageous. I applaud your efforts and I pray for your every possible success. May the Democrats have a miracle!

My best regards to Chelsea and Maggie.

Very sincerely,

Hillary Clinton to Sit at Cabinet Table

By GWEN IFILL

Special to The New York Times

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 18 — Hillary Clinton has sat at corporate board tables, campaign strategy tables and lawyers' round tables. Now, President-elect Bill Clinton and his aides say she will be welcome to sit at his Cabinet table as well.

Because of a law enacted after President John F. Kennedy named his brother Robert as Attorney General, Mr. Clinton cannot legally place his wife in the Cabinet. But she has been a political and policy adviser to him in the campaign and the transition, and he has made it clear that she will continue to play that role in his Administration.

Mr. Clinton said in an interview in The Wall Street Journal today that he hoped his wife would attend Cabinet meetings. "She knows more about a lot of this stuff than most of us do," he said.

At a news conference called this week to announce Cabinet appointments, the President-elect did not hesitate to tell reporters that Mrs. Clinton had helped him pick his advisers. "She advised me on these decisions, as she has on every other decision I've made in the last 20 years," he said.

'Free to Attend' Meetings

George Stephanopoulos, Mr. Clinton's communications director, continued in the same vein at a news briefing today, when he was asked if he expected Mrs. Clinton to participate frequently in decision-making sessions at the White House.

"I don't know how many she'll attend, but certainly she'll be free to attend when she feels she can make an addition, and that's probably a lot," Mr. Stephanopoulos said. "She obviously can contribute on a number of issues having to do with children, family, but I wouldn't want to limit it in any way or expand on it in any way right now."

Aides have said that she has helped Mr. Clinton select Cabinet members in much the same way that she helped plot campaign strategy.

"Clearly, as First Lady and as one of his closest advisers, she will have a role in his Administration," said Lisa Caputo, Mrs. Clinton's press secretary. "Beyond that, I think the Governor's statement speaks for itself."

The role of the President's wife has always been a subject for debate, particularly during the years of such close Presidential confidantes as Abigail Adams, Eleanor Roosevelt, Rosalynn Carter and Nancy Reagan. But Mrs. Clinton's much more publicly acknowledged influence has raised new questions.

Many people who are uncomfortable with the notion that she might act as an unelected co-President have been quick to revive the phrase Mrs. Clinton used early in the campaign: "If you vote for him, you get me."

But the evidence of Mrs. Clinton's influence has been encouraging to some women's groups, whose members have expressed frustration with Mr. Clinton's naming only one woman to his Cabinet so far, Donna E. Shalala, the chancellor of the University of Wisconsin who was chosen to be Secretary of Health and Human Services. Other appointments of women have been to sub-Cabinet-level positions.

In a letter sent to Little Rock today, Eleanor Smeal, president of the Fund for the Feminist Majority, asked Mr. Clinton to slow his appointments process so that more women can be considered for top posts.

"If the trend you have established in your Cabinet appointments continues, it is probable that you will appoint fewer women to the Cabinet than Presidents Carter, Reagan or Bush," she wrote.

'Shatter the Glass Ceiling'

Ms. Smeal added: "You have the opportunity to shatter the glass ceiling in our generation, and — at the very least — improve upon your predecessors' records. It seems incredible that you would consider doing less."

Lynne Cutler, a Clinton transition aide who has helped draw up lists of women for possible Administration appointments, defended Mr. Clinton against the criticism. When all the appointments are completed, she said, women will be represented fairly.

"It's fair to say a lot of people have raised the issue, and it certainly is a concern," Ms. Cutler said. "This isn't a we-they situation. All of us inside feel the same way."

Women have been mentioned for some unfilled Cabinet posts like Secretary of Agriculture and Attorney General, but Mr. Clinton is close to offering senior positions to several more men, including Warren M. Christopher for Secretary of State and Representative Les Aspin of Wisconsin for Secretary of Defense.

Mr. Clinton met with Mr. Aspin at the Governor's Mansion here today, but Mr. Stephanopoulos said no Cabinet selections would be made until Monday.

Monsters

By Geoffrey Canada

You are probably going to be a little concerned when I tell you how happy I am to be honored as a children's hero. Some people might be a little more modest and say: "Don't call me a hero. I'm not worthy of such flattery." But not me. I desperately want to be a children's hero.

You see, children here in New York City need heroes because a hero summons up images of supernatural powers. Heroes were meant to slay dragons and monsters, and far too many of our children face monsters every day.

Now I'm not speaking metaphorically. I'm talking the real thing — Frankenstein, Dracula, The Mummy, real monsters. If you calculate the number of deaths these three monsters cause on any given night, it doesn't compare to an average Friday night in New York City. In 1991, for example, there were about 12 murders a weekend.

Plus, these monsters did not really see children as their target. Well, that's not entirely true. Frankenstein threw the little girl in the pond when he ran out of flowers. But even his intent was not to kill children. So the images we have of monsters actually pale in comparison to the reality that many of our children face.

Our children face monsters who kill in the night and the day, monsters who lurk in the dark. They see monsters on their way to school, in the park, in the hallways at night — monsters who leave traces of their brutal work, staining floors and walls, the vestiges of which tell of horrors unspeakable to such young minds. Our children know that we cannot see the monsters, not really, because if we saw them, we would certainly protect them. What group of men and women would sacrifice their children to monsters?

I do this work because I haven't forgotten about the monsters. I remember them. I remember being small, vulnerable and scared. I remember growing up in the South Bronx, when I was 7 and we were cooking potatoes in a hole in the ground in the backyard, which was really an empty lot behind our tenement. Urban campfire boys, or something like that. We used to call the potatoes "mickeys" — I don't know what it stands for — and 5 cents would buy enough for the group. We thought this was the greatest of fun.

Suddenly some man, who was crazy or drunk or evil, or just a monster, burst on us screaming and grabbing and yelling. We all ran for our very lives, hit the fence and climbed over — all but one boy, William. He was fat; he was slow. He got caught. The monster beat him bad. We never found out why or who it was or what it was all about.

The thing about monsters is that sometimes they need no reason to act and we children learned that our survival depended on running fast and climbing fences because monsters can't climb fences fast. Now why is that? It's true you know. As any child who knows how to run from monsters will tell you, they can't climb over fences as quickly as little boys can. And how hard we practiced, my friends and I, in the afternoon and early evenings, running through alleys, climbing over fences, learning our monster drill — run, run, fast, fast, hit the fence, over quick, over quick. (Come on now, you know you could be caught.)

And then there was a young boy named Malcolm, just a little boy, whose only distinction was that he was the poorest among us and one of the nicest. And they were only rolling a tire in the afternoon when the man yelled to shut up the noise, and they laughed and paid him no mind. Who knew where monsters lived?

Down he came and shot Malcolm — all of 10 years old — dead in the street in broad daylight. That monster they took away somewhere — jail, Bellevue, who knows — and so we learned of monsters in the Bronx. Don't wake up the monster. Climb the fence, over, over, fast, monsters on the street. No heroes in our neighborhood, no Superman or Batman. No heroes here, just monsters hurting children.

So you see, I have long wanted to be a hero riding into town on my fiery steed, slaying monsters who prey on children. I know them for what they are. Even though I'm grown, I still remember them.

The poor children of this city live with monsters every day. Monsters deprive them of heat in the winter, they don't fix their sinks and toilets, they let garbage pile up in their hallways, they kick them out of their homes, they beat them — sometimes to death — they rape their bodies and their minds. Sometimes they lurk under the stairs. They scuttle around in the dark; you hear them in the walls gnawing, squeaking, occasionally biting a little finger.

Monsters work seven days a week and don't take vacations. And each night when the children leave our care, we pray we will see them again and won't hear tales of monsters. And it seems to me that on this special day, if we can talk of heroes, then we can talk of monsters.

And if I can be a hero today, then I want what every hero wants — to ride into town with the troops on a big, bold horse, having vanquished the evil, the monster's head held high on a lance. And the children looking out of the windows saying, "He killed the monster, come out, come out." The children would run out to the streets and cheer, and they wouldn't have to look under the stairs; they wouldn't have to dodge the bullets and the glass and the filth. Their homes would be happy and their bellies full, and they would have love and laughter in their lives, and they would forget there ever were monsters.

Their nightmares would be a thing of dreams; the monster would be on TV where you could change the channel or cover your eyes and hide under your mother's arm, not daring to look. And the children would have mittens and boots and happy holidays. They would get up in the morning to smiles and go to school and worry about the multiplication tables and telling time, and not about monsters.
