Subject: FYI: President's remarks re Fast Track and Africa Trade from today's farm event

Q Mr. President, besides the IMF bill, high on the farm agenda is fast track legislation. Why not go along with Speaker Gingrich and schedule a vote -- a September vote on this?

THE PRESIDENT: First of all, I strongly support fast track, as you know. I was bitterly disappointed that we couldn't pass it earlier. And he and I both worked very hard to pass it. There is no evidence that one single vote has changed. If anything, there's some evidence that we'd have more trouble passing it.

So if we bring it up in a bill that also has the International Monetary Fund or the Africa Trade bill or the Caribbean Basin Initiative -- all of which I think are good for America -- the impact would be, in all probability, to kill them all and to make it even harder to pass fast track early next year. I still believe we'll pass fast track next year when we get beyond this election year. I think it is so evidently in the best interest of the country. That's the first answer.

The second point is, the International Monetary Fund funding will do much more good in the short-run because it puts money into the countries that want to buy our food today. Fast track gives the United States the power to open new markets in the future, to enter negotiations to open new markets in the future.

So it's not terribly significant whether we get the fast track legislation in August, let's say, or September, or January or February next year, or March -- because we still have to start the negotiations and open new markets. We're already going to negotiate in opening agricultural markets, for example, within the World Trade Organization to try to deal with the European subsidy issue that was mentioned earlier.

So I'm strongly for fast track. I think we will pass it next year. I have no evidence that a single vote has changed since it was not passed earlier, and I don't want to kill all the rest of that. We ought to pass the Africa Trade bill now, the modified Caribbean Basin bill now. But most important of all, dwarfing everything else, in the near-term for these farmers with their prices low is the International Monetary Fund funding, because that will float cash into these countries as a condition for reform and it will give the money to buy our food. That's more important.

SCRIPT**

This a briefing on the Africa Trade Bill.

We want to brief the corporate community on the President's position of support for BOTH the Africa Trade Bill and Fast Track legislation as separate legislation.

Speakers include Secretary of Commerce William Daley and Assistant Secretary for African Affairs Dr. Susan Rice of the State Department. They will provide an overview of the President's position on both legislation and answer any questions your company may have concerning the Africa Trade Bill and Fast Track. It is possible that we will add an additional speaker from the United States Trade Representative Office.

The briefing is approximately 1 ½ hours in the White House Roosevelt Room at 2:00pm.

Let them know that this a HIGH PROFILE BRIEFING WITH THE TOP AND KEY CORPORATE COMMUNITY LEADERS AND REPRESENTATIVES. Concentrate on getting them to commit to attending.

They may want to send another representative. We are not requesting (at this moment) a replacement for them but if they request to send someone else, take the information and let them know we will get back to them to see if their replacement will be possible.

If they commit on the phone, get there DOB and SS:

Also, indicate that you will be sending them a fax with this information and will need them to return the forms by no later than 12:00pm Thursday, August 13, 1998.

If they say no, thank them for their time.

MEMORANDUM FOR TED PICONE

FROM:

[Signature]
Regina K. Vargo
Deputy Assistant Secretary for the Western Hemisphere

SUBJECT:

Business Views on Fast Track Legislation

My informal discussions with the trade associations in town that we work with (eg, Chamber of Commerce, Council of the Americas) indicate that they do not intend to do anything to discourage the current effort in the Senate to include fast track authority in a trade bill this year. The issue for them is how hard they decide to work for fast track, usually caveated as once it is clear that this represents a real effort by the Congressional leadership to find the votes, they intend to work very hard for it and believe there is sufficient time to do so.

One possible exception to this view may be Caribbean/Latin America Action, whom I haven't spoken with lately. You may wish to talk with Antonio (Tito) Colorado, Executive Director, C/LAA, Tel: (202) 466-7464, Fax: (202) 822-0075. Also, the attachment includes a list of companies that have been extremely active in support of CBI legislation. (FYI, most of them are current or past members of C/LAA's Board of Trustees.)

Fast Track: In the National Interest of the United States

FAST TRACK MEANS: IMPROVING OUR STANDARD OF LIVING

- Keeping the Economy on the Fast Track. By breaking down trade barriers and creating new jobs, the President will use fast track authority to keep America's economic expansion on the global fast track.
- The Economy Is Strong. The President's three-part economic strategy of cutting the deficit, investing in education and training, and opening markets abroad is working. America has enjoyed the longest period of sustained growth in a generation— one-third of which was produced by exports since 1993. The result: 12 million new jobs, unemployment at 5%, inflation the lowest in a generation.
- Our Future Prosperity Depends on Trade. 96% of the world's consumers live outside the United States. The global economy will grow at three times the rate of the US economy. America needs fast track to seize opportunities to negotiate fair new trade agreements that will keep us competitive, expand our exports, create more jobs, and raise our standard of living.

FAST TRACK MEANS: CREATING MORE JOBS

- Breaking Down Barriers. The President will keep breaking down barriers to American products and services because that strategy is producing positive results for companies and workers. America is once again the world's largest total exporter, the largest producer of semiconductors, and the largest producer of automobiles. Exports support 11 million American jobs, including one in five manufacturing jobs and over the last four years have created 1.4 million new jobs.
- Sectoral Agreements. The President needs the flexibility to negotiate agreements in sectors where the United States is most competitive: such as agriculture, medical equipment, telecommunications, and environmental technology.
- Regional Free Trade Agreements. With this authority, the President is determined to continue opening markets in Asia, Latin America, and Africa to US goods and services.
- Free and Fair Trade. The President supports raising labor standards, protecting the environment and expanding worker retraining and educational opportunities to ensure that no American is left out of the global economy.

FAST TRACK MEANS: MAINTANING AMERICA' S GLOBAL LEADERSHIP

- Compete or Retreat. As the American people prepare to meet the challenges of the 21st century, we face a critical choice: Embrace the global economy and continue to shape it to America's advantage, or turn back and fail to compete for new business, new contracts, and new jobs.
- Credibility. Fast track gives the US the credibility to negotiate tough trade deals because our partners know any agreement will not be reopened provision-by-provision by the Congress. Fast track also preserves for the Congress the ultimate decision of whether any potential agreement is good or bad for America. That assurance puts American in the best position to negotiate major trade agreements and maintains a balance that has worked for over 20 years.
- Continued Bipartisanship. Every President since 1974--Republican and Democratic--has had fast track authority. Congress has consistently recognized that the President must have the authority to break down foreign trade barriers, and a bipartisan majority of the United States Congress has consistently supported American leadership in opening markets and creating jobs.

STAYING ON THE FAST TRACK

- Fast track authority is in the overriding national interest of the United States. America's economic strength and standard of living are linked to breaking down trade barriers, exporting our goods and services, and creating more high-skilled jobs.
- This debate is also about American leadership. As the American people prepare for the challenges of the 21st century, we face a critical choice: We can embrace the global economy, write the trade rules, and continue America's economic expansion, or we can turn our back on the world and fail to compete for new markets, new contracts, new business and new job opportunities.
- The President must have the authority to break down foreign trade barriers. Every President since 1974-- Republican and Democratic---has had fast track authority. A bipartisan majority of Congress has consistently supported initiatives to open markets and create jobs. At stake in this debate is both Presidential leadership and a bipartisan consensus on US trade policy.
- Fast track gives the US the credibility to negotiate tough trade deals because our partners know any agreement will not be reopened provision-by-provision by the Congress. Fast track also preserves for the Congress the ultimate decision of whether any potential agreement is good or bad for America. That assurance puts American in the best position to negotiate major trade agreements and maintains a balance that has worked for over 20 years.
- As we increase our trade, the President is committed to raising labor standards and protecting the environment around the world and ensuring through aggressive worker retraining and increased educational opportunities that no American is left out of the global economy

MAINTAINING OUR STANDARD OF LIVING

- Opening markets to US goods and services has been critical to our economic expansion.
- President Clinton's economic strategy of deficit reduction, investing in our people through education and training, and opening markets to our goods and services has created the largest economic expansion in a generation.
- The American people have enjoyed the longest period of sustained growth of all our G-7 partners--seven years as of last March. The US economy has created 12 million new jobs, the unemployment rate is 5%, core inflation is at a 30-year low.
- The United States is once again the world's largest exporter, the largest producer of semiconductors, and the largest producer of automobiles. Independent studies have found America to be the most competitive economy in the world for the past five years.

- The United States exports more products and services than any country in the world and trade provided more than one-fourth of our economic growth over the past four years.
- Over the last four years, American manufacturing exports rose by 42%, high technology exports jumped 46%, service exports climbed 26% and farm exports rose 43%.
- No country is better positioned to compete than the United States. We have every reason to have confidence in our economy, in our companies and workers and in our capacity to compete and win. Fast track is a test of that confidence—and a prerequisite for seizing the trade opportunities before us around the world.

CREATING MORE AMERICAN JOBS

- Over the past four years, more than 25% of our economic growth has come from overseas trade and US exports have created 1.4 million new American jobs. Fast track will give us the chance to continue this trend.
- In addition, 11 million total American jobs are supported by exports, including one in five manufacturing jobs—paying an average of 13-16% more for non-management workers than non-trade related jobs.
- Over the next decade, the global economy is expected to grow at triple the rate of the US economy. Growth will be particularly strong in the world's emerging markets, where demand for American goods and services are taking off.
- In a world where over 96% of the world's consumers live outside of the United States, we must export our goods and services to sustain our standard of living at home. To stay on the global fast track, the President needs fast track authority.

BREAKING DOWN TRADE BARRIERS

The expanding global economy presents enormous potential for American companies and workers:

- Sectoral Agreements: The President would use fast track authority to negotiate agreements in sectors where the US is most competitive. From medical equipment and services, environmental technology and services, telecommunications to high tech computers, the President will tear down more barriers to American exports. For example, the recent Information Technology Agreement eliminated tariffs and unshackled $500 billion of trade in semiconductors, computers, telecommunications equipment and software, and according to industry estimates, amounts to a $5 billion tax cut in tariffs on American exports.
- Agriculture: The President would use fast track authority for negotiations to reduce barriers in the $536 billion global agriculture market that will attack such practices as export subsidies.
- Services: The service sector represent a $1.2 trillion global market—where US firms exported more than $220 billion in 1996 with a surplus of $73 billion. We have the opportunity to open a wide range of service sectors, including health care, education, entertainment, tourism and business consulting and advertising.

Regional Free Trade Agreements

- Asia: Asia has one of the fastest growing economies in the world, with nearly 3 billion consumers. Forecasters expect real growth of 6-7% annually for the next 15 years. With our APEC partners, the President is working to reach agreement in key sectors that could open these dynamic markets to America's goods and services and keep the free trade process going.
- Latin America/Caribbean: The Latin American market including Mexico is the fastest growing area for US exports. If this trend continues, Latin America and the Caribbean will exceed the European Union as a market by 2000 and exceed Japan and the EU combined by 2010. The President is committed to moving forward toward a Free Trade Area of the Americas by 2005. Negotiating a free trade agreement with Chile is the next critical step in this process.
- Africa: Working with Congress, the President recently launched an African trade initiative to foster stronger economic prosperity in Africa and create new markets to American products. Africa's nations are joining the march toward freedom and open markets--Sub-Saharan Africa alone has 700 million potential consumers. Yet the United States currently supplies only 7% of Africa's imports.

AMERICAN LEADERSHIP IN THE WORLD

- Half a century of determined American leadership has led to a 90-fold increase in global trade and helped bring down global barriers to America's products--falling from an average 40% at the end of World War II to about 5% today. Our leadership of the global economy has served America's interest—and the world's.
- As the sole remaining superpower, the United States has a fundamental national interest in contributing to stability and security around the world. A more prosperous world will be a more peaceful world—a world more hospitable to American interests and ideals. By opening markets, fast track authority will contribute to global as well as American prosperity—it will reinforce the common interest that diverse countries and regions share in sustaining that prosperity.
- America's failure to participate in shaping the global trading system will allow our competitors to negotiate preferential trade arrangements, form strategic relationships excluding the United States, and create new exclusive trade alliances. The United States cannot abdicate its global leadership to the detriment of the American economy.
- This debate must not be about the past but about the opportunities for the future. Fast track authority will allow the President to knock down trade barriers and negotiate a broad array of trade agreements--from sectoral agreements on medical equipment and telecommunications to regional agreements in Asia, Africa and Latin American to eliminating global barriers in the WTO. The debate over fast track is about embracing the opportunities of the global economy to create jobs, expand exports, and maintain America's standard of living.

- Opening foreign markets does not mean retreating from our commitment to labor and the environment. The President is committed to promoting worker rights and ensuring that economic growth does not come at the expense of a clean and healthy environment. Walking away from the world's markets will not improve worker rights or protect the environment—but through dialogue and engagement these issues can be addressed.

THE PRICE OF INACTION

- Other countries are breaking down trade barriers and moving forward in creating competitive trading relationships to the disadvantage of US companies and workers. It is in the national interest of the American people to stay engaged in the global economy.
- Since 1992, in Latin America and Asia alone, our competitors have negotiated 20 free trade agreements that exclude the United States.
- Today every major economy in this hemisphere has a preferential trade deal with Chile except the United States. This gives our competitors an 11% across-the-board tariff advantage for their products, which means American companies must sell to Chile with an immediate 11% cost disadvantage.
- For example, Canada's Northern Telecom recently won a $180 million telecommunications contract in Chile over three US companies in part to avoid paying $20 million worth of tariffs.
- Similarly, US corn producers are at a competitive disadvantage in Chile compared to Argentinean corn producers because of a preferential agreement which gives Argentina a 3.3% tariff preference which will soon increase to 11%.
- MERCOSUR (Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay, Uruguay) wants to expand its agreements to include all of South America a move which would disadvantage American businesses.
- China has targeted Mexico, Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Venezuela as "strategic priorities" to expand bilateral trade in Latin America
- The EU has begun a process to reach a free trade agreement with Brazil, Argentina and other MERCOSUR countries. President Chirac recently declared "Latin America's essential economic interests...lie not with the United States but with Europe."

FAST TRACK Q&A'S

Q: Some say fast track is just about expanding NAFTA to include Chile. Are they correct? What will the President do with fast track?

- Fast track is about giving the United States the ability to open markets, create jobs and improve the standard of living of American companies and workers. The President's fast track authority will be used to negotiate sectoral agreements in key industries where the US is most competitive, like agriculture, medical equipment and services and environmental technologies and services. It will be used to continue opening markets in Latin America and Asia, the fastest growing markets in the world, and it will be used to reach global agreements in the World Trade Organization to reduce barriers in key areas. The Administration is asking for authority simply to negotiate these agreements: Congress would then have the right to approve or disapprove any fast track agreement once it is negotiated.
- These agreements can provide enormous benefits for American companies and workers. For example, last year's Information Technology Agreement eliminated tariffs and unshackled $500 billion of trade in semiconductors, computers, telecommunications equipment and software, amounting to a $5 billion tax cut in tariffs on American exports. With fast track authority, we can tear down more barriers to America's exports and create more high-skilled jobs
- More fundamentally, fast track is about maintaining America's competitive position and global leadership. If America does not break down foreign trade barriers, our competitors will--to their advantage, not ours. Since 1992, in Latin America and Asia alone, other countries reached more than 20 preferential trade agreements excluding the United States. These countries are busy leveling the playing field for their exports. Without fast track, America will lose its global leadership and risk being relegated to the sidelines.

Q: Why is it so important to provide fast track authority? What happens if the United States doesn't have it?

- America's future prosperity is increasingly tied to the expansion of the global economy. In a world where over 96% of the world's consumers live outside the U.S. and the global economy is expected to grow at three times the rate of the U.S. economy, we must continue to export to be able to create more high-skilled American jobs. Without fast track, America's hands will be tied in its ability to negotiate these critical agreements and drastically slow down our job creating potential.
- Over the past four years, one-quarter of our economic growth came from trade. To take advantage of these opportunities, we must continue to open export markets for America's companies and workers. If we don't move forward, US workers and companies from telecommunications firms to agricultural producers will lose out in foreign markets. Fast track authority gives the President the tools to move America ahead to the 21st century.

Q: Some say U.S. workers can't compete against workers from low wage countries. What are the facts?

- The fact is the U.S. economy is the strongest in the world and American workers are the best trained, most highly educated and productive work force in the world—they can certainly compete with workers from low wage countries.
- In the last 10 years, U.S. exports to low-wage countries have risen 240%, while exports to high wage countries are up just 140%. Exports to low-wage countries now account for 42% of total U.S. exports. And these are high-skilled, high paying jobs. Wages for export-related jobs pay 13-16% more for non-management jobs than the national average.
- Competition from low-wage countries does create competitive pressures in industries where skills and productivity are lower, but most such jobs don't compete with imports. In fact, imports from non-oil developing countries account for only 4% of U.S. spending and have grown only 1.5% during the past decade. For those workers who are affected, we need to maintain our commitment to education and worker retraining. That's why the President is committed to making sure no American is left out of the global economy. Trade expansion must be part of a complete strategy to prepare the U.S. for global competition.

Q: What evidence is there that the Administration is concerned about labor and environment issues?

- We believe labor and environmental issues are an important part of the Administration's agenda and we are committed to progress in these areas. The Administration's record demonstrates that we have negotiated agreements related to labor and the environment at every opportunity. Our strategy maximizes our ability to open markets for US workers and companies and improve international environmental and labor standards. In fact, the Administration has made unprecedented progress in defining and advancing core labor standards—the right to organize and bargain collectively, freedom of association, a prohibition on exploitative child labor, a prohibition on forced labor, and a commitment to non-discrimination in employment—in such international arenas as the World Trade Organization, the International Labor Organization, and in the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development.
- The recent "sweatshop" initiative is an example of the Administration's efforts to improve working conditions by establishing an industry-wide partnership with labor organizations and consumer interests on wage and workplace conditions for apparel industry manufacturers. The NAFTA side agreements can help address labor and environmental issues, particularly along our 2,000 mile border with Mexico. And, in the Free Trade Area of the Americas, the United States is pushing for a commitment across the Hemisphere to sustainable development practices.

Q: Has NAFTA been a success? What's the record?

- The record is good. NAFTA has provided many benefits, including expanded exports, creation of high-wage jobs and protection of those exports and jobs during Mexico's recession and peso crisis. With the phasing in of NAFTA, U.S. goods exports have risen to historic levels in the last three years (1993 to 1996), up 33% to Canada, up 37% to Mexico. Goods exports to Mexico and Canada supported 2.3 million U.S. jobs last year. Such export related jobs by exports pay 13% to 16% more for non-management jobs than the U.S. national average.
- The best information available indicates that NAFTA has had a positive effect on jobs, creating 90,000 to 160,000 jobs in trade with Mexico alone. A study by DRI estimates that NAFTA boosted real exports to Mexico by $12 billion in 1996, compared to a smaller increase in imports of $5 billion, which contributed to controlling Mexico's financial crisis. The agreement has also leveled our playing field with Mexico. Mexico's tariff cuts have been 5 times greater than our own. The agreement has helped American suppliers in key industries capture additional shares of Mexico's import markets. Since NAFTA went into effect, our share of Mexico's import market has grown from 69.3% to 75.5%.

Q: Did NAFTA cause the peso crisis and the resulting recession?

- No. In fact, the effects of the peso crisis would have been worse for the United States if it were not for NAFTA. When Mexico had its last financial crisis in 1981-82, it imposed 100% duties on American products, U.S. exports fell by half, and it took 7 years for US exports to recover to 1981 levels. This time, Mexico continued to reduce its tariffs as required by NAFTA (even though it raised tariffs on our competitors). U.S. exports recovered to pre-recession levels in 18 months, protecting the 750,000 jobs dependent on those exports. A Federal Reserve of Dallas study concluded U.S. export growth was 7% higher than it would have been absent NAFTA.

Q: What is the record on NAFTA labor and environmental conditions along the U.S.-Mexican border?

- NAFTA has given us better progress and cooperation with Mexico on labor and environmental concerns than we would have had without it. The problems along the border are longstanding and will not be solved overnight. But there are clear signs of improvement:
 - From 1993 to 1996, Mexico's Secretariat of Labor and Social Welfare enforcement budget increased in real terms by nearly 250%.
 - The overall rate of occupational injuries and illnesses fell from 47 per thousand in 1994 to 33 per thousand in 1996.
 - Mexico has seen the number of environmental violations dropping; with a 72% reduction in serious violations in the maquiladora industry from 1993 to 1996; and a 43% increase in the number of maquiladora facilities in complete compliance.
 - The NAFTA institutions financing border cleanup projects have certified 16 projects, including infrastructure projects costing nearly $230 million.

- We need to continue labor and environmental efforts with Mexico. But it's important to remember that the agreements to be reached under new fast track authority will not raise the kind of border concerns presented by Mexico, a country sharing a 2000-mile border with the United States.

Q: Some say U.S. companies use the threat of relocation to Mexico to jawbone down the wages of America's workers - and they fear that will happen over and over again if we reach more free trade agreements. Why aren't they right?

- A: The fact is that NAFTA makes it more attractive to stay in the United States. Before NAFTA, U.S. exports faced an average 10% tariff when sending U.S.-made goods to Mexico. Mexico also had restrictions that basically forced US companies to locate car production in Mexico in order to sell to Mexicans. NAFTA eliminates these barriers on the Mexican side and will eliminate only a 2% average tariff on products coming here.
- If we let other countries reach trade agreements, while we sit on the sidelines, it will make it even more attractive for companies to locate outside the United States. If other countries eliminate the barriers their exports face, while U.S. exports still face high barriers, there is that much more incentive to produce elsewhere. If we want to keep jobs in the U.S., we should eliminate trade barriers for U.S.-made products. To do that, the President needs fast track authority.

Q: Some say NAFTA has diverted a considerable investment from the U.S. to Mexico. Is that true?

- No. U.S. foreign direct investment in Mexico averaged $3.1 billion in 1994-96, little changed from the average $2.8 billion the three years before NAFTA took effect. The $3.1 billion was less than 0.3% of gross private fixed investment in the U.S. in 1996. The Big Three automobile manufacturers invested $39 billion in the U.S. economy in the last three years, only $3 billion in Mexico.
