legislation that President Clinton might veto. "The White House views Amtrak as a labor issue and not a transportation issue," said a GOP aide, charging, "They've shown no leadership at all." White House officials did not return calls. However, Transportation Secretary Slater announced today that both sides are now engaged again in negotiations after he spoke with them, adding that President Clinton is fully informed about the situation. Senate Majority Leader Lott and House Speaker Gingrich discussed the issue last week, aides said.

A strike by track maintenance workers not only threatens to shut down Amtrak, but also would shut down almost every commuter rail line on the East Coast and California that uses Amtrak tracks, employees or other services. Those services include New York's Long Island Railroad and the Metrolink trains in Los Angeles. Slater, though, announced today that union leaders said they would allow commuter lines to run even if there is an Amtrak strike. Unlike the American Airlines strike, Clinton does not have the authority to keep Amtrak open; only Congress does. During Amtrak and freight railroad strikes in 1991, 1992 and 1994, Congress passed legislation appointing independent arbitrators. But aides said the first option GOP leaders are considering is extending the "cooling off" period that expires next Tuesday.

Amtrak management and the track workers, the latter represented by the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees, have made little progress in negotiations since a presidential emergency board on Sept. 22 recommended a 3.5 percent salary increase for the track workers. Amtrak, which borrowed $83 million in FY97 to cover operating expenses, claims the wage raise would put it out of business. Workers in all of Amtrak's unions are asking for wages equivalent to employees of freight railroads, which are highly profitable right now. If the track workers strike next Wednesday, most of Amtrak's other unions would likely honor the strike.

The unions believe Amtrak can get the money for higher wages from the $2.3 billion set aside for Amtrak in the balanced budget agreement. But that money is dedicated for capital expenses and can be released only by Congress passing separate pending legislation reforming Amtrak's labor and liability laws. The unions oppose that legislation, and congressional Democrats and Clinton have generally backed the unions. But with Republicans saying they will attach the reforms to any bill ending a strike, Northeastern Democrats could find themselves choosing between a relatively small union versus angry constituents left without commuter rail service.

TRADEAdministration Officials Stepping Up Effort For Fast Track

Both inside and outside the Beltway — as well as overseas — President Clinton and top aides Tuesday and today intensified their pitch for passage of fast track trade negotiating authority. Presidential assistant Jason Berman, who is managing the White House fast track campaign, today sharply assailed the business community's effort on behalf of the legislation, characterizing as "pathetic" business leaders' claims that they first needed a specific bill before they could begin lobbying Congress and the public effectively. "No, I'm not satisfied with the effort up until now," Berman declared, saying that union leaders did not wait to see legislative language before gearing up organized labor's campaign against fast track. Labor — and not the business community — was first to capture Congress' ear, he indicated. Berman noted, however, that the lack of a pending treaty that could galvanize the business community was a problem, and told an Economic Strategy Institute forum, "I understand that [business] efforts have now gone to another level. I'm hopeful that it will have some results." Also today, OMB Director Raines told the National Association of Manufacturers that the business community is not lobbying members of Congress as aggressively as they did during the North American Free Trade Agreement debate, while adding that lobbying effort must begin immediately. "The sooner, the better," he said.

Meanwhile, in an appearance Tuesday in South Dakota, home state of Senate Minority Leader Daschle, Treasury Secretary Rubin contended that without renewed fast track authority, the United States will be left behind while other nations forge alliances, the Associated Press reported. "There is no question these kinds of trade agreements are going to continue to develop around the world," Rubin told the Sioux Falls Chamber of Commerce. "The only question is, will we be part of the process or will we be on the outside looking in." He contended if Congress does not grant fast track this year, the next real chance will not come until 2001.

Rubin also said the United States needs to open markets abroad, but must protect its interests "in countries where there are unfair trade impediments." That is especially important in agriculture, Rubin said, noting the United States has a large trade surplus and is "very competitive" in that sector of the world economy. Rubin pointed out Daschle has introduced legislation that will let the administration deal with unfair barriers to U.S. agricultural exports. "That is legislation that we very strongly support," Rubin said. Daschle — who remains uncommitted on fast track and has been seeking a statement of administration action on several fronts — was clearly pleased by Rubin's comments. He said the administration's endorsement of his legislation makes it likely the bill will become law. Daschle said his bill gives top priority to agriculture in all future trade negotiations.

And, in Brazil, Clinton today made a plea for passage of fast track — as he has done throughout his tour of South America. "Globalization is irreversible," Clinton said. "Protectionism will only make things worse." He acknowledged to a group of business leaders that there are many skeptics about the wisdom of opening markets to global competition. "In your country and mine and throughout our hemisphere, many people question our course, fearing the pressure of competition, feeling as yet no benefit from the changes underway," he said. "As yet, no nation has found a perfect formula for both embracing the global economy while preserving and extending the social contract."

LABOROfficial Defends Justice Dept's Role In Teamsters Election

A Justice Department official and the officer overseeing last year's campaign for the presidency of the Teamsters today defended their supervisory roles in the election, saying the alleged corruption uncovered in now-President Ron Carey's campaign was found only because of their diligence. Those comments came during a House Education and the Workforce Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee hearing in which panel members implied that court-appointed election officer Barbara Zack Quindel purposely delayed her final report until after the United Parcel Service strike, and the Justice Department erred in supervising and paying for the election.

Acting Assistant Attorney General John Keeney said the Justice Department, under authority of a court-ordered consent decree, decided "to supervise the 1996 election because there was a real risk that organized crime would attempt to influence the 1996 election. Unsuccessful attempts at such influence were made in 1991, and the department had been apprised by government informants of both the importance of the [Teamsters] to the organized crime families and of the intended efforts to regain control of the [Teamsters] in the 1996 election."

Subcommittee Chairman Peter Hoekstra, R-Mich., said Tuesday that he thinks the

Stopgap Funding Move On Agenda As Fiscal Year Closes

With the fiscal year drawing to a close at midnight Tuesday and few FY98 appropriations measures having reached the president's desk, one thing is certain about the week ahead on Capitol Hill: Congressional GOP leaders will be doing everything in their power to avoid another government shutdown. Both the House and Senate are scheduled to consider a continuing resolution early this week that would allow federal programs to continue through Oct. 23 even though they have no full-year appropriations. Late last week, the CR almost got hung up on immigration issues in the House, but members finally gave unanimous consent to allow it to come to the floor without amendment today or early in the week. The CR funds programs at FY97 levels, except programs for which the administration sought reduced funding and Congress agreed with the cut. The appropriations situation is complicated by the schedule: It is a short week in both chambers because of the Rosh Hashanah holiday.

The current appropriations bills are in varying degrees of readiness and conference committees are expected to work early in the week to try to get them ready for floor action. And even when the bills are sent to President Clinton, they could face additional difficulty, since the administration is unhappy with provisions in several bills. Both chambers have approved the Legislative Branch funding bill and it will be sent to Clinton shortly. Congress already has sent the president the Military Construction funding measure, and both chambers have approved the Defense appropriations conference report. The Agriculture funding measure is ready for the floor, but got hung up last week over FDA-related issues, which are still being worked out. The Commerce-Justice-State bill remains on the House floor

Dem Support Slim For Fast Track Bill

A survey conducted late last week by CongressDaily reveals the steep hill that President Clinton and congressional supporters of extended fast track trade authority must climb to garner enough House Democratic votes to pass the bill.

With House Republicans increasingly negative about the president's plan, estimates of the number of Democratic votes needed to pass the measure have ranged from 50 to 80. The CongressDaily survey shows only 16 House Democrats currently on record as saying they intend to vote for the package or are leaning in that direction. Sixty Democratic House members said they remain undecided — while 96 members of the Democratic Caucus said they would vote no, and another 13 were leaning that way. Twenty-two members did not respond to the poll. CongressDaily contacted all 206 House Democratic offices in addition to the office of Rep. Bernard Sanders, I-Vt., who is accepted as a member of the Democratic Caucus for purposes of seniority (for a complete breakdown of House Democrats on this issue, see page 7).

House Ways and Means Trade Subcommittee ranking member Robert Matsui, D-Calif., the administration's fast track point man in the House, declined to comment on the current breakdown of support for fast track within the Democratic Caucus; earlier this month, Matsui said "about 70 Democrats is our universe" of potential support. An aide to Rep. Sherrod Brown, D-Ohio, a leading fast track foe, agreed that only a handful of Democrats have come out for the proposal while about 100 already are opposing the measure.

"We are looking very strong in the Great Lakes, Northeast and in Florida where the state has been adversely affected by [the North American Free Trade Agreement] with sugar, tomatoes and oranges," the Brown aide reported.

This source predicted California, where former NAFTA supporters are still on the fence when it comes to fast track, will be the big battleground.

An aide to Rep. Bart Stupak, D-Mich., another fast track foe, also confirmed the general accuracy of the count — adding that practically all those members who signed a recent letter to Clinton regarding concerns about food safety would logically fall into the "no" category. "No one is running to this idea," the Stupak aide commented.

An administration official professed that he was unsurprised by the results of the survey.

"I think they're waiting [to commit to the proposal]. Ways and Means has not had its hearing yet," the official said. "This is probably further along at this point than the administration has been in some other battles. I think we will get this done."

The source added that the White House plans no slackening of its intensive efforts to woo congressional Democrats.

This week, the president will meet privately at the White House with congressional Democrats. And Cabinet and other ranking administration officials will be calling on Democrats in their offices.

Last week, 23 House Republicans, including Rules Chairman Solomon and Resources Chairman Young, signed a letter to Speaker Gingrich signaling their opposition to renewing the president's fast track authority — making it even more critical that Clinton find increased Democratic support in the House, despite the obstacle posed by opposition to the proposal by Minority Leader Gephardt and Minority Whip Bonior.

NO to Fast Track
without core labor and environmental standards

Dear Colleagues,

The Clinton Administration is expected to present its proposal for Fast Track authority early in September. We understand that this proposal will enable the U.S.T.R. to negotiate an expansion of NAFTA to the rest of South America and other countries. In our judgment, Congress should reject this Fast Track/NAFTA expansion legislation if it fails to require that trade agreements include core protections for consumers, workers and the environment, enforceable through trade sanctions.

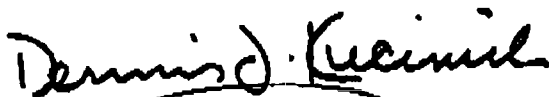

Since NAFTA was enacted three years ago, numerous problems have developed under this trade agreement. The U.S. trade deficit with Mexico and Canada has ballooned. As a result of increased imports from our NAFTA partners, American workers have lost thousands of good paying jobs. At the same time, some companies have used the threat of moving jobs to Mexico to place downward pressure on wages and benefits for American workers. Meanwhile, the labor side agreements to NAFTA has proven to be totally ineffective. The real value of wages for Mexican workers has declined since NAFTA was enacted, and not a single company has been cited for violations of worker rights or labor standards.

In addition, serious concerns have been raised about environmental problems and food and truck safety under NAFTA. The degradation of the environment has escalated along our border with Mexico, and the environmental side agreement has proved to be a complete failure. At the same time, it is abundantly clear that the U.S. government is not adequately inspecting trucks and agricultural products that enter this country, thereby threatening the health and safety of the general public.

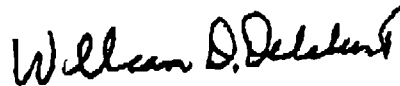

For all of these reasons, we are convinced that Congress should reject any fast track legislation and refuse to give up its legislative prerogatives regarding an expansion of NAFTA to other countries if the fast track legislation fails to require that trade agreements include core protections for consumers, workers and the environment, enforceable through trade sanctions. We need to make sure that the serious problems which have arisen under NAFTA are addressed in a meaningful way before we rush ahead with expanding this trade agreement to the rest of South America. Under our Constitution, Congress has the responsibility for approving trade agreements with other countries. We should not abdicate this responsibility by giving the Administration a blank check to proceed with an expansion of NAFTA under new Fast Track authority.

Accordingly, we urge you to join us in opposing any Fast Track/NAFTA expansion legislation that fails to require that trade agreements include core protections for consumers, workers and the environment, enforceable through trade sanctions.

Sincerely,

Dennis J. Kucinich

brought in Jay Berman, the Chairman of the Recording Industry Association of America trade association, to head it. Vicki Radd, the former Chief of Staff to White House Chief of Staff Erskine Bowles, will assist him. They will have the authority to coordinate all the activities of the Administration to woo wavering legislators. A coordinated push will be needed. A July 1997 poll by NBC/Wall St. Journal found the public against providing fast track authority by a wide margin, 32% to 62%.

Gingrich has told Clinton that at least 90 House Democrats must support "fast track" before the House GOP will supply the remaining 128 needed to go over the top. This could prove to be an unrealistic demand. Many border state Democrats who favored NAFTA will switch sides. However, it gives the GOP leverage to compel Clinton to give ground on his demand that fast track language explicitly give him the power to force foreign nations to adopt U.S. style environmental and labor policies as a pre-condition toward entering U.S. markets. A face saving formula is in the offing. The House is expected to vote first in October; the Constitution requires revenue measures to be initiated by the House. Can Newt bargain for passage? House votes on fast track during the Bush Presidency and final passage of NAFTA in 1993 show the challenge ahead. Table Two reveals that 127 members of the House are free traders, 136 are protectionists. The 137 House Members elected since the NAFTA vote on November 17, 1993, together with the 35 more senior legislators who split these two prior votes, will decide the outcome. Clinton and Gingrich will need 58% of these 172 swing voters to prevail. House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt (D-MO) will do everything in his power to defeat them. It's part of his duel with Vice President Gore for the Democrat Presidential Nomination in 2000. One-quarter of the Democratic delegates in 2000 will hold union cards.

Table Two: House Track Record on Key Free Trade Votes

	Consistent Yes	Consistent No	Split Two Votes	Newly Elected
Republicans	96	22	19	91
Democrats	31	114	16	46
Totals:	127	136	35	137

Lott's and Clinton's task in the Senate is just as hard. True, there are 34 veteran Senators who consistently support free trade, compared to only 22 veteran protectionists (Table Three). However, opponents are expected to filibuster fast track. Therefore, Lott will need 60 votes to prevail. Lott and Clinton are likely to need 26 out of 44 Senators to succeed. That's 59% of the split voters and newly elected Senators. The Senate will vote between October and March.

Subject: POTUS Calls to House Democrats

1. Congressman Dave Skaggs will announce on Friday that he supports fast track. He has primary opposition in his Senate race and was nervous about labor's reaction since he is one of their targets. In addition to a call, a statement thanking him for doing the right thing for Colorado and the nation needs to be available on Saturday for the Sunday papers.
2. Congressman Steny Hoyer has indicated that he is trying to figure out how to deal with labor before announcing for fast track. We need him sooner rather than later because his political judgment is so respected by other members and he is in the leadership.
3. Congresswoman Barbara Kennelly has yet to announce her plans regarding the gubernatorial race. We need her support in Ways and Means, even if it means that she must support a Democratic alternative first.
4. Congressman Ben Cardin wrote asking for an Administration bill that looked like Gephardt so that Democrats could force a vote on the Republicans with Presidential support. He did say that he could be convinced to vote for fast track at the end of the day if the President told him it was in the national interest and that not having it would create serious problems.
5. Congressman Jim McDermott had a 100% pro trade voting record until now but is heavily swayed by labor. He is in the Cardin mold.
6. Congresswoman Karen Thurman is still torn because of the tomato problem with Mexico and a likely citrus problem with Chile. These situations are unlikely to improve by denying fast track.

House Democratic Calls

- 1. Congressman Dave Skaggs: will announce on Friday that he is for fast track. Faces primary opposition in Senate race. Needs a call from POTUS or VPOTUS.
- 2. Congressman Steny Hoyer: need his support because of respect he commands and his leadership position--sooner rather than later is important. He is trying to figure out how to deal with labor as a result of support for fast track.
- 3. Congresswoman Barbara Kennelly: awaiting her decision on the gubernatorial race. We need her in Ways and Means, even if it means that she needs to support an alternative first.
- 4. Congressman Ben Cardin: wanted an Administration proposal that looked like Gephardt's and then if it failed could be convinced to vote for ours. We need Democrats on Ways and Means who understand how important trade is and why the President needs fast track authority--even if it is not the kind of authority he would have preferred.
- 5. Congressman Jim McDermott: voted for pro trade bills 100%; same situation as Cardin.

Subject: Memo on Legislative Meetings

Here are my edits:

Throughout the spring and summer, Administration officials have been meeting with members of the House and Senate and their staffs to discuss Fast Track in general terms and the President's decision to send up legislation shortly after they return from the recess. In addition, the President held two meetings with a number of undecided Members just prior to the recess, asking that they not make any commitments to oppose the legislation until the Administration has had an opportunity to finalize our bill and present the case for it.

Based on all of these meetings, follow-up phone calls and past voting histories on trade bills, we have compiled a list of Members who could be supportive of Fast Track. In advance of actually producing the final version of the bill, which is scheduled to be rolled out at a White House event on Wednesday, September 10, we are asking all of the principals to visit Members for individual consultations to determine what type of bill, on introduction, will get the legislative process started toward enactment before adjournment.

It is essential that your appointments be scheduled for the week of September 1, as that only leaves the 3rd-9th for decision-making on the final version. We will also need to be doing a parallel effort with outside support groups, so time is short.

We will have talking points for your use and Ambassador Barshefsky and Jay Berman will participate in a conference call on Tuesday morning, September 2, to address all of the issues in greater detail
