(Delivered By Hand)

Hon. Janet F. Reno
Attorney General
U.S. Dept. of Justice
Constitution Ave. & 10th St., NW
Washington, D.C. 20530

The undersigned organizations have a wide variety of positions on various aspects of U.S. immigration policy, but we are united by our profound concern with the Administration's policy response to recent Central American arrivals. Specifically, we object to several components of current Administration policy. First, it is our understanding that the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) intends to house many Central American arrivals in local jails and criminal facilities, some of which are located far away from the border area. Second, we have been informed that the government will not provide any assistance to those arrivals that choose to depart the U.S. voluntarily. In fact, it appears that the government has chosen a strategy that is designed to maximize detention time and channels Central American arrivals into deportation proceedings instead of accepting voluntary departure. Third, we understand that the U.S. Attorney's office is criminally prosecuting large numbers of Central American arrivals for unlawful entry.

The undersigned believe that the Administration's policy is excessive, unreasonable, cruel, and counterproductive, for a variety of reasons. First, Central Americans fleeing the worst natural disaster in the history of the hemisphere should not be treated like or placed with hardened criminals. Moreover, given the source countries' concerns about alleged criminal behavior associated with some who have been returned by the INS to Central America, this policy unnecessarily jeopardizes relations with our Central American allies. We believe that providing supervised release under bond or detention at INS facilities, at which legal rights presentations and pro bono representation are available, are far preferable.

Second, any policy that discourages voluntary departure makes no sense. The INS now requires those who choose voluntary departure to pay their own way home. Given their economic circumstances, as well as the devastation in their home countries, this policy forces such arrivals into detention until an immigration judge orders their deportation. This is a lose-lose proposition since the INS would eventually cover transportation costs of deportees. We would urge instead consideration of a two-part program in which: (a) the government would cover transportation costs for voluntary departures and (b) returnees would be provided assistance in their home countries by non-governmental organizations (NGOs). This policy would save taxpayer dollars by reducing detention costs, and would provide essential assistance to returnees. We believe that the modest funding needed to support these efforts will be available upon enactment of the emergency supplemental appropriations legislation currently pending in Congress. We would be happy to work with the Department and other appropriate agencies to make such arrangements.

Third, we believe that it is cruel and inhumane to pursue criminal prosecution of people who have lost everything. It is highly irregular for the INS to criminally prosecute first-time entrants. Furthermore, this practice guarantees long-term detention and perhaps jail time in criminal facilities, additional costs associated with deportation, and triggering of the 10-year bar against future return to the U.S. The move toward criminalization of this desperate population of migrants, particularly in light of the harsh penalties involved, strikes us as excessive and immoral, and should be ended.

We acknowledge the Administration's legitimate intention to deter the flow of persons from Central America who have little or no opportunities for relief from seeking to enter the United States. Having said that, we find no credible evidence that the "get tough" approach embodied in the Administration's current policy effectively achieves this goal at a reasonable cost to U.S. taxpayers. We offer instead a policy framework that does not commingle innocent people with hardened criminals, minimizes detention costs by encouraging voluntary departure, and does not impose harsh criminal penalties – and concomitant costs to the judicial system – against the desperate victims of an extraordinary natural disaster.

We request a meeting with you at the earliest possible opportunity to discuss our concerns.

Sincerely,

I was at the American Bar Association Saturday morning for a substance abuse committee meeting. While there, I ran into the ABA staffer who handles immigration issues (Carol Wolchok). She expressed grave concern about the following and asked me to relay this concern to DPC. Carol contends that the US Attorney with responsibility over the Rio Grande Valley area is prosecuting FIRST-TIME illegal entrants into the US (i.e., these are not returnees after an order of deportation). According to Carol, virtually everyone of these entrants is a Central American coming to the US as a result of Hurricane Mitch. The ABA knows about this because they run a legal assistance project in Harlingen. Carol did not know whether this is a border wide problem. The immigration rights community is likely to make a full-court press on this. Carol can be reached here in DC at 202-662-1006.
