Sandy:

One of the things I have been doing in New York while Judith is preparing to take over the lead in WIT is reconnecting with the Global Director of The Hunger Project. They have a major investment in working in Africa and it occurs to me that the network working to end hunger (and empowering women in the process) and that working to end AIDS should clearly be as connected as possible.

The Hunger Project has an annual dinner at which they award The Africa Prize. This year it is in New York on October 9. I wanted to alert you to that date and encourage you to come and get an experience of the organization. We will be there as well.

If you can make it to New York for the dinner, I would very much like to set up a meeting between you and Joan Holmes, the Director of the Project. As a matter of fact, I would like you to meet her even if you aren't able to attend the dinner. She is someone you would value knowing, not only politically, but personally as well.

Hopefully you will also make it to New York long enough to come to one of Judith's performances, or at another time. Let me know, of course, if I can set up house seats for you.

I am asking The Hunger Project to send you material about the organization, the Africa initiative, and the dinner.

All the best,
