THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY
FIGHTING FOR AMERICA'S VALUES

President Clinton's 1997 Bipartisan Budget Agreement

- extends the Medicare Trust Fund for at least a decade
- preserves the Medicaid guarantee for the most vulnerable members of our society
- provides $35 billion in tax relief for working families to help pay for college and training – the largest increase in higher education funding since the G.I. Bill in 1945
- invests $24 billion to provide health insurance to up to 5 million uninsured children – the largest increase in health-care funding for children since the passage of Medicaid in 1965
- offers a $500 per child tax credit to 27 million working families with 45 million children
- provides $3 billion to move welfare recipients to private sector jobs and $12 billion to restore health and disability benefits to 350,000 legal immigrants
- protects our nation's strong public health and environmental standards

1993 Democratic Budget

- helped lower our nation's unemployment rate to 4.8%
- reduced the federal deficit by 77% over the last four and a half years
- helped create 12.9 million new jobs
- lowered taxes for 15 million working families

Dear Association of Flight Attendant's Board of Directors and AFA members,

On behalf of the White House and President Clinton and Vice President Gore, we would like to welcome you to Portland, Oregon for your 24th Board of Directors meeting.

As the highest governing body for the Association of Flight Attendants, your hard work and continual commitment to the union, has helped improve the lives of your members and the safety of the entire aviation industry. While our time in the air is not always on commercial flights, your energy and the hard and tireless work of flight attendants has not only moved the safety and health concerns of flight attendants and aviation safety to the forefront but it has also redefined the role of flight attendants' onboard aircraft.

Not so long ago, most Americans considered flight attendants waiters and waitresses in the skies but your vision, courage and action have helped the flying public understand your key and essential role as safety professionals. We applaud you for this perseverance and the work you do each day to protect your passengers. Your leadership role both on airplanes and on Capitol Hill has served to improve the airline industry as a whole.

Congratulations on your Board of Directors meeting and on your choice of themes for this year's Board. We cannot imagine a more appropriate message than "Vision, Courage, Action: The Responsibility of Leadership." This commitment by the leadership of the AFA and your members will prepare you well for future challenges of the aviation industry especially those that specifically affect flight attendants.

We wish you much success for a productive meeting and thank you again for your continual work on behalf of your members and the flying public.

Sincerely,

Hillary Rodham Clinton

Tipper Gore

Dear Mr. Schumacher:

Can you verify accuracy of these remarks?

The Portuguese were delighted with the news that NASA had agreed to help commemorate the 500th anniversary of Vasco da Gama's discovery of a maritime route to India. During her July visit to Portugal, the First Lady announced NASA's offer to carry a Portuguese flag aboard the May 1998 mission of the space shuttle Discovery. The May mission is significant because it will carry experimental equipment constructed in part by Portuguese scientists and marks Portugal's first participation in space science. In her speech, Mrs. Clinton compared the explorations of the early Portuguese mariners with the Mars mission. Her comments were well-received, and the Portuguese are eager to begin planning for 1998.

The Vasco da Gama anniversary will be discussed at the next U.S./Portugal Bilateral Commission Meeting scheduled for October 23. It would therefore be useful to meet with the appropriate persons at NASA to begin to formalize our plans. For example, it would be ideal for the shuttle astronauts to present the Portuguese flag on June 16 at the 1998 World Exposition (Expo '98) in Lisbon. There may be other ways we can work together through Expo '98 and the GLOBE Program to both help recognize Portugal's maritime history and to serve as an important NASA outreach.

Jennifer Klein
Special Assistant to the President for Domestic Policy
Second Floor, West Wing
The White House
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Ms. Klein:

As the nation's preeminent creator of public service communications, The Advertising Council has conveyed thousands of inspirational messages to the American people in order to create positive social change. The result is more lives saved because "Friends don't let friends drive drunk," more young people in college because "A mind is a terrible thing to waste," less car injuries and fatalities because "You can learn a lot from a dummy - buckle your safety belt," and, of course, Smokey Bear reminds us that "Only you can prevent forest fires."

Today, through its 10-year initiative Commitment 2000: Raising a Better Tomorrow, the Ad Council is applying its expertise to help improve the lives and circumstances of our nation's children. We were thrilled that President Clinton and First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton joined this effort in recent Ad Council PSAs, where they referred to parenting as "the toughest job in the world." These ads were overwhelmingly popular and generated millions of dollars worth of donated media time in 1997.

The purpose of this letter is to share critical communications insights with the First Lady in preparation for the October '97 White House Conference on Child Care. Recent research by the Ad Council suggests that the best way for the First Lady to frame the importance of quality child care programs is in the context of the public's need to support parents. The First Lady would set a strong tone for the entire conference and national dialogue if she reinforces society's need to help make the job of parenting a little easier. This message is certain to resonate with the American people.

The Ad Council research "Kids These Days: What Americans Really Think About The Next Generation" (summarized in the following pages) reports America's belief that parents are fundamentally responsible for the disappointing state of our children. At the same time, 81 % of the public admit that "it's tougher to be a parent today than ever before," and the public supports solutions and programs that facilitate parenting.

At the conference, we expect that the First Lady will assert that quality child care programs top the list of effective solutions to the problems facing American families. Economic realities and recent government reforms have created a mushrooming demand for child care. Unfortunately, the child care system that many parents must rely on is, at best, primitive: services are fragmented; regulations are minimal; care givers are poorly trained and underpaid. Under these circumstances, even the most fortunate parents are frustrated by their attempt to find quality child care, and our children's needs are woefully neglected.

Only you...

The Ad Council research also unveils the public's disbelief that government can play any role in ameliorating the crises our children face. A critical first step to reversing this perception is the First Lady's proposal at the conference that the Federal Government's support of quality child care programs is one of the best ways to help parents raise good kids. This unprecedented role of government represents a more holistic, effective approach to improving the plight of our children.

Take A Bite Out
Of Crime.

We submit these communications insights to the First Lady, a long-time supporter of the Ad Council's commitment to children, with the best intentions. Our hope is that the White House Conference on Child Care not be a missed opportunity, but rather a defining moment in the national debate on how to correct the problems facing our children. The First Lady's credibility in this area makes her perfectly poised to use the child care conference to galvanize public support around an issue that has profound implications for millions of Americans.

A mind is a
to waste.

In addition, the Ad Council is currently working in partnership with the Rob Reiner Foundation to develop a national public service campaign focusing on quality child care and the needs of parents. The campaign is based on our research and strategy that assert that the most effective way to improve the plight of our nation's children is through programs that support parenting. The First Lady's amplification of this same strategy at the October child care conference would ensure that a national public service campaign is well received by the American people.

The Ad Council would be honored to lend its communications expertise and research to help make this conference a huge success -- not just for the White House, but for working parents, for children, and for all of us. Please call me at 212/984-1969 if you are interested in discussing these insights in further detail. I look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Diana E. Sciocchetti

KIDS THESE DAYS: WHAT AMERICANS REALLY THINK ABOUT THE NEXT GENERATION

Only you...

Conducted for The Advertising Council and Ronald McDonald House Charities
by The Public Agenda Foundation

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS

FINDING: A Moral Crisis

Take A Bite Out
Of Crime.

Americans are convinced that today's children face a crisis -- not in their economic or physical well-being but in their values and morals.

- Many Americans think children are spoiled and out of control, not friendly, helpful, or engaging. And people apply these criticisms to children across a broad economic spectrum, to children from disadvantaged backgrounds, as well as children from the middle and affluent classes.

FINDING: Careless Parents

A mind is a terrible thing
to waste.

Americans believe that parents are fundamentally responsible for the disappointing state of today's youth.

- Only 1 in 5 Americans say it's very common to find parents who are good role models for their kids.
- People say parents fail to teach youngsters right from wrong and pass on the values children need to learn in order to become productive members of society. Even parents themselves from all income, ethnic, and racial backgrounds agree.

Friends Don't
Let Friends
Drive Drunk.

FINDING: Mitigating Circumstances

Although many Americans have strong criticisms about the job parents are doing, these criticisms are partially mitigated by substantial levels of empathy and understanding for what people see as the enormously difficult and challenging undertaking of raising a child.

Buckle your safety belt.

Only you...

- 81% of Americans think it's much harder for parents to do their job these days, 17% say about the same, and only 2% of Americans think it's much easier for parents today.
- Americans acknowledge it is tougher to be a parent or a child in today's world. They recognize that more than ever, parents — and especially mothers — must work hard and sacrifice for their children. Americans also believe today's youngsters face threats from society that can undermine their parents' best efforts. People are extremely concerned about ubiquitous threats endangering all kids: drugs and crime; sex and violence in the media; and public schools that often fail to deliver education in a safe and orderly environment.

Take A Bite Out
Of Crime.

- They may not be happy with it, but the public knows that the Leave it to Beaver days are gone. "My father, as a single wage-earner, took care of five children," said an Ohio man. "I don't think that can be done now."
- By almost a 2 to 1 margin (63% to 32%), Americans believe that "most parents face times when they really need help raising their kids" instead of the alternate proposition that "most parents can handle the job of raising their kids without help."

A mind is a
terrible thing
to waste.

FINDING: Will Individual Americans Help?

Notwithstanding their extensive criticisms of young people, Americans refuse to give up on kids. They care deeply about their well-being and believe that tackling the issue is of paramount importance to our society.

FINDING: Solutions That Show Promise

Americans gravitate toward solutions that help develop young people's character.

Friends Don't
Let Friends
Drive Drunk.

Buckle your
safety belt.

VIA FACSIMILE

Dear Senator:

Founded three weeks after the attack on Pearl Harbor in 1942, the non-profit Advertising Council is credited with inventing public service advertising. Since then, through a long and productive partnership with the Federal Government and private sector, we have communicated thousands of inspirational messages to the American people in order to create positive social change. The result is more lives saved because "Friends don't let friends drive drunk," more young people in college because "A mind is a terrible thing to waste," less car injuries and fatalities because "You can learn a lot from a dummy - buckle your safety belt," and, of course, Smokey Bear reminds us that "Only you can prevent forest fires." Today, through its 10-year initiative Commitment 2000: Raising a Better Tomorrow, the Ad Council is applying its expertise to help improve the lives and circumstances of our nation's children.

We invite you to meet the many faces behind the Ad Council, our government and non-profit sponsors, and our messages, at a Congressional reception on Tuesday, September 30th, in the Senate Russell Office Building, Caucus Room 325, from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. The Ad Council team consists of representatives from your state's government and non-profit organizations; corporate funders and media donors; trade associations and some of the most creative minds in the advertising industry. For these hard-working individuals, this reception is a rare opportunity to meet and greet you - the distinguished members of Congress who are a critical part of our fight for social change.

We hope you take a moment from your busy schedule to stop by the reception. Please contact Diana Sciocchetti at 212/984-1969 with any questions, or to let us know if you will attend.

'Boxer' in the ring for top US awards

By Michael Dwyer, Film Correspondent

The new Jim Sheridan film, The Boxer, has received three major nominations for the Golden Globe awards - presented annually by the Hollywood Foreign Press Association and regarded as a good indication of the Oscar nominations that follow in spring.

In Los Angeles yesterday, The Boxer received nominations for best film (drama), best director to Sheridan and best actor to Daniel Day-Lewis. The film opens in New York and Los Angeles on New Year's Eve and goes on release in Ireland on February 6th.

Filmed in Dublin during the summer, The Boxer, written by Sheridan and Terry George, features Day-Lewis as Danny Boy Flynn, a Belfast boxer who got involved with the IRA in his late teens and ended up serving 14 years in a British prison.

Returning to Belfast and determined to change his life, Flynn makes a comeback in the ring. The film is set in the early 1990s against a backdrop of tensions within the IRA on seeking a peaceful solution to the conflict.

Day-Lewis describes his character as a quiet man. "He feels that, through the decisions he has made, a large part of his life has been thrown away," he told The Irish Times. "And he wants to do something to set the record straight for himself, just to feel he's done something in his life that's okay and has some value to it."

The Boxer is Jim Sheridan's fourth feature film as a writer-director and his third with Day-Lewis in the leading role. Their first collaboration, My Left Foot, earned Day-Lewis the best actor Oscar in 1990 for his portrayal of Christy Brown. Their second film together, In the Name of the Father, in which Day-Lewis played the wrongly convicted Gerry Conlon, received seven Oscar nominations in 1994.

In the major Golden Globe category for best film (drama), The Boxer is on the shortlist with Steven Spielberg's Amistad, James Cameron's Titanic, Curtis Hanson's LA Confidential and Gus Van Sant's Good Will Hunting. The nominees for best director are Jim Sheridan, Steven Spielberg, James Cameron, Curtis Hanson and for As Good As It Gets, James L. Brooks.

COMMENTS:

Bobbie.

Attached is the invitation for the First Lady related to honoring Adam Derling at UC Davis next April. I hope this will be considered at your scheduling meeting next week. Your office should be in direct contact with them on your decision.

Many thanks,

Dear Mrs. Clinton,

A group of University of California, Davis students are planning a five-part series of ecumenical peace services in memory of Adam Darling for the Spring of 1998. This letter is to follow up correspondence our committee had with you last March regarding an invitation to be our keynote speaker on Sunday evening, April 19, 1998. Reverend Phil Wogaman of the Foundry United Methodist Church has confirmed that he will be with us to speak that evening, and, as we know it is difficult for you to confirm engagements very far in advance, will gladly share the podium with you should you be able to be present.

These services are intended to instill in our community a global vision of peace and justice and ignite among our contemporaries a commitment to advocacy and action like that exemplified by Adam, a UC Davis alumnus. Please note from the attached description that this series, entitled "Quest for Peace: A Pilgrimage to St. John's Hill", will commemorate the tenth anniversary of a similar series which Adam created. We would like you to be the series' initial speaker both because of your perspective on global conflict and social justice as first lady and your insight as one who knew Adam, and what he stood for, well.

As they were ten years ago, these services will be part of the regular University Chapel schedule, at 7 p.m. on Sunday evenings. University Chapel is an ecumenical outreach sponsored by The Belfry Lutheran and Episcopal Campus Ministry and The Cal Aggie Christian Association (a campus ministry supported by the United Methodist Church, the Presbyterian Church, and the United Church of Christ). Co-sponsoring "Quest for Peace" are Davis United Methodist Church (Adam's home congregation) and Davis Community Church (Presbyterian, USA), where the services will be held, along with other members of Davis' ecumenical community. Offerings received at the services will be dedicated to a new scholarship fund in Adam's name at U.C. Davis.

Thank you so much for your time and consideration. I look forward to being in contact with you soon.

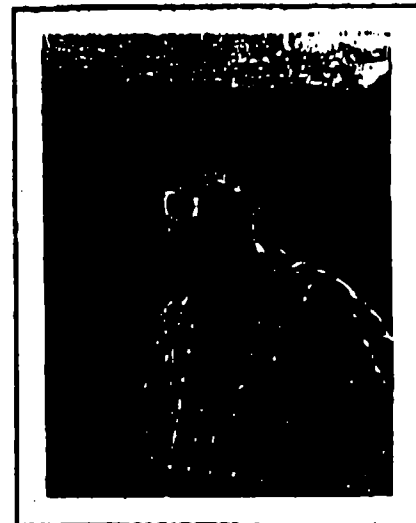

Sincerely yours,

Angie E. Penney

Students' "Quest for Peace" inspired by the life and death of former UC Davis student Adam Darling

Background:

Adam Noel Darling was born in 1966 in Livermore, California. The son of Darrell and Karen Darling, he spent his early years in Davis where his father was a Methodist minister, and grew up in Santa Cruz. He enrolled at the University of California, Davis in 1985, where he remained for three years before transferring to the University of Pennsylvania. At UC Davis, Adam was a leader of a group of Christian students who sought to express their faith in significant, practical ways and who were particularly concerned about issues of peace and justice.

In late 1987, Adam asked his friend and former Rhetoric instructor, Lutheran Campus Pastor Don Ranstrom, to help create a series of events that might rekindle in UC Davis students the kind of commitment to peace and justice that had been present on campus during the Vietnam War years. Adam and the Christian "Students for Peace" group designed a series of "Shalom Services" for the 1988 Lenten season at University Chapel. These services had a global perspective, were ecumenical in nature, and were sexually and ethnically inclusive. The speakers they invited for the series were persons whose own lives modeled non-violence as a means of achieving personal, national and international goals.

The 1988 "Shalom Services" at University Chapel drew a diverse audience and were well received. The students who planned the series were pleased with the outcome, and felt that they had made a small but significant contribution toward a renewed interest in peace and justice issues on the Davis campus and in the community.

Adam Darling went on to graduate from the University of Pennsylvania, after which he held a series of positions that were consistent with his Christian faith and political vision. Ultimately this path led him to the United States Commerce Department. In March, 1996 the Secretary of Commerce, Ron Brown, asked Adam to serve as his Special Assistant and to accompany him on a "Mission of Peace Through Trade," aimed at rebuilding the infrastructure of war-torn Bosnia and Croatia. Adam Darling was among the thirty-five persons who, along with the Secretary of Commerce, were killed in the plane crash on St. John's Hill near Dubrovnik, Croatia the afternoon of April 3rd, 1996.

The University Chapel community at the University of California, Davis remembers with gratitude the life and witness of Adam Darling, and the leadership he provided us in 1988. We want to keep alive the flame of compassion and commitment he kindled in us and pass it on to others, too. In Spring 1998, ten years after the "Shalom Series" and two years after Adam Darling's untimely death, we will present a series of ecumenical services which will focus on major peace and justice issues of the day. These services are intended to instill in our community a global vision that will ignite among our contemporaries a commitment to advocacy and action like that which was exemplified by Adam Darling. University Chapel is an ecumenical outreach sponsored by two UC Davis campus ministries, The Belfry and the CA House.

The series of services is named after the place where Adam Darling and the other ambassadors of peace met their deaths. This "QUEST FOR PEACE: A Pilgrimage to St. John's Hill" will occur on five consecutive Sunday evenings, beginning April 19th, 1998. It is our hope that through these services the values that guided Adam Darling will be reinforced in the lives of all who attend, and that a new commitment to peace and justice will blossom on the UC Davis campus.

For further information, please contact The Belfry (916) 756-1550 or CA House (916) 753-2000.

Dear Bobbie,

I am so happy that Sue brought us together and I look forward to a fruitful relationship. Of course, I was disappointed not to see Mrs. Clinton right after the trip to New York but I surely understand the demands on her time. So, I shall patiently wait for an opportunity to come to Washington after all of us return in January.

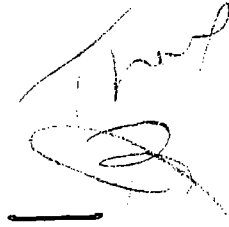

Warmest personal best wishes for a joyous Christmas and a glorious New Year and the same to Milanne.

Sincerely,

Lucy Jarvis

Subject: Announcement of Eileen Collins - First Female Commander of Space Mission
Event Options

HRC told me on our way to Boston last week that she would like to do this event. At the time, they were trying to schedule it before Christmas, which was OK with her. Since the original request was very vague and open-ended ("They'll do whatever she wants to do"), I asked Robin to talk to NASA and come up with some specific options. Her response is enclosed and I put it in your good hands for follow-up. Thanks.

Subject: Announcement of Eileen Collins - First Female Commander of Space Mission
Event Options

Given this Wednesday's WH event honoring the families of the astronauts that died in the Apollo 201 fire, a 12/29 State Department ceremony with Secretary Albright and major space station countries, and Eileen Collins holiday schedule, NASA would prefer to do this event the second week of January. Here are three event options to consider all of which would be open press:

1. Announcement of Collins- Roosevelt Room (40 attendees including NASA officials, key aviatrixes and pioneers, women in science and technology, and youth).
2. Announcement of Collins - Launch of NASA's Women's Initiative "There's Space in My Life" - East Room or Room 450 (250 attendees including NASA officials, aviatrixes and pioneers, women in science and technology, youth and broader list of women leaders).
3. Announcement of Collins - Launch of NASA's Women's Initiative - Unveiling of Mindy Weisel's work (famous woman artist who recently completed first and only major piece of art dedicated to women of NASA) - East Room or Room 450 (250 attendees including NASA officials, aviatrixes and pioneers, women in science and technology, youth and a broader list of women leaders).

We like the number 2 option. Let us know what you think, what date would work, and we can put together a scheduling request and get started with the planning. Thanks.

Just FYI- I forgot to mention that when HRC and I discussed this, she suggested doing it at Goddard. However, it sounds like they're looking for a WH event.

The Honorable Hillary Rodham Clinton
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Ave.
Washington D.C. 20501

Dear Honorable Ms. Rodham Clinton:

Like millions of Americans and people around the world, we have watched and applauded your determined efforts to make health insurance available to all Americans in the United States. The recent passage of the President's Children's Health Initiative is a great step forward. It is only through the persistent efforts of all of us that we will reach the goal of universal health care.

I am inviting you to be the guest of honor and key note speaker at our For the People Against the Tide 1998 awards event. This event will be held in Boston, Massachusetts during the month of May or June. We would like to award you for your efforts on behalf of people who lack adequate health care access: your work distinguishes you as the most important champion for this cause in the nation. Your presence would not only encourage and recharge local advocates for health care reform, but would also underscore the importance and need to make the health care system more responsive to all users, regardless of income, race, health status, or insurance. We would be honored if you would be willing to deliver the key-note address.

Past national awardees have included former Surgeon General C. Everett Koop, Senator Paul Wellstone, Thomas C. Chapman, CEO of George Washington University Medical Center and Judith Kurland, presently Regional Director of Boston's Department of Health and Human Services. In addition, each year we honor several local activists. Past local awardees include Joe Faherty, President of the AFL-CIO; Massachusetts House of Representative Byron Rushing; Massachusetts Senator Mark Montigny; and Amigas Latinas en Accion pro-Salud (ALAS), a special project of the Boston Women's Health Book Collective.

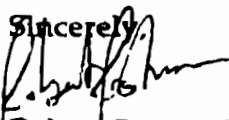

Health Care For All is the most effective state-based consumer organization. During the past twelve years we have been involved in every major expansion of healthcare access including the CommonHealth plan for disabled adults, the Medical Security Plan and the Children's Medical Security Plan. Last year we led a campaign that resulted in the passage of Chapter 203, legislation which would expand health care access for children and others, financed through the tobacco tax.

12/3/97 Spoke to Robin Reed & explained that it is unlikely that HRC can do this. Advised her to proceed on that assumption -- I also said they could call me again as the date draws closer & we ~~could~~ revisit the subject, altho I held out little hope for a different outcome. R6

We are a Massachusetts-based, nonprofit, membership organization founded in 1985 on the belief that access to health care is a right of every individual. We are particularly concerned about the most disenfranchised members of our society: the disabled, low-income elderly, children, people of color and linguistic minorities. Last year, our toll-free Health Helpline provided information, referrals and advocacy for 6,000 people needing access to health care. We have several projects which work with communities to address local health issues such as the Boston Health Access Project's Immigrant New Comers Campaign, Health Law Advocates, State-wide organizing, and the North Shore Leaders Project. Our Children's Health Access Project works to ensure that every child in Massachusetts has access to the health care he or she needs. Many of our programs are replicated throughout the nation. While we are focused on issues related to the uninsured, our work is rooted in the need to make the health care system more responsive at all levels and to all populations. Even the young, the healthy, the wealthy and the insured are vulnerable in the system we have now.

At Health Care For All, we have gained a national prominence for our community organizing work, our advocacy and public education materials, and for our analysis of health policy issues. Lotus Development Corp.'s Director of Corporate Giving, Michael Durney, has called us a model nonprofit, saying, "Their work has tremendous implications for how public policy on [health care access] is set," and they are, "one of the ten best charities in the country."

I hope you will be able to join us. Enclosed is some more information about Health Care For All and information on past For the People, Against the Tide awardees. Depending on your schedule and availability, we would like to hold this community awards event in May or June. We would need to know about your attendance before January 1, 1998, in order to arrange the event properly. Thank you again for your consideration. I look forward to meeting you.

Sincerely,

Robert Restuccia

Russell Beaudreault, Founder

Athol-Orange Health Center (1994 Awardee)

A farmer from Orange, Massachusetts, Russ Beaudreault was honored for his work to open a free clinic in the North Quabbin area to serve low-income residents who don't qualify for Medicaid and can't afford health insurance.

Cape United Elderly (1996 Awardee)

Cape United Elderly is one of the most active grassroots organizations in the state. It is the only citizens' group in the state with the authority to visit nursing homes unescorted in order to conduct inspections and talk to patients. CUE is a clearinghouse for information and advocacy for the large elderly population on the Cape.

Raquel Cashman, Director of Interpreter's Services

Boston City Hospital (1993 Awardee)

Raquel Cashman was devoted to providing equal access to health care for non-English speaking patients since 1986. In a climate of budget cuts and little understanding of immigrants' needs, Cashman was able to establish the department of interpreters' services as a permanent fixture at Boston City Hospital. Cashman became a Health Care For All Board member in 1994. Cashman died in August of 1995 at her family home in Buenos Aires. She is missed by friends, family as well as the staff and patients of Boston City Hospital.

Thomas Chapman, Chief Executive Officer

George Washington University Medical Center (1994 Awardee)

Tom Chapman is the former director of Greater Southeast Community Hospital in Washington D.C. where he worked to create innovative programs with staff and community that addressed local health care concerns. Chapman is an outspoken advocate for finding solutions to illness by putting the emphasis on community strength and creativity.

Maria Contreras, Founder

Soldiers of Health (1996 Awardee)

Maria Contreras of Roxbury is an immigrant from the Dominican Republic. She has worked tirelessly in the community to improve the health of residents. For years she worked for the Department of Health and Hospitals, and later at Health Care For the Homeless. She is the founder of Soldiers of Health, a neighborhood-based and supported network of lay health advocates in Roxbury.

Edward Grimes, Executive Director

Upham's Corner Health Center (1995 Awardee)

Edward Grimes has worked for 23 years in his position at the Upham's Corner Health Center. He has been a strong community advocate for comprehensive health and social services for the residents of North Dorchester.

Bill Henning, Executive Director

Cape Organization for the Rights of the Disabled (1995 Awardee)

CARD, a grassroots activist group, provides vital independent living services to one thousand people a year. Under the leadership of Bill Henning, CARD developed the concept for CommonHealth, a health insurance program for working disabled adults and disabled children, and advocated aggressively to get it implemented.

Harriet Jackson-Lyons, Founder of Raising Our Children's Children (ROCC)

Codman Square Health Center (1993 Awardee)

Harriet Jackson-Lyons, a former patient services clerk for the Codman Square Health Center in Dorchester, founded ROCC when she became the caretaker of her granddaughters last year. In the face of many cultural and societal barriers, Jackson-Lyons' program is making it possible for these grandparents to counter barriers of shame, loneliness and need.

Health Care For All
For the People, Against the Tide
Past Awardees

Dr. Sarah Kemble, Founder of Franklin County Community Health Center (1997 Awardee)

Dr. Kemble went to medical school to become a primary care internist and to establish a community health center that would truly be accessible to all members of Franklin County. She has succeeded with both goals and spends much of her time and energy on educating the community about the benefits of the center, especially the availability of its high-quality primary care.

Dr. C. Everett Koop, former Surgeon General of the United States (1993 Awardee)

Dr. C. Everett Koop, who is now Elizabeth DeCamp McNerny Professor at Dartmouth College has been involved in health care issues his entire career. As Surgeon General, Koop was an outspoken advocate for a broader understanding of AIDS. Since his resignation in 1989, he continues to educate the public on health care reform issues.

Judith Kurland, former Commissioner Boston's Department of Health and Hospitals (1994 Awardee)

For her vision of a "healthy Boston," Judith Kurland has inspired many health care professionals, advocates and those committed to making Boston a better place for residents to live. She has also challenged the teaching hospitals to refocus their mission on the needs of the community.

Jessie Logan, Former President
Massachusetts Senior Action Council (1995 Awardee)

As a member of HCFA's board for many years, Jessie Logan engaged senior citizens across the state in the fight for universal health care. She was also a leading advocate for hospital discharge planning legislation and the Family Health Plan.

The Lynn Health Task Force (1993 Awardee)

The Lynn Health Task Force has been advocating for better health care services for the low-income residents of Lynn and the North Shore who use area facilities for over ten years. Most recently, the Task Force has been successful in guaranteeing that interpreters' services be improved at both the AtlanticCare Medical Center and the Lahey Clinic.

Bob and Mary Lee Marra (1996 Awardee)

The Marras, the first couple to win a For the People, Against the Tide award, were nominated for their work to safeguard Boston City Hospital's mission to the poor in BCH's merger with Boston University Hospital. Despite criticism from some other members of the administration, the Marras continued to speak out strongly for the rights of the poor and uninsured of Boston.

Health Care For All
For the People, Against the Tide
Past Awardees

Representative John McDonough (D-Jamaica Plain)

Current Chair of the Health Care Committee (1993 Awardee)

Rep. John McDonough has provided leadership on a number of health care issues, taking the side of working people and low-income residents of Boston. McDonough was a co-sponsor of the Universal Health Care Law, and has been a lead sponsor of a number of health care reform proposals that would improve access to health care.

Senator Mark Montigny (1997 Awardee)

As a legislator, Senator Montigny has acted as the champion of the poor, low-income seniors, children, disabled and working families. Last year he co-sponsored Chapter 203, the landmark law that expands health care benefits to nearly 300,000 of the state's most vulnerable residents.

Bob Murphy, Past President

Massachusetts Teachers Association (1996 Awardee)

Bob Murphy has served as the past President of the 70,000 member Massachusetts Teachers Association. Because of Murphy's leadership in children's health organizations, thousands of children in the state without health insurance now have access to healthcare.

Judy Norsigian Co-Director

Boston Women's Health Book Collective (1995 Awardee)

Through her public speaking, writing, and political advocacy, Judy Norsigian has changed the way the medical system views women's health. As co-author of Our Bodies, Ourselves and numerous other publications, she has given women information to make informed health care decisions.

Kattie Portis, Director

Women's Community Project, New England Medical Center (1996 Awardee)

Kattie Portis is known for her long-time work in the community to improve women's health, particularly around issues of violence, substance abuse and AIDS. Portis founded Women, Inc. in Boston, one of the first residential programs in the country that provides services to substance abuse women and their children. She also founded the national Women and AIDS Risk Network (WARN).

Roxbury Environmental Empowerment Project

Alternatives for Community and Environment (1997 Awardee)

Project Reep, a program of Alternatives for Community & Environment, has developed an asthma prevention curriculum for over 300 youths in Roxbury schools. REEP brings youths and adults together providing them with information and training on advocating for a healthier environment and quality health services.

Health Care For All
For the People, Against the Tide
Past Awardees

Representative Byron Rushing (1997 Awardee)

A leader in Boston for the past thirty years, who has served in the legislature since 1983, Byron Rushing has stood for the rights of the disenfranchised. Despite extraordinary opposition, he spearheaded the passage of a law prohibiting insurers from denying benefits to individuals with pre-existing conditions.

Sandy Shea, founding member of Health Care for All, Staff Director of the House Officers Association/CIR (1997 Awardee)

Sandy Shea has been a stalwart of the consumer health care movement for twenty years. She was a founding member of Health Care For All and as staff director of the House Officers Association/CIR (the union of interns and resident physicians) fought to protect access to health care for the uninsured and other vulnerable populations.

Congratulations on your move to the White House! I didn't know you were there until I looked up the First Lady's office in the Federal Yellow Book.

S.T.O.P. is asking the First Lady to speak at our five year anniversary memorial event in Chicago January 18, 1998, and I hope that you will recommend that she do so.

A couple of years ago, you kindly agreed to meet with me and a couple of other representatives of S.T.O.P. to give us fundraising advice. Now we are about to celebrate our five year anniversary!

The President has taken an active stance on food safety issues, and S.T.O.P. has forged a good relationship with the Administration. S.T.O.P.'s president was in the Oval Office when President Clinton announced the adoption of new meat and poultry inspection regulations in July 1996. This April, S.T.O.P. board member, Laurie Girard, introduced the Vice President at the press conference unveiling the President's Food Safety Initiative. In June 1997, the First Lady spoke at the National Food Safety Educators' Conference where she met S.T.O.P.'s president Nancy Donley. She then devoted a significant portion of the July 4 edition of her weekly column to Ms. Donley (attached). Nancy returned to the White House last month to accompany the President as he announced a new initiative on fruit and vegetable safety.

Nancy Donley is sending a letter of invitation to Ms. Rodham Clinton via facsimile this afternoon. I have attached some information about our five year anniversary memorial event for your information. Thank you for considering this request!

*p.s. S.T.O.P. just got its first grant this month!

has blessed us. Thank you for your advice! It literally
"paid off."*

"Remember, Respect and Resolve"
Fifth Anniversary Memorial Service

January 1998 marks the fifth anniversary of the West Coast E. coli O157:H7 epidemic that catapulted food safety to the attention of the American public. Seven hundred people were sickened in that single outbreak and four children died. S.T.O.P. - Safe Tables Our Priority was founded immediately afterwards by victims' families and friends and is the only foodborne illness victim organization of its kind in the United States. S.T.O.P. invites you to attend a memorial service on behalf of foodborne illness victims nationwide. We will remember those who have died and celebrate with those who have survived.

DATE: Sunday, January 18, 1998

LOCATION: First United Methodist Church at The Chicago Temple
77 West Washington Street
Chicago, IL 60602
The service will be ecumenical.

TIME: 4:00 P.M. (Central Standard Time)

A reception will immediately follow the service.

To RSVP and/or receive additional information, please contact S.T.O.P. at 718/246-2739 or visit our website www.stop-usa.org.

Talking It Over

Food-safety regulations help to ensure 4th remains festive

This weekend, millions of families across our country will be celebrating America's birthday with the traditional festivities: fireworks, picnics and the nearly sacred backyard barbecue. As we load up our grills with hot dogs, hamburgers and chicken slathered in barbecue sauce, and as we chop the cabbage and carrots we'll need for our coleslaw, very few of us will be concerned that the feasts we're preparing could make us sick.

Four years ago this month, Nancy Donley had few worries as she cooked preformed hamburger patties at a family barbecue. She had no idea that while the grill fires had eliminated the meat's pinkness, they had not killed the deadly E. coli bacteria in the burger she served her 6-year-old son, Alex. Within hours, the bacteria invaded and destroyed her only son's organs, killing him after a nightmarish four days.

Today, Mrs. Donley has channeled her grief into action, working to ensure that no other family ever has to endure the same heartbreaking loss. She shares Alex's story with parents across the country, reminding them that color is never a reliable indicator of whether meat is fully cooked and that hamburger must be heated to at least 160 degrees before it is safe to eat. And she continues to press our government for stronger food-safety regulations.

As she wrote in a letter to me last month, "No one can bring back my son or the thousands of others who die each year, but we can save others from the same fate through prevention."

For nearly 100 years, Americans have relied on government to make sure the world's most bountiful food supply is also its safest. In the early years of this century, people became outraged at the filthy conditions in meat-packing plants. They recognized that the industry would never be able to regulate itself.

So they called on their government, mounting protests, writing letters, signing petitions and lobbying political leaders until they put in place safeguards and standards for food production. Many of these regulations continue to protect us to this day.

This story has been repeated time and again in our century, from the earliest protesters to the environmental movement of the 1970s, when activists finally persuaded Congress to enact landmark legislation to protect drinking water and to keep cancer-causing pesticides off food.

While they may seem rather mundane, our food-safety regulations are a powerful example of the essential role that only government can play in our lives. The fact that fat grams and calories are often the only worry we have when we sit down to dinner is perhaps the most compelling rebuttal there is to anyone who believes that government is useless or that government regulations stifle progress rather than promote the common good.

The food we eat passes through so many hands — from the farmer to the food producer to the store owner to the consumer — before it reaches the dinner table. One false step such as failing to refrigerate an item promptly or to disinfect a surface, and someone can get sick. That is why a government that answers to all of us must lead the effort to ensure that our food makes its way safely through each of these stops.

Recent reports of food-contamination outbreaks remind us that we can never let down our guard. We've watched in horror as students became infected with hepatitis from frozen strawberries, as hundreds became debilitated by cyclospora found on raspberries and as young children died after eating meat or drinking apple juice contaminated with E. coli.

In May, Vice President Al Gore announced a new plan to strengthen our country's food-safety protections. The plan calls for the greater use of the latest science to dramatically reduce food-borne illnesses and, in partnership with the private sector, launches a full-scale public education campaign about the dangers of food contamination.

It also calls for stricter safety precautions for fruit and vegetable juices, improved seafood inspections and increased investment in research, risk-assessment and surveillance.

These changes and other recent efforts to improve food safety would never have come about without the commitment and advocacy of our scientists, public health specialists and private citizens like Nancy Donley who recognize their own power to bring about change and progress.

A year ago this weekend, Mrs. Donley stood in the Oval Office as President Clinton announced new meat- and poultry-inspection regulations that would require slaughterhouses to conduct rigorous scientific tests for salmonella and E. coli, the bacteria that killed her son.

Her commitment, faith and continuing advocacy should remind us all that the government created on the Fourth of July more than 200 years ago is not something outside us or even irrelevant to us. It is us.

The First Lady--Hillary Rodham Clinton
The White House
West Wing, Second Floor
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Mrs. Clinton:

You wrote a wonderful column this past summer titled "Food Safety Regulations Help to Ensure 4th Remains Restive." In it you mentioned my 6-year-old son, Alex, who died from eating E. coli O157:H7-contaminated hamburger and also spoke of my efforts in food safety. You and I met briefly at the National Food Safety Educators' Conference sponsored by the USDA, FDA and CDC where you gave an inspiring speech that included your experience working at a fishery. At that time I gave you a copy of the speech that I had given, along with a handwritten note, and your flattering column followed a month later.

Mrs. Clinton, January 18, 1998 marks the fifth anniversary of the West Coast epidemic (commonly referred to as the Jack-In-The-Box outbreak) that propelled the issue of food safety to the public's attention. Over seven hundred people suffered debilitating illness and four children died during this single outbreak. In the wake of that tragedy, S.T.O.P.-Safe Tables Our Priority was founded. Families and friends of E. coli victims dried their tears, squared their shoulders and vowed that they would work together to reform an outdated and dysfunctional meat inspection system. You know the rest.

S.T.O.P. will be marking this significant anniversary with a memorial service in Chicago. Our theme is "Remember, Respect and Resolve". We would be so very honored if you would be our guest and keynote speaker and talk about "Resolve".

The ecumenical memorial service will take place at the exquisite First United Methodist Church at the Chicago Temple at 4:00 P.M. central standard time. Foodborne illness victims' families and survivors from across the country will attend. We will remember in prayer those who have died and celebrate with those who survived. Our first speaker will talk about grief and healing. The second speaker, Reverend Louis Clark, will speak about business and social responsibility. Again, we're hoping that you will talk 10-15 minutes on the topic of resolve.

The members of S.T.O.P. have worked tirelessly to change the nation's food policies. They have made incredible strides, but frankly, many are tired and at times, discouraged about the enormous work that still needs to be done. Your inspirational message to those gathered in Chicago will renew and energize their commitment to the food safety cause.

You and the President have done more to improve the safety of our food supply than any administration since President Theodore Roosevelt when he enacted the Federal Meat Inspection Act after reading Upton Sinclair's book, The Jungle. It's evident that you hold a strong commitment to social reform. After hearing your speech at the National Food Safety Educator's Conference, reading your moving article, and meeting you in person, I think that you--a fellow daughter of Chicago--are ideal to address the victims' families, the survivors, and the friends and supporters of S.T.O.P. at our five year anniversary memorial service.

Thank you for considering this request.

Sincerely,

Nancy Donley

Congratulations on your move to the White House! I didn't know you were there until I looked up the First Lady's office in the Federal Yellow Book.

S.T.O.P. is asking the First Lady to speak at our five year anniversary memorial event in Chicago January 18, 1998, and I hope that you will recommend that she do so.

A couple of years ago, you kindly agreed to meet with me and a couple of other representatives of S.T.O.P. to give us fundraising advice. Now we are about to celebrate our five year anniversary!

Talking It Over

Food-safety regulations help to ensure 4th remains festive

This weekend, millions of families across our country will be celebrating America's birthday with the traditional festivities: fireworks, picnics and the nearly sacred backyard barbecue. As we load up our grills with hot dogs, hamburgers and chicken slathered in barbecue sauce, and as we chop the cabbage and carrots we'll need for our coleslaw, very few of us will be concerned that the feasts we're preparing could make us sick.

Four years ago this month, Nancy Donley had few worries as she cooked preformed hamburger patties at a family barbecue. She had no idea that while the grill fires had eliminated the meat's pinkness, they had not killed the deadly E. coli bacteria in the burger she served her 6-year-old son, Alex. Within hours, the bacteria invaded and destroyed her only son's organs, killing him after a nightmarish four days.

Today, Mrs. Donley has channeled her grief into action, working to ensure that no other family ever has to endure the same heartbreaking loss. She shares Alex's story with parents across the country, reminding them that color is never a reliable indicator of whether meat is fully cooked and that hamburger must be heated to at least 160 degrees before it is safe to eat. And she continues to press our government for stronger food-safety regulations.

As she wrote in a letter to me last month, "No one can bring back my son or the thousands of others who die each year, but we can save others from the same fate through prevention."

For nearly 100 years, Americans have relied on government to make sure the world's most bountiful food supply is also its safest. In the early years of this century, people became outraged at the filthy conditions in meat-packing plants. They recognized that the industry would never be able to regulate itself.

So they called on their government, mounting protests, writing letters, signing petitions and lobbying political leaders until they put in place safeguards and standards for food production. Many of these regulations continue to protect us to this day.

This story has been repeated time and again in our century, from the earliest protesters to the environmental movement of the 1970s, when activists finally persuaded Congress to enact landmark legislation to protect drinking water and to keep cancer-causing pesticides off food.

While they may seem rather mundane, our food-safety regulations are a powerful example of the essential role that only government can play in our lives. The fact that fat grams and calories are often the only worry we have when we sit down to dinner is perhaps the most compelling rebuttal there is to anyone who believes that government is useless or that government regulations stifle progress rather than promote the common good.

The food we eat passes through so many hands — from the farmer to the food producer to the store owner to the consumer — before it reaches the dinner table. One false step such as failing to refrigerate an item promptly or to disinfect a surface, and someone can get sick. That is why a government that answers to all of us must lead the effort to ensure that our food makes its way safely through each of these steps.

Recent reports of food-contamination outbreaks remind us that we can never let down our guard. We've watched in horror as students became infected with hepatitis from frozen strawberries, as hundreds became debilitated by cyclospora found on raspberries and as young children died after eating meat or drinking apple juice contaminated with E. coli.

In May, Vice President Al Gore announced a new plan to strengthen our country's food-safety protections. The plan calls for the greater use of the latest science to dramatically reduce food-borne illnesses and, in partnership with the private sector, launches a full-scale public education campaign about the dangers of food contamination.

It also calls for stricter safety precautions for fruit and vegetable juices, improved seafood inspections and increased investment in research, risk-assessment and surveillance.

These changes and other recent efforts to improve food safety would never have come about without the commitment and advocacy of our scientists, public health specialists and private citizens like Nancy Donley who recognize their own power to bring about change and progress.

A year ago this weekend, Mrs. Donley stood in the Oval Office as President Clinton announced new meat- and poultry-inspection regulations that would require slaughterhouses to conduct rigorous scientific tests for salmonella and E. coli, the bacteria that killed her son.

Her commitment, faith and continuing advocacy should remind us all that the government created on the Fourth of July more than 200 years ago is not something outside us or even irrelevant to us. It is us.

Dear Mrs. Clinton:

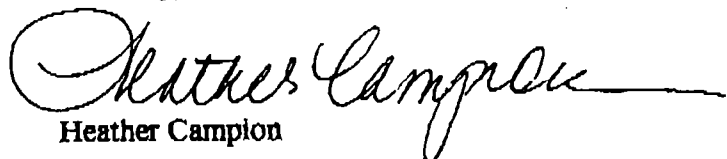

It was a great pleasure to talk with you at Dick Friedman's dinner on Martha's Vineyard last month. I hope you all enjoyed the rest of your much deserved vacation there.

I'm writing to follow-up on our conversation about the possibility of you teaching here at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government in the near future. There are many possibilities for how this could be worked out given your very hectic schedule. If you wanted to co-teach a course, you might be able to come up once a month for a semester. Or, you may wish to teach a module within a course which would enable you to come up once or twice for a couple of days. In any case, there are many ways in which this could be scheduled.

If you think you might be interested in doing this as soon as next semester, I'd be happy to come to Washington with the Dean and appropriate faculty members to discuss the details with you further.

Your vast experience in so many public policy arenas would be of enormous value to the many students here who are preparing for careers in public service. We are all eager to explore this possibility with you. We look forward to being in touch.

Sincerely,

Heather Campion

Attn: Kevin Moran

Dear Ms. Lewis:

I am writing to request your assistance in arranging for a videotaped message from the President to be shown at the opening ceremony of the Getty Center in Los Angeles on Inaugural Day, Saturday, December 13. The ceremony will be the centerpiece of the festivities planned to celebrate the dedication of this new center for art and cultural heritage.

We have engaged the services of Gary Smith of Smith-Hemion Productions to produce the event, and Smith will cover all costs for the taping. The length of the message should be whatever is comfortable for the President, but about two minutes would be fine. In addition to brief congratulatory remarks regarding the opening of the Getty Center, the President might also include comments about the very timely and critical issues related to preserving our cultural heritage and the importance of the arts in the education of our children. Smith will need to receive the tape by December 11.

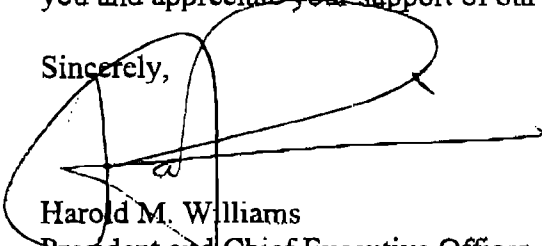

Inaugural Day will be attended by international dignitaries, civic and community leaders, and children and their families, representing the rich mosaic that makes up the city and region. We expect the ceremony to attract extensive coverage by local, national, and international print and electronic media. We also plan to carry the ceremony live over the Internet, thereby reaching a global audience of millions.

As you know, the Getty Center is a unique, six-building, 110-acre complex designed by renowned architect Richard Meier. Devoted to the visual arts and humanities, it is a campus that brings together the Getty Museum, five institutes, and a Grant Program. It is a place to experience and enjoy art, and a center for inquiry and debate about art and its relevance to our lives. With the opening of the Getty Center, we proudly reaffirm our commitment to enriching the cultural life of the Los Angeles region, and to providing a meeting ground where everyone can embrace, celebrate, and share the world's cultural heritage.

The President's participation in the inaugural ceremony will greatly enhance the important message the Getty Center sends to the world. I look forward to hearing from you and appreciate your support of our endeavors.

Dear Mrs. Clinton:

Excitement is mounting as we prepare for the public opening of the Getty Center, an event that will launch a new era for one of the most prominent art and cultural institutions in the world. I am writing to invite you and Chelsea to join us on Inaugural Day, Saturday, December 13, and to request that you honor us by delivering the keynote address on that occasion. The ceremony will be the grand centerpiece of the festivities being planned to celebrate the dedication of this new cultural landmark.

We would be privileged to have you address, in the keynote speech, the very timely and critical issues related to preserving our cultural heritage and the importance of the arts in the education of our children. I believe that you and Chelsea would enjoy this opportunity to visit the new Getty Center and take part in our celebration.

I am also pleased to invite you and Chelsea to attend, as my special guests, the President's Dinner on Thursday, December 11. Should your schedule preclude your participation on Inaugural Day, I hope that you will still consider celebrating with us on the 11th. In contrast to the inaugural ceremony, the President's Dinner will be a private affair for friends of the Getty.

Inaugural Day will be attended by international dignitaries, civic and community leaders, and children and their families, representing the rich mosaic that makes up the city and region. We expect the ceremony to attract extensive coverage by local, national, and international print and electronic media. Ben, the national MedWeek conference is fast approaching (November 20 - 22), but we currently do not have any White House participation. The theme this year is "creating minority business strategies for the next millennium). Both the VPOTUS and POTUS have declined. This is a very important event, that we need to see if we can get reversed. Besides honoring the national winners, SBA has been working on a major announcement that they wanted to unveil at that time. Briefly, the three major automakers (Ford, Chrysler, and General Motors) have committed to providing more than $3 billion in new contracts to minority businesses by the year 2000, that they were hoping to announce with White House involvement. Representatives from the auto firms will also be participating. They are also interested in sponsoring at least 10 SDB executives each year for formal minority business executive training. Is there some way that we can get revisit and get this on the schedule, or scheduled the First Lady?

and LIBRARY SERVICES

Dear Mrs. Clinton:

I am writing to ask that you, once again, present the IMLS National Award for Museum Service. This is the only national award for museums; it recognizes institutions with programs and exhibitions that make a real difference in their communities. Your involvement in this award has been a tremendous honor to past recipients and to the agency.

This award does not carry a financial prize, the benefit for recipients stems from the prestige of traveling to Washington to receive this national award. It is your participation that provides the momentum. Each of the recipients leverages this momentum in a community celebration back home in the museum. I have attended these celebrations and I am so pleased and proud of how this award is used to tell the wonderful stories that are a part of each of these outstanding museums.

You will enjoy hearing the stories of 1997 National Award for Museum Service recipients. These museums are part of the solution - they help to keep children in school and make the streets less mean, keep neighborhoods alive and interesting, help us appreciate the environment and understand technological advances. They advance our understanding of the richness of our cultural diversity and its potential to make our country great.

This award has strong ties to the Clinton Administration. It originated with my tenure at the Institute. It is one of the most exciting things I have done because it is a great example of the power of public/private partnership. Nominations are received from museums all over the country. The Presidentially-appointed National Museum Services Board takes an active role in the selection of the recipients and they agree that reading the nominations is a highlight of their public service. These nominations capture the tremendous spirit of museums that are central to the life of their communities.

Jane and Sheldon have told me that the National Medal of Arts and the National Humanities Medal will be presented on September 29. Ideally, we would like to schedule the National Award for Museum Service ceremony for about one half hour sometime that day, before presentation of the medals. I hope that your schedule will allow you to present the museum award and make brief remarks. It is so meaningful for these outstanding museums to be a part of the White House's celebration of the arts and humanities.

Invitees will include: Chairwoman of the National Museum Service Board (NMSB), Kinshasha Holman Conwill and NMSB members; the Chairwoman of

MEMORANDUM

TO: MELANNE VERVEER, DEPUTY ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT AND DEPUTY CHIEF OF STAFF TO THE FIRST LADY

FROM: BETTY C. MONKMAN, CURATOR

SUBJECT: Native American Sculpture Exhibition

The exhibition "Twentieth Century Sculpture at the White House: Honoring Native America" will be installed on September 22 and 23 in the Jacqueline Kennedy Garden.

Since November is Native American Month, I suggest that some event be held during November for the lending institutions, artists and others in the Native American community. Having an event shortly after the exhibition is installed would assist in informing people that the exhibition is on view here at the White House.

cc: Bobbie Greene

Patti,

As you may recall from this week's scheduling meeting, HRC agreed to visit the Native American exhibit at the National Museum of Women in the Arts. The exhibit opens on Oct. 9 and runs until the beginning of January. This would be a particularly important gesture since the request came from our contact at Mobil, which is supporting both the Women's Museum exhibit and the Nov. 5 reception at the White House for our Native American sculpture exhibit.

Ruth Mandel would like to speak by phone with HRC about her concerns regarding chair and vice-chair appointments to the Holocaust Museum Council. Since Ruth is often on the move, it would help to give her a specific time so she can be at the phone when Hillary calls.

Finally I noticed that the reception for the Native American Sculpture exhibit is not on the line block or the calendar. The date I have for it is Nov. 5. Does this fit with what you know?

8/28 Told Ann it wⁿt be possible.

The Museum of the 1st Bauhaus in NY is opening on September 11th - 11:00 am - noon, approx. Many of our Friends are on the Board.

They had requested the President or V.P. They have been told neither is available but keep trying. (I think there is reluctance to accept the No so they maintain they haven't definitely heard.)

Now they are asking about the First Lady. I give you the background because I don't know if this has already been discussed.

See the story about Louise Bourgeois is: see pictures NY Times.

If your answer is No, I will continue to offer satellite transmission - but needed to ask once more.
