I. PURPOSE

To accept the James A. Kelly Award for Advancing Accomplished Teaching from the National Board of Professional Teaching Standards.

II. BACKGROUND

Today the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards (NBPTS) will present you with the first James A. Kelly Award for Advancing Accomplished Teaching in recognition of your commitment to promoting both high standards for teachers and the growth and acceptance of National Board Certification for America's teachers. The James A. Kelly award is named after the founding President of the NBPTS who retired from his position at the end of 1999. It will be given periodically in the future to an individual or organization who provides clear, consistent and convincing evidence of their ability to foster Mr. Kelly's legacy of accomplished teaching. You have been chosen to be the first recipient of this award because of your support for the National Board both as Governor and as President.

The National Board of Professional Teaching Standards is an independent, non-partisan, non-profit organization governed by a 63-member Board of Directors, which predominately consists of classroom teachers. The Board of Directors establishes the standards for what accomplished teachers should know and be capable of teaching, and also develops and operates a national voluntary system to assess and certify teachers who meet those standards. In your 1997 State of the Union Address, you set a goal of having a National Board Certified Teacher in every school in the country. During the 1999-2000 school year, a record 4,720 became certified, nearly doubling the number of board certified teachers nationally to 9,524. In addition, due to your leadership to help raise awareness for the importance of teacher quality and high standards, the number of states to establish academic standards has increased from 14 in 1993 to 49 in 2000.

THE NATIONAL BOARD FOR PROFESSIONAL TEACHING STANDARDS HONORS PRESIDENT CLINTON FOR HIS OUTSTANDING WORK IN EDUCATION

Mr. Clinton is presented with the first annual James A. Kelly Award for Advancing Accomplished Teaching, named after NBPTS' founding president.

ARLINGTON, VA – The National Board for Professional Teaching Standards (NBPTS) honored President Clinton for his outstanding work in education and presented him with the James A. Kelly Award for Advancing Accomplished Teaching at a White House ceremony, Thursday, January 4, 2001.

The award was named after the organization's founding president to recognize and honor individuals who have been strong advocates of the teaching profession. Clinton has been selected to be the first recipient because of his commitment to promoting both high standards for teachers and the growth and acceptance of National Board Certification.

In a statement issued prior to today's event, Clinton said, "At a time when we face difficult choices about how best to prepare for the coming challenges, our devotion to education and to our young people must stand absolutely firm. As accomplished teachers and members of the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards, you have been at the forefront of this vital endeavor. Your commitment to setting and achieving high standards for teaching and learning is fundamentally changing the quality of education in America. I thank you for your abiding dedication to excellence in education."

"President Clinton's legacy to America is that improving education remains one of the top issues for the American public, says NBPTS Chair Barbara Kelley. "It was his leadership as co-chairman of the Education Task Force of the National Governor's Association that brought education to national prominence. Throughout his presidency, he has been a great friend to teachers and students."

"President Clinton has provided leadership for the National Board's work," says NBPTS President Betty Castor. "He has a deep understanding of what makes schools successful and has challenged us to provide at least 100,000 National Board Certified Teachers to America's schools by the year 2006."

The National Board established the James A. Kelly Award for Advancing Accomplished Teaching to recognize and honor individuals who: demonstrate respect for and belief in America's teachers; value the board's vision of accomplished teaching; show commitment to high standards for teachers; promote National Board Certification in business, philanthropy, higher education, government, or community leadership; and, advocate stronger, professional leadership roles for National Board Certified Teachers.

Kelly served as president and chief executive officer of NBPTS for 12-years before retiring in 1999. Under his leadership, the National Board created a mission to establish rigorous standards for what accomplished teachers should know and be able to do. Committed to elevating the teaching profession as a means of providing a high quality education for all children, Kelly oversaw the first group of teachers who achieved National Board Certification.

Founded in 1987, the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards is an independent, non-profit, non-partisan and non-government organization. There are nearly 10,000 National Board Certified Teachers in the U.S. In addition, more than 13,000 teachers are expected to seek National Board Certification this year.

NBPTS just called to say that Robert Wehling won't be able to attend. While they know I told them they couldn't add or substitute names on the list, they would like to their Vice President, John Fredrickson, whose travel plans have allowed him to join their E-Board meeting tomorrow, to take Robert Wehling's spot. Let me know if this is going to be a problem. Here are his vitals:

John Fredrickson
Vice President, NBPTS
