RE: JUDGE RICARDO M. URBINA

Judge Urbina, a graduate of Georgetown University and Georgetown Law Center, is a 50 year old male born of a Honduran father and Puerto Rican mother in Manhattan, New York. After law school and before his judicial appointment, the Judge worked as a staff attorney for the D.C. Public Defender Service, had a private practice with an emphasis on commercial litigation and assumed a position as Professor of Law at Howard University Law School where for seven years he directed the university's Criminal Justice Program and taught criminal law, criminal procedure and torts. In 1978 Judge Urbina was voted Professor of the Year by the Howard Law School student body. At the end of 1980 President Carter nominated the judge for a position on the D.C. Superior Court bench. In April, 1981 Urbina became President Reagan's first presidential judicial appointment and the first Hispanic judge in the history of the District of Columbia.

During his thirteen years on the Superior Court, Judge Ricardo Urbina garnered distinction and respect for his management of the court's most demanding trial assignments, his performance as Presiding (chief administrative) judge of the court's Family Division (1985-88) and his handling of highly complex and sensitive litigation. During his tenure as Family Division Presiding Judge, he chaired a committee of judges and lawyers who drafted the Child Support Guidelines which the City Council adopted as the District's child support law. In his 1989-90 stint in the Criminal Division, he presided over a calendar which consisted exclusively of 1st degree murder, rape and child molestation cases. In September of 1990 he was among judges specially selected by the Chief Judge to handle large complex civil calendars. Judge Urbina has sat as a D.C. Court of Appeals Judge by special designation and authored a significant opinion on the subject of civil discovery. He is still remembered by many for his collegiate athletic accomplishments (NCAA Champion and three-time All American).

The judge's work has enjoyed widespread recognition among various communities and bar associations. In Houston, Texas (1985), The National Council of La Raza awarded Judge Urbina the Maclovio Barraza Leadership Award for "exemplary leadership in promoting the interest of Hispanics in the United States." He has also received the Simon Bolivar Award ". . . in recognition of a continuing commitment to the unity and progress of Latin-American people." Particularly notable is his work with youth in the D.C. Metropolitan area. This activity contributed to the recognition bestowed upon Judge Urbina in 1986 when he was named a Washingtonian of the Year. His work with families and youth twice received national acknowledgment when in 1988 the Federal Department of Health and Human Services officially hailed him for his "Outstanding Leadership in the Prevention of Child Abuse and Neglect" and again in 1990 for the creation of the "District of Columbia's Child Support Guidelines." Judge Urbina chaired the Court Personnel Subcommittee for the Task Force on Racial and Ethnic Bias in the Courts (1991-'92).

In January, 1992 the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) presented its Silver Anniversary Award to Judge Urbina for professional excellence and distinguished service to the local and national communities. In 1993 the Hispanic National Bar Association honored the judge with an award for his demonstrated commitment to the "Preservation of Civil and Constitutional Rights of All Americans."

On June 2, 1994 the District of Columbia Hispanic Bar Association presented Judge Urbina with the Hugh A. Johnson, Jr. Memorial Award for his devotion and many contributions to the creation of harmony among diverse elements of the community and bar. In October, 1994 the District of Columbia Courts presented its Achievement Recognition Award to Judge Urbina for thirteen years of dedicated service and exemplary commitment to serving all the people of the District of Columbia; on June 20, 1995 the Hispanic Magazine and NBC presented Judge Urbina with the VIDA Award for his outstanding achievements and exemplary community service as an Hispanic leader nationwide. On July 18, 1995 Judge Urbina received the Superior Court Service Award for eighteen years of loyal service to the Court and to the community.

LEGAL EXPERTISE:

I specialize in defending the rights of children and adolescents. My trial work has focused particularly on abused teenagers who kill their parents. In addition to these cases, I work on more general cases involving teenagers who kill, domestic violence murders as well as a variety of child-abuse and family violence related matters. Not only do I personally litigate these cases, but I work throughout the nation in the capacity of an expert trial consultant and testify as an expert witness.

I have worked throughout the United States and overseas on over two hundred and fifty murder cases in my career.

Since I entered private practice I have also worked on an array of other children and adolescent issues ranging from representing children in juvenile court in Los Angeles and Boston to being a policy consultant to the Scott Newman Foundation of Los Angeles on matters concerning adolescent substance abuse education policy.

From the fall of 1984 through the spring of 1986 I was the legal director of the Public Justice Foundation in Santa Monica, California. This was a public interest law firm specializing in juvenile and criminal justice policy issues. My focus was on providing community-based alternatives to the incarceration of juveniles in adult lock-ups.

From the spring of 1980 through the fall of 1984, I was the director of Juvenile Advocates Inc., located in Morgantown, West Virginia and funded by the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention. This was a state-wide legal advocacy and education program working on behalf of delinquent youth. In addition to working as an ombudsman for youth in detention, I provided technical assistance to attorneys handling juvenile matters in trial and appellate court. My other responsibilities included conducting state bar CLE seminars as well as trainings for magistrates, probation officers, and correctional personnel.

Prior to working at Juvenile Advocates, I was a staff attorney at West Virginia Legal Services in Clarksburg, West Virginia.

LEGAL TEACHING EXPERIENCE:

I have been an adjunct professor of juvenile law at Pepperdine Law School in Los Angeles, the University of West Los Angeles, West Virginia University Law School. I was also a visiting lecturer at Washington and Lee Law School in Leesburg, Virginia and Whittier College of Law in Los Angeles.

I have also been an adjunct associate professor at the UCLA Neuro-Psychiatric Institute.

LECTURE AND SPEAKING EXPERIENCE

I regularly deliver lectures and training seminars concerning child abuse, juvenile justice, teen homicide, parricide, domestic violence and intra-family homicide to defense counsel, law enforcement, district attorneys, judges, social workers, psychologists, psychiatrists and other professionals who regularly deal with delinquent and abused children and teenagers. I am presently under contract to do training for the U S. Department of Justice, Office for Victims of Crime.

In the last ten years, I have spoken before the following organizations (these include both training sessions and keynote addresses): the Los Angeles Mayor's Task Force on Youth Development, First National Child Abuse Policy Conference, Sacramento, CA.; Annual Joint meeting of National Association of Juvenile and Family Court Judges and the National Association of District Attorneys; the American Bar Association; the Second International Research Conference on Family Violence, Durham, NH.; the United States Senate, Judiciary Committee's Sub-committee on Juvenile Justice Washington, D.C.; International Society for the Prevention of Child Abuse; Annual Conference of the Florida Public Defender's Office; Annual Conference of the Wisconsin Public Defender; The Defense of Family Violence Homicide Cases sponsored by the Washington Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers; the International Society for the Study of Post-traumatic Stress; American Public Welfare Association; National Symposium on Child Sexual Abuse; American Psychological Association; the National Conference of State Courts; the Ohio Association of Chiefs of Police; Georgia Council on Child Abuse; Maryland Governor's Council on Child Abuse; California Public Defenders Association; Louisiana Council on Child Abuse; North Carolina Committee to Prevent Child Abuse; the Annual Meeting of the American Psychological Association; Florida Public Defender's Association; the Los Angeles County Public Defender's annual juvenile delinquency seminar; the Northern Kentucky Task Force on Children and Violence; the European Seminar for Child Abuse Training Specialists held in Dundee, Scotland; the National Symposium on Child Victimization held in Washington, D.C.; the annual Washington State Conference on Children's Rights; the Western Regional Symposium on Child Abuse and Sexual Assault held in Eugene, Oregon and the Mecklenburg County, North Carolina Conference on Family Violence.

In 1996 my lecture schedule includes the American Psychiatric Association, the Florida Board or Pardon and Parole (keynote), the Los Angeles County Domestic Violence Council (keynote), the Oregon Crime Victim Assistance Network (keynote), the National Association of Juvenile and Family Court Judges, the 11th National Conference on Child Abuse and Neglect, the Iowa Children's Justice Conference (keynote), the Oklahoma Supreme Court's Office of Judicial Education and the Los Angeles County Court's Children and Families Conference, In Harm's Way: A National Forum on Children & Violence sponsored by Children's Institute International and the Los Angeles County Medical Examiners Conference on Domestic Violence (keynote).

SUBJECT: RE: Future Child Welfare Chat Sessions

I agree we must invite most if not all the people you have listed...and groups that are much larger than those we have had won't work. There are fifteen on that list and if there is not a specific adoption session held then we must add Sheryl Dicker (who will discuss more than adoption if an overall session). However, I have been trying to set up for a private breakfast with Ralph and Frank based on a meeting Ralph and I had a couple of months ago so we might be back down to 14 with the two subtractions and one addition. That could definitely be done in three sessions in October, not unreasonable.

Fully realizing how word circulates I would not want folks to think we had stopped any time soon as they would get worried we're over here writing/talking about nothing else and start asking to come in and plead their cases individually and we can't have that in the closing weeks of campaign. There is no reason you, JBA, Jennifer, etc. can't begin your deliberations on ideas, etc. and keep it moving as a work in progress....

I am hesitant to set dates until late this week, early next week for those next three....please send me a reminder next Monday to look at this.

Thanks.

THE ELEVENTH NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON CHILD ABUSE AND NEGLECT

Weaving a National Commitment: New Challenges and Strategies for Protecting Children is the theme for the Eleventh National Conference on Child Abuse and Neglect, which will be held September 16 - 21, 1996, in Washington, D.C. This theme reflects our nation's resolve to provide each child with a healthy family life and a safe and caring community. It also encompasses our desire to create solutions rather than divisions, as the Conference brings together the viewpoints of diverse communities, professional disciplines, and public policy-makers from across the nation.

The Eleventh National Conference is distinguished in another respect– 1996 marks the 20th anniversary of NCCAN's National Conference on Child Abuse and Neglect. A variety of activities have been planned to celebrate the achievements of all those who work to prevent and respond to child maltreatment. Conference attendees will have an opportunity to:

- Gain leading-edge information about trends and proven practices in child abuse prevention, intervention, and treatment
- Hear prominent speakers and participate in discussions with recognized leaders in the field of child maltreatment
- Network with other professionals who are committed to improving the well-being of children and families
- Celebrate the 20th anniversary of the NCCAN National Conferences on Child Abuse and Neglect by participating in various special events

A variety of pre-conference seminars, plenary sessions, key issue sessions, workshops, skills seminars, roundtables, and think tanks are planned to address key issues in the areas of program, research, policy, and practice as they relate to child maltreatment. The experiences and perspectives of experts from different professional disciplines, cultural and ethnic backgrounds, and geographic regions are woven into every aspect of the Conference. We invite you to join your colleagues in celebrating 20 years of the National Conference on Child Abuse and Neglect and discovering new horizons for personal and professional growth.

- Gain leading-edge information

Donna E. Shalala, Secretary of Health and Human Services, has been a scholar, educational administrator, and a public servant for her entire career. She was confirmed by the U.S. Senate in January 1993 to lead the Federal government's principal agency for protecting the health of all Americans and providing essential human services. HHS administers a wide variety of programs, including most Federal welfare and children's programs. Before her appointment, Secretary Shalala was Chancellor of the University of Wisconsin at Madison.

Mary Jo Bane, Assistant Secretary for Children and Families, HHS, oversees more than 60 Federal programs that address the needs of children and families. She is also a co-chair of President Clinton's Working Group on Welfare Reform, Family Support, and Independence. Before joining HHS, Dr. Bane was commissioner of the New York State Department of Social Services and was also a professor of Social Policy at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government.

Olivia A. Golden, Commissioner on Children, Youth and Families in the Administration for Children and Families, oversees the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect and the Child Care, Head Start, Children's, and Family and Youth Services Bureaus. Before coming to HHS, Dr. Golden was director of programs and policy for the Children's Defense Fund.

About the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect

The National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect (NCCAN) was established within the Department of Health and Human Services to assist and enhance National, State, and community efforts to prevent, identify, and treat child abuse and neglect.

While the primary responsibility for responding to cases of child maltreatment rests with State and local agencies, NCCAN has furthered these and other initiatives in many ways. The agency provides grants to assist States in developing, establishing, and operating programs designed to improve the response to child abuse cases. It also coordinates a number of related initiatives, including conducting research and demonstration projects; supporting service improvement projects; providing technical assistance and consultation through two National Resource Centers; providing grants to eligible States for strengthening and improving child protective service programs; improving the investigation and prosecution of child abuse cases, particularly child sexual abuse; establishing and maintaining trust funds or other funding mechanisms to support prevention activities related to child abuse and neglect; and coordinating Federal activities related to child abuse and neglect through the Inter-Agency Task Force on Child Abuse and Neglect, which is comprised of 30 Federal agencies and programs.

FEATURED SPEAKERS

JONATHAN KOZOL, our keynote speaker at the Opening Session, is one of the most powerful social activists of our time. A writer and teacher, he has moved millions with his revelations on such issues as poverty, racial isolation, homelessness, illiteracy, and public school education. His latest book, Amazing Grace, documents the poverty and racial isolation of children and families living in the South Bronx. The book, which has had a profound affect on most readers, became a national best seller within three weeks of its publication.

ANNE COHN DONNELLY, D.P.H., Executive Director of the National Committee to Prevent Child Abuse (NCPCA), has long been a leader in child abuse prevention and treatment. She designed the first national evaluation study of child abuse treatment programs. As Executive Director of the NCPCA, Dr. Donnelly oversees the organization's network of chapters, a national center on child abuse prevention research, and the Healthy Families America initiative. She has also served as Secretary of the International Society for Prevention of Child Abuse and Neglect.

RICARDO M. URBINA, U.S. District Court Judge, has gained widespread recognition for his contributions in support of children and families. The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services honored him in 1988 for Outstanding Leadership in the Prevention of Child Abuse and Neglect and again in 1990 for his efforts in creating the District of Columbia's Child Support Guidelines. In 1993, the Hispanic National Bar Association presented him with the Preservation of Civil and Constitutional Rights of All Americans award.

CAROL W. WILLIAMS, D.S.W., Associate Commissioner of the Children's Bureau, Administration for Children and Families, is responsible for the management and oversight of ACF programs that focus on strengthening and supporting children and families, and on enhancing State and local child welfare programs and services. Dr. Williams has an extensive background in child welfare. Among other positions she held before coming to ACF, Dr. Williams was a senior associate at the Center for Social Policy in Washington, D.C., and director of the Child Welfare Leadership Center at the University of North Carolina.

PRE-CONFERENCE SEMINARS

A series of pre-conference seminars is being offered to highlight critical issues in the field of child maltreatment from a multidisciplinary perspective. Conference attendees are invited to participate in these discussions, which are sponsored by several prestigious organizations in the field of child and family well-being. An enrollment fee of $30 entitles you to attend up to three of the seminars. Please indicate on the Registration Form which pre-conference seminars you would like to attend.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 16

1:30 p.m. - 5:00 p.m.

Seminar A: Family Violence and Child Abuse

Sponsored by the State of Maryland, Governor's Office for Children, Youth and Families

A close examination of the evolution of violence in a family, and the dynamics involved, allows practitioners to develop more effective intervention strategies. This session provides hands-on suggestions for social workers, law enforcement professionals, and judges dealing with children affected by family violence. The rights of children and adolescents whose abusive experiences have resulted in violence are also examined in conjunction with family violence homicides.

Seminar B: Does the Child Protective Service System Have a Role in Prevention?

Sponsored by the Family and Youth Services Bureau

The fields of child abuse prevention and intervention have traditionally addressed the mission of providing for children's safety in different and often completely separate ways. Prevention efforts have focused on community work, public relations, and designing community-based programs, while intervention through child protective services has involved risk assessment and interfacing with the criminal justice system and the health industry. The argument for linking prevention and intervention has grown with the advent of collaborative funding, family preservation and support, and multidisciplinary teaming. This seminar explores common themes and issues that link child abuse prevention and intervention, future trends that will influence these areas, and ways to facilitate cooperation between prevention and intervention practitioners.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17

8:30 a.m. - Noon

Seminar C: The Healthy Families Initiatives

Sponsored by the Freddie Mac Foundation

More than three decades of research on child abuse prevention programs suggests that altering parenting practices in at-risk families requires services that are comprehensive, intensive, and flexible. Ensuring the development of such efforts, as well as sustaining their quality, is a major challenge for both policy-makers and practitioners. This seminar will discuss comprehensive initiatives and the policy and program components that are critical for their ongoing success. A complete summary of the Healthy Families America (HFA) approach, how this initiative seeks to build on existing community and State-level services, and how participants can bring HFA to their States and communities will also be presented. Healthy Families America is a program of the National Committee to Prevent Child Abuse.

- Obtain hands-on advice from experienced professionals
- Explore future trends in prevention and intervention
- Examine the latest initiatives in family services
- Learn how to make the most of existing funding sources

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17
8:30 - Noon

Seminar D: New Insights into Treating Abused Children
Sponsored by the National Committee to Prevent Child Abuse and
The American Professional Society on the Abuse of Children

Treatment for abused and neglected children is a critical component of a comprehensive approach to addressing child maltreatment. Timely and competent intervention is essential not only for alleviating the immediate negative impacts of victimization but also for reducing the likelihood of difficulties in later life. This seminar reviews recent research findings on the growing pool of treatment services and discusses their implications for the field.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17
1:30 - 5:00 p.m.

Seminar E: Understanding Agency and Program Funding Sources
Sponsored by the National Association of Social Workers

Of interest to everyone in these days of dwindling resources, this seminar reviews various sources of public and private funds and how to tap into them. The flow of public funds from Federal to State to local levels will be examined. Participants will learn how to package their program accomplishments, how to present an "in-place" infrastructure, how different funding processes work, and how State legislators and financial advisors establish priorities and safeguards. The importance of understanding funding streams in successful interagency collaboration is also discussed.

Seminar F: Community-Based Child Protection: Strategies for Creating a Safety Net for Children of Color in Family Support Centers
Sponsored by the People of Color Leadership Institute

The movement toward family preservation and family support has signaled the need for increased community-building and the establishment of neighborhood coalitions. Culture plays a key role in these efforts. There is also a strong need for cultural competence at all levels of both public and private child protective service systems. This session explores critical questions in establishing family support systems for high-risk children of color: What are the service needs of high-risk families? Can family support centers meet the needs of families already involved in the public child protective services system? What are the critical issues involved in integrating high-risk families into a voluntary prevention-focused program?

THE CONFERENCE PLENARY SESSIONS

Each morning of the Conference begins with a plenary session to bring Conference participants together and set the tone for the day's sessions. Nationally recognized speakers have been invited to share their experiences and provide insight into strategies for addressing child maltreatment in an ever-changing environment.

- At the Opening Plenary, Jonathan Kozol will speak to the state of our nation's poorest children and the conditions that make such a state possible. Mr. Kozol has spent much of his life talking with and listening to children, and the stories he conveys are extraordinarily moving.

- Donna E. Shalala, Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, has been invited to be the keynote speaker at Wednesday morning's plenary session. Anne Cohn Donnelly will also speak, addressing the need to convince states and funding agencies to invest in prevention as we move to a more state-oriented environment.

- Thursday morning's plenary session addresses the role of the court within the community and its responsibilities in child protection. Judge Ricardo M. Urbina is our keynote speaker; Mary Jo Bane, Assistant Secretary for Children and Families at the Department of Health and Human Services, will also make remarks.

- Friday morning's plenary session addresses tensions in the field of child protection, particularly those surrounding such issues as parents' rights and responsibilities versus child safety, and preservation versus placement. The panel of experts includes Sheryl Brissett-Chapman, Executive Director for the Baptist Home for Children in Maryland; Richard J. Fitzgerald, District Judge, Jefferson County District Court in Kentucky; Barbara J. Sabol, former Commissioner of the New York City Human Resources Administration; Michael Weber, Chair of the U.S. Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect; and Carol W. Williams, Associate Commissioner of the Children's Bureau, Administration for Children and Families.

- Remarks at the Closing Luncheon will address current trends on social issues in America and their implications for improving the well-being of children and families in our nation. The session will also explore steps that Conference participants can take to strengthen families and social supports within their own communities.

FEATURED SESSIONS

OPENING PLENARY AND RECEPTION

Jonathan Kozol, author of Amazing Grace and well-known child advocate, is the keynote speaker for the Opening Plenary Session. The U.S. Army Band and Color Guard have been invited to perform. In addition, Mark Camphouse has been invited to conduct the band in performing his composition dedicated to victims of child abuse. The evening will conclude with a reception, including refreshments and entertainment. Tuesday, September 17, 6:00 - 9:00 p.m. Admission included in registration fee.

CONGRESSIONAL DEBATE

A panel of Congressional representatives will discuss key policy issues related to the future well-being of children, their families, and the communities in which they live. These panelists represent a variety of viewpoints on the issues, to ensure an interesting and informative discussion. Date and time to be announced.

COMMISSIONER'S AWARD CEREMONY

Sponsored by the Freddie Mac Foundation

The Commissioner's Award Ceremony pays tribute to an individual from each State and U.S. Territory in recognition of his or her outstanding contribution and commitment to the field of child abuse and neglect. The award is presented by the Commissioner for the Administration on Children, Youth and Families, HHS. Conference participants are welcome to attend the award ceremony. Each award recipient is entitled to invite several guests to attend the reception which follows. Friday, September 20, 7:00 - 9:00 p.m.

CLOSING LUNCHEON

Conference activities conclude with an inspiring closing keynote message and luncheon—not to be missed! Reservation information can be found on the Conference Registration Form. Saturday, September 21, 12:30 - 3:00 p.m. $25 per person.

KEY ISSUE SESSIONS

Key issue sessions will be held on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday mornings. These sessions focus on topics that relate to the Conference theme and highlight key issues involving child and family well-being. Participants will have an opportunity to meet with issue experts, participate in group discussion, and share their views with others in the field.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18

10:30 a.m. - 12 noon

I. Training for the Marathon: Maintaining Multidisciplinary Teams

Almost everyone agrees that multidisciplinary teams are better able to meet the needs of maltreated children and their families than professionals acting in isolation. While enthusiasm might be high through the early stages of team development and maintenance, teams have their own life cycles. What happens when key members move on? When team morale droops? When unanticipated road blocks emerge? When new agency leaders withdraw support for the team? This session gives practical guidance in meeting these and other challenges to maintaining a multidisciplinary team over the long haul.

II. Comprehensive Strategies for Community-Based Programs

This session reviews strategies that have been successful in developing and sustaining quality community-based initiatives. A key element in all programs that succeed at the community level is a recognition of the importance of developing partnerships with appropriate individuals and organizations, including public agencies. A panel of experts will discuss innovative models for community-based programs and new strategies for promoting the health and welfare of children and families.

- Organize and sustain effective multidisciplinary teams
- Develop strategies that work for your community
- Prepare for change
- Respond effectively to the signs of potential or actual abuse

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 19

10:30 a.m. - 12 noon

III. Public Opinion, Politics, and Child Protection: National Trends and Their Policy Implications

A panel of pollsters, media figures, and child protection experts will discuss national trends in policy and public opinion. Included will be discussion on the following questions: How will continued calls for increased State, community, family, and individual responsibility affect the development and implementation of child protection policies? What might we see in Election '96, and what could it mean for child protection?

IV. Substance Abuse, Domestic Violence, and Child Maltreatment

The dynamics of families who come to the attention of child protective services professionals are complex and often complicated by substance abuse and domestic violence issues. In many instances, though, we either fail to identify these problems or fail to intervene appropriately. This session will address the extent to which the families we serve are affected by substance abuse and/or domestic violence, how current child protection systems detect and respond to these issues, and how these responses could be improved to better address the safety needs of children and families.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 20

10:30 a.m. - 12 noon

V. The Family Preservation and Support Initiative: A New Approach to Child Protection and Family Preservation

In today's world of declining resources and increasing demand for services, it is essential that service systems find new and innovative ways to cope. For the past two years, States have been planning and working toward implementation of the new Federal initiative "Family Preservation and Support." Agencies, community groups, advocates, and parents in every State have been working to design a continuum of services and protections for vulnerable children and their families. This session discusses this collaborative process as well as the concept of child protection and family preservation working hand-in-hand.

VI. Weaving the Future of Research and Evaluation: The Need to Know

A national panel offers perspectives on the development and direction of the knowledge base in the field of child maltreatment, including prevention, violence, intervention and treatment, maltreatment effects, and system response. Panelists also explore ways of working collectively to influence forces that shape research and evaluation in the field, including the dynamics between researchers and practitioners, the identification of new problems, the research agenda-setting process, and the evolving role of government.

SKILLS SEMINARS

Skills seminars are intensive training sessions that offer participants an opportunity to enhance existing skills and learn new techniques. The seminars, which are one and one-half hours in length, will be held Wednesday through Friday afternoons and on Saturday morning. Space will be on a first-come, first-served basis and will be limited to 30 participants.

The following skills seminars are being offered during the Conference:

- The Challenges of Being an Expert Witness
- Risk Reduction and Interviewing/Intervention for Children with Severe Disabilities
- Interfacing with the Media
- C-4: Communicate, Coordinate, Collaborate, and Cooperate
- Sexual Assault Nurse Examiner (SANE) Program
- Conducting Secondary Analyses with the Third National Incidence Study of Child Abuse and Neglect
- Preparing the Child Abuse Victim for Court: Considerations and Strategies for Civil and Criminal Proceedings
- Child Maltreatment: Finding the Resources Necessary for Successful Evaluation
- How to "Internetwork": Internet Skills and Tools for Child Abuse and Neglect Professionals
- How to Get a Child Fatality Review Team Going
- Treatment of Children Who Are Victims of Child Abuse
- Beyond Home Visitation: Other Approaches to Prevention

WASHINGTON, D.C. A CAPITAL CITY

For the first time, NCCAN's National Conference on Child Abuse and Neglect will be held in Washington, D.C. Our nation's capital is an excellent choice of location for this 20th anniversary event, raising the issue of child maltreatment before national policy makers. The city also offers a multitude of historic attractions, museums, and theaters.

CULTURAL DIVERSITY

Washington, D.C., is a diverse, multi-cultural, multi-ethnic city with a strong history of hospitality. It is also a city of neighborhoods, each providing its own special ambiance. These include Adams Morgan, with its array of ethnic restaurants and unique shopping; Dupont Circle, a diverse and popular gathering spot in the city; and Georgetown, located along the Potomac River and noted for its nightlife.

ARTS & LEISURE

Some of the world's most famous museums and monuments are located in Washington, D.C., including the White House, U.S. Capitol Building, Supreme Court, Washington Monument, Lincoln Memorial, Jefferson Memorial, Frederick Douglass Historic Site, Vietnam Veterans Memorial, Korean War Veterans Memorial, Arlington National Cemetery, and the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum. The 14 museums of the Smithsonian Institution cover art, science, history, and peoples of the world- past and present–and include the National Gallery of Art, National Museum of African Art, National Air and Space Museum, National Museum of American History, National

Additional Program Highlights

Workshops

SOME 200 WORKSHOPS will be presented at the Conference by experts in the field of child abuse and neglect. The workshops are designed to include a wide range of professional services which, when woven together, can enhance services for abused and neglected children and strengthen family life. A broad array of workshops will be presented in each of the following topic areas:

- Family Preservation & Family Support Initiatives
- Multidisciplinary Practice Issues
- Community-Based Programs
- The Interrelationship Between Substance Abuse, Domestic Violence, and Child Maltreatment
- Advocacy, Policy, and Legal Issues
- Research and Evaluation

Within each topic area, different sessions will concentrate on: ☆ Prevention ☆ Identification ☆ Assessment ☆ Treatment ☆ Training and Technical Assistance ☆ Program and Practice Evaluation ☆ Data Collection ☆ Information Dissemination. The workshops, which are one and one-half hours in length, will be offered from Wednesday, September 18, through Saturday, September 21.

Think Tanks

A SERIES of think tanks will be held on Saturday morning, September 21, to address major issues of concern to professionals in the field of child abuse and neglect. These sessions, each three and one-half hours in length, provide a dynamic forum in which leading-edge practitioners and researchers can examine state-of-the-art information on selected topics. NCCAN's Resource Centers will develop and facilitate the sessions.

Roundtables

ROUNDTABLE SESSIONS will be offered Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday mornings. They provide participants an opportunity to raise questions, debate views, and develop policy recommendations around such issues as ethics in child fatality cases and facilitating the development of multidisciplinary sexual abuse teams.

Exhibits

THE CONFERENCE features an Exhibit Hall, where new and innovative products and materials relevant to the field of children and family services will be showcased. The Exhibit Hall is centrally located and will be open throughout the Conference. The cost of exhibit space is $600 for for-profit organizations and $300 for non-profit organizations. As supporters of the Conference, exhibitors will be acknowledged in the Conference Program.

Film Forum

THE CONFERENCE is pleased to offer participants a preview of some of the latest films on child abuse and related issues. Films will be available for viewing in guests' rooms at the Hilton on a 24-hour basis and in the Conference Film Room from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. daily, beginning September 17. A list of the featured films and presentation times will be provided in the Conference Program.

Networking Sessions

DESIGNATED SPACE will be made available in the hotel for networking among interested Conference participants.

Acknowledgments

The Consortium of Longitudinal Studies on Child Abuse and Neglect has been supported by National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect grants 90CA1433 and 90CA1467 to the University of North Carolina Injury Prevention Research Center, 90CA1481 to the University of Maryland School of Medicine; 90CA1568 to the Juvenile Protective Association of Chicago; and 90CA1566 to San Diego State University. The analysis of social capital and child well-being has been supported by grant UO1HD30945 from the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development for participation in the NICHD Family and Child Well-being Network.

Early versions of this paper were presented at the Population Association of America annual meeting in San Francisco, April, 1995 and the Third International Conference on Injury Prevention and Control in Melbourne, Australia, February, 1996.

Significant contributions to the conceptualization and execution of the LONGSCAN initiative have been made by the following investigators: Maureen Black, PhD (University of Maryland), Patrick A. Curtis, PhD (Child Welfare League of America, Washington, D.C. and Juvenile Protective Association, Chicago), Mark D. Everson, PhD (University of North Carolina); Jonathan B. Kotch, MD, MPH (University of North Carolina); Alan Litrownik, PhD, (San Diego State University); Mary Wood Schneider, PhD (Juvenile Protective Association, Chicago); and Raymond Starr, PhD (University of Maryland at Baltimore). Professional staff who have been crucial to the successful execution of the study include Elizabeth Knight, MSW, Ellen Ruina, MBA, Jane Winsor, Hope Bryan, MS, and Shelley Simpson at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill; Donna Harrington, PhD, at the University of Maryland, Jean Remmer at San Diego State University; and Edie Nelson, MSW, at the Washington State Department of Social Services.

ABSTRACT

Objective.— To examine the importance of social capital to the developmental and behavioral well-being of children at risk.

Design.— Cross-sectional case-control analysis of baseline survey data from 4 coordinated longitudinal studies.

Participants.—A total of 667 two to five year old children and their maternal caretakers who are participating in the Consortium of Longitudinal Studies in Child Abuse and Neglect (LONGSCAN). At recruitment, all subjects shared unfavorable social or economic factors that contributed to the identification of the children as "high risk."

Measures.—Social capital was defined as the benefits that accrue from social connectedness in communities and families. A 5-point social capital index was created by assigning one point for each of the following indicators: (1) two parents in the home; (2) personal social support for maternal caretaker; (3) no more than one other sibling in the home; (4) neighborhood support; and (5) regular church attendance. Outcome measures were the Child Behavior Checklist, a behavior problem inventory, and the Battelle Developmental Screening Test. Children were classified as functioning well if there were no indications of behavior problems or developmental problems, as measured by these two instruments.

Results.—Only 13% of the children were classified as "doing well." Social capital was strongly associated with child well-being, even after controlling for foster care placement, maternal depression, family income, maternal education and site differences. Adding any one social capital indicator increased the odds of "doing well" by 30%; adding any two increased the odds of "doing well" by 66%.

Conclusions.—Social capital appears to be a strong determinant of child well-being in a high risk, low socio-economic sample.

As a society, we are becoming increasingly concerned about the demise of close-knit neighborhoods and extended families. In 1988, James Coleman introduced the concept of social capital and the hypothesis that the benefits accrued from social connectedness in communities, as well as in families, have a decided impact on the development and well-being of children.[1] He defined social capital as a variety of different aspects of the social structure – personal relations and networks of relations – that facilitate actions within the structure. Whereas financial capital and human capital have long been recognized as resources for individual development and productivity, social capital refers to features in the social organization, such as networks, norms, and social trust, that facilitate coordination and cooperation for mutual benefit. Social capital is derived from connectedness and an array of obligations, expectations, information channels, and norms within families and communities. It is conceptualized as a resource that, once accumulated, can be drawn on or accessed as needed.

Coleman also conducted an investigation of social capital's impact on the creation or diminution of human capital. From a study of high school students, he identified five variables that could be construed as conferring social capital: the presence of both parents in the household (more parental resources to invest in child), presence of one vs. four siblings (fewer children represent a greater concentration of parental attention), fewer changes of school since 5th grade (social relations are disrupted with each move), regular attendance at religious services (organizational involvement is considered an important component of social capital and religious affiliation is the most common associational membership among Americans[2]), and mother's high expectations for a child's educational attainment (reflecting family norms and parental investment in the child). These social capital variables distinguished between adolescents who stayed in school and those who dropped out, with an additive effect noted when variables were examined in combination. Coleman also found lower dropout rates among students attending parochial schools and explained this phenomenon with the theory that intergenerational closure–a relationship structure in which a child's friends and associates are sons and daughters of the parent's friends and associates—enhances the positive impact of social capital.

Smith et al[3] looked at the impact on school drop-out of residential-based community social capital and the degree to which community social capital (residential stability, social networks, community and organizational involvement) supplements family social capital (two parents, fewer siblings, quality of family interaction). The number of moves since 5th grade accounted for more variance in drop-out rates than any other variable tested. While the student's participation in activities such as scouts or YMCA had no influence on drop-out behavior, involvement in church activities on a regular basis was a significant predictor of remaining in school through graduation.

Social capital in family relationships has been studied with data from the National Longitudinal Survey's Youth Cohort Study of mothers and children.[4] Changes in family composition (marital disruption, or birth of a sibling) were related to increased child behavior problems. Child behavior problems were also related to a less child-oriented home environment and mother's low self-esteem. The impact of mother employment outside of the home was considered in terms of the effect that employment has on amount of time available for children, and on the attendant changes in the nature of social capital that the working mother may draw on. The authors conclude that social capital as embodied in family composition, mother's social connections, and the home environment, has an impact on the child's current behavior and on the behavioral norms for family life that are transmitted across generations.

Using 1980 national survey data, Boisjoly, Duncan & Hofferth[5] measured the "stock" of social capital available to families by focusing on the responses to two survey questions that asked about the availability of a friend or relative who would offer time or money in an emergency situation. Using this definition, the authors report that nine out of ten families have access to social capital. This definition of social capital is restricted to emergency support and does not measure other aspects of the construct.

Ecological theory posits that a child's development occurs within enveloped contexts beginning with the microsystem of the family which is in turn subject to the influences of the residential community and the broader cultural milieu.[6] The combination of family and community-based social capital may be a crucial mediator in the relationship between extreme family poverty and its accompanying risks and the development of children living in these conditions.

This study examines the relationship between social capital and the development of young children known to be at risk for poor outcomes through a nested case-control analysis of the LONGSCAN (Longitudinal Studies of Child Abuse and Neglect) baseline data. Extensive data collection on these children during the preschool years included a number of variables that can be considered indicators of social capital within the family and within the wider community, specifically: (1) the presence of a two-parent family, (2) perception of personal social support by the child's maternal caretaker, (3) relatively fewer children in the household claiming family resources, (4) neighborhood support for parenting, and (5) regular church attendance by the family. In this paper we examine whether the cumulative impact of social capital indicators is greater than the impact of each individual indicator and test the hypothesis that social capital is related to the developmental and behavioral well-being of high risk preschool children.

METHODS

The hypotheses were examined using the baseline data from on-going longitudinal studies of child maltreatment entitled LONGSCAN (Longitudinal Studies in Child Abuse and Neglect). Briefly, LONGSCAN is a coordinated set of five prospective studies of the consequences of child abuse and neglect. The studies use the same measures, data collection and handling procedures, and data entry system; they differ systematically by sampling children who are (1) at risk for maltreatment (North Carolina and Baltimore), (2) have been reported for maltreatment (Seattle), or (3) have been identified as maltreated and involved in remedial interventions by social service or other treatment agencies (Chicago and San Diego). The current paper involves a cross-sectional analysis of baseline data from four of the LONGSCAN studies. Using a case-control analysis plan, we examined the relationship between "social capital" variables and child functioning.

Sample

The subjects for this investigation consisted of LONGSCAN study children who were between the ages of 2 to 5 at the time of the baseline interview: North Carolina (N=141), San Diego (N=146), Baltimore (N=196) and Seattle (N=184). (The children in the Chicago study were too young for inclusion in this analysis.) Though the cohort samples were derived in diverse ways, all shared unfavorable environmental factors contributing to identification of these children as "at risk" for child abuse or neglect. In a North Carolina study that preceded LONGSCAN, consecutive infants born at participating hospitals were identified as at-risk because of factors such as low birth weight, gestational age < 36 weeks, medical problems at birth, mother age 16 or less, parent with alcohol or substance abuse problem, no prenatal care, parent with incapacitating medical/mental handicap, or single parent with no family support. At four years of age, 74 of these children who had been reported for maltreatment were enrolled in LONGSCAN along with a "control" group of 147 unreported children, also from the original cohort, matched for gender, income, race, and sex. The San Diego cohort is comprised of children who were placed in foster care in the first three and one-half years of life because of child maltreatment. At recruitment into LONGSCAN, at age 4, slightly more than half of this sample had returned to the original home while the others were still in foster care. The Baltimore sample was recruited from inner-city pediatric clinics serving low income families. A little over one-third of this sample was diagnosed as having failure-to-thrive in the first two years of life; a second group was comprised of children with mothers who were at risk for HIV. The third "comparison" group was recruited from a pediatric primary care clinic and were without overt risk factors other than poverty. In the Seattle study, the sample consists of children, less than 5 years of age, reported to social services for maltreatment and classified as "moderate" risk for future maltreatment on a local risk assessment instrument (regardless of substantiation status upon investigation).

Study Procedures

Common measures and procedures were developed by the LONGSCAN consortium. Following local Institutional Review Board approval for human subjects' protection, the measures and procedures were implemented across all studies. Mothers, or other primary maternal caretakers, were asked to participate in a 2-hour face-to-face interview that was comprised of a mixture of standard measures and project-developed questions. In addition, each child was tested separately with a developmental screening test. The measures used are described in detail below. Measures were administered in a similar manner in all four studies with common procedures for the training and monitoring of interviewers. Data were entered locally using a common data entry system and were processed and analyzed at the LONGSCAN Coordinating Center at the University of North Carolina. A random 10% of the interviews were re-entered into the data entry system to verify data entry procedures and coding. Cross-checks for invalid or incompatible responses were also conducted.

Definitions and Measures

Social Capital. Social capital was broadly defined as benefits that accrue from social connectedness in communities and families. The following five indicators of social capital were identified and assessed for each child's family. (1) Like Coleman[1], we considered the presence of two "parents" residing within the home as one indicator of social capital. If the maternal respondent (generally biologic mothers, but also including grandmothers, foster mothers, and other surrogate mothers) described a spouse or partner as residing in the home, then "two-parent family" was classified as present. (2) Social support for the primary maternal caretaker was measured using the Affective and Confidante subscales of the Duke-UNC Functional Social Support Questionnaire.[2] Social support was classified as present if the mean value of these seven items was 4 or greater (indicating at least moderate support). (3) The presence of no more than one other child in the home (fewer children representing a potential for greater concentration of parental resources available to each child) was scored as another indicator of social capital. (4) Neighborhood support was based on responses to three items from a 9-item project-developed neighborhood scale. If the maternal respondent gave at least a

"somewhat" affirmative response to questions about the presence of people in the neighborhood who help each other out, watch out for each other's children, and who can be counted on, she was classified as having "neighborhood support." (5) If the maternal respondent indicated that she attended church or religious services at least several times per month during the past year, she was classified as having regular church involvement. An index of social capital was created by assigning one point for the presence of each of the above social capital indicators, such that an individual's Social Capital Index score could range from 0 to 5.

Child well-being. Child well-being was operationalized in this study as the absence of developmental problems, as indicated by the child's score on the Battelle Developmental Screening Test (BDST)[4], and the absence of behavioral problems as indicated by the child's summary scores on the Child Behavior Checklist (CBCL)[5]. To be functioning "well" developmentally, a child needed a BDST Total score of 0 (within one standard deviation of the population mean for age). To be classified as functioning "well" behaviorally, a child's CBCL T-scores on the Total, Externalizing, and Internalizing Problems dimensions had to be ≤ 55, well below T=60 which is the borderline cutpoint for the clinical range. This second criterion was intended to ensure that children scoring near the clinical cutpoint on the measure were not classified as "doing well."

Sociodemographic variables. The data on sociodemographic characteristics of the child and family were collected from the child's primary maternal caretaker at the time of the interview. Thus the data on family income and maternal education describe the characteristics of the current caretaking family. Income was assessed categorically with a response set of eleven levels, each denoting a range of $5000 in anuual income.

Data Analysis

We conducted the analyses using a case-control approach. Cases were those study children classified as "doing well" based on the combined developmental and behavioral criteria; controls were the remaining study children. Other variables that have been theoretically or empirically linked to child well-being, such as sociodemographic factors, parenting attitudes (as measured by the Adult-

Adolescent Parenting Inventory[10]), maternal depression (as measured by the CES-D[11]), and foster care placement, were also considered in order to assess the independent relationship of social capital to child well-being. We contrasted the children "doing well" with those "doing less well" by each of the control variables (using two-sample Wilcoxin rank sum test for continuous variables, chi square test of homogeneity for non-dichotomous categorical variables, and Fisher's exact test for dichotomous categorical variables); by each of the five social capital indicators and by the Social Capital Index dichotomized at ≥ 4 (Fisher's exact test). The variables that were at least marginally associated with child functioning (i.e., significant at $\alpha \leq .10$) were then considered simultaneously with maternal education and the Social Capital Index in a logistic regression model.[12] In order to account for systematic differences in sample selection among the study sites, indicator variables for the sites were included in the regression models. Models including first-order interactions with site were examined but are not presented as the interaction terms were not statistically significant ($p > .05$). Statistical computations were carried out using SAS 6.10 for OS/2.[13]

RESULTS

There were 667 LONGSCAN baseline 2 to 5 year old children included in this study. The mean age of the children was 4.4 years; there were 338 boys and 329 girls. Eighty-seven (13%) children were classified as "doing well" by the combined developmental and behavioral criteria. Table 1 displays the proportion of children "doing well" by site and demographic characteristics. There was no significant difference in child functioning by gender: 14% of the boys and 12% of the girls were "doing well" ($p = .57$). Fourteen percent of the white and African-American children were classified as "doing well," while only 9% of the Hispanic and 6% of the bi-racial children were so classified ($p = .26$). There was a significant difference in child functioning by site with more of the Baltimore and North Carolina children functioning well than those in Seattle and San Diego ($p = .02$).

Table 2 describes the demographic characteristics and maternal mental health and parenting scores for the cases ("doing well") and controls ("doing less well"). Both lower family income ($p = .10$) and child in foster care ($p = .09$) were marginally associated with poorer functioning. The percentage of mothers with depressive symptoms scores above the clinical cutpoint (≥ 16 on the CES-D) was comparable to community norms for the "doing well" group, while the scores for the "doing less well group" were significantly higher (p=.02). Scores on the subscales of the Adult Adolescent Parenting Inventory did not differ across the two groups.

As shown in Table 3, the individual social capital indicators were all positively associated with "doing well" group status, so that the presence of a social capital indicator was associated with a higher odds of functioning well. Although regular church attendance (p=.02) and personal social support (p=.03) were the only indicators to reach a level of significance below .05, presence of neighborhood support was marginally significant (p=.06). The odds ratio of each of these three indicators of social capital was over 1.50, which implies at least a 50% increase in the odds of "doing well" in the presence of that indicator.

A clear "dose-response" relationship was noticed (see Figure) when the percentage of children "doing well" was plotted against the social capital index value. The percentage of children "doing well" markedly increased from 15% for those with an index value of 4 to 39% for those with an index value of 5. When the social capital index was dichotomized (<4 vs 4 or more), the odds ratio for "doing well" was 1.78 (p=.04) for children with 4 or more social capital indicators present as compared to those with fewer than 4 social capital indicators. The dichotomized social capital index was more strongly associated with child functioning than any of the individual components of the index. When examined as an ordinal scale, the distribution of social capital was significantly different between those children "doing well" and those "doing less well" (chi-square test of homogeneity statistic = 15.5, 5 d.f., p=.01).

When child outcome was modelled as a binary variable ("doing well" vs. "doing less well") in a logistic regression model that controlled for foster care placement, maternal depression, family income, maternal education and site differences (see Table 4), the social capital index remained statistically significant (p=.02). The odds ratio of 1.3 for social capital indicates that in this sample, the addition of any one social capital indicator increases the odds of "doing well" by 30%; adding any two increases the odds of "doing well" by 66%. Family income (p=.04) and maternal depression (p=.06) show a marginal association with child functioning in the logistic model. Children in families at a given income level, when compared to children in families in the next lower income level, were 12% more likely to be "doing well." Maternal education was not statistically significant (p=.40). Children whose maternal caretaker scored above the clinical cutpoint for depression were 73% more likely to be "doing less well" than those whose maternal caretakers had depression scores in the normal range (p=.06). Foster care placement was also highly associated with "doing less well" (p=.02).

COMMENT

Even though the children in this study were recruited into LONGSCAN because of their at-risk status, it is still surprising that so few of them (13%) can be classified as free from developmental or behavioral problems at such a young age. Sameroff et al. have demonstrated that the accumulation of risk jeopardizes a child's development--particularly when few compensatory factors are present to counteract the negative exposures.[14] In this study, we have investigated the extent to which variables conferring social capital might exert a protective influence. Just as Sameroff's study showed that multiple risk factors must be present before a negative impact in child development can be detected, the results of our study show that the likelihood of doing well increases when multiple protective factors are present.

The children from the Seattle sample who were selected because of a maltreatment report to the Department of Social and Health Services and the children from San Diego who had been placed in foster care at a young age showed poorer levels of functioning than those from North Carolina with one-third of the sample reported for maltreatment and those from Baltimore selected without reference to social service reports. While maltreatment status and the extent of social service involvement captures some of the individual study variation, there are other possible explanations for individual site differences in child well-being. Because many of the children in San Diego were in unrelated foster care homes, the data gathered on social capital, demographic characteristics and maternal characteristics may describe a relatively new caretaking environment for these children. For foster children, the association between their well-being and their caretaker's social capital will necessarily be confounded by issues related to residential instability and perceptions of impermanent relationships. The importance of social capital is highlighted in the regression model where the index emerges as an important predictor of child well-being even after taking site differences, foster care placement, family income, and maternal depression into account.

Social capital is a relatively new theoretical construct that has been variably defined in the few studies that have investigated its importance in child development.[3,5] Accurate measurement of this multidimensional variable that can include any number of factors ranging from features of household composition and aspects of family relationships to community support and affiliation is challenging. Like others who have investigated social capital, we did not plan our study design or instrumentation with measurement of this construct in mind. Rather, we extracted from our dataset the social capital variables that others have investigated or that seemed theoretically pertinent. The indicators that best discriminated between levels of child functioning were the most direct measures of social capital—church affiliation, perception of personal social support, and support within the neighborhood. The other two variables tested, two-parent family and fewer siblings, are crude indicators of social capital because they only suggest that a child will receive a greater allocation of social resources within the family. Because we defined two-parent family rather loosely and because many of the children in this study have complicated residential circumstances, these indicators may have had diminished power in this study. As we continue to follow these families we will attempt to sort out the dimensions of family social capital, as well as take a look at the perceived social support and organizational affiliation of the children themselves. Further study of how individual indicators of social capital exert their influence is also warranted.

The first studies on social capital examined its impact on completion of high school. Our findings suggest that social capital may have an impact on children's well-being as early as the pre-school years. In these years it appears to be the parents' social capital that confers benefits on their offspring, just as children benefit from their parents' financial and human capital. Social capital may be most crucial for families who have fewer financial and educational resources. In fact, earlier studies of high risk neighborhoods and high risk families[15] have noted that troubled families appear to be more strongly influenced by the neighborhood context than "successful families". A recent investigation by Korbin and Coulton[16] that focuses on children and their neighborhoods concludes that not all poor neighborhoods are alike. The features that characterize the neighborhoods where better functioning families reside are features of social capital: community investment, trust and organizational affiliation.

There is a concern that social capital is eroding in this country – across social classes and income levels – with detrimental effects not only on children, families, and neighborhoods, but on the fabric of our democratic political structure.[2] We need to focus on the ways in which public policy and service interventions promote or jeopardize the formation of social capital. For example, the consolidation and centralization of community institutions such as schools, country stores or corner markets, post offices, and other services have perhaps provided for more efficient operations, but have diminished the formation of community connections. Our findings suggest that those interested in the healthy development of children, particularly those children most at risk for poor developmental outcomes, must search for new and creative ways of supporting interpersonal relationships and strengthening the communities in which families carry out the daily activities of their lives.

SUBJECT: Next Child Welfare Chat Session

Carol,

I'm in the process of inviting folks to our next chat session. The focus of the session, per discussions with you and Jeremy, will be system reform. We hope to discuss how current payment schemes affect the quality of foster care and the outcomes. We also hope to talk about the feasibility of measuring performance and outcomes.

Laurie is fine.
For this discussion, would you object to inviting Laurie Rankin, Executive Vice President, Blatner Associates, a private, for-profit health and human services consulting firm? She is doing some innovative work on designing privatized managed human serves in child welfare. According to her, her approach embraces the best of managed care principles with the delivery of human services.

I think her perspective would be interesting and could spark some thoughtful discussion about innovations in child welfare.

I'm also planning on inviting Don Schmid, Director of Children and Family Services, North Dakota, unless ~~there is~~ a reason I shouldn't. (I don't know him, be he's been recommended as a good person on this stuff.)

As long as diff. sources have rec'd him I'd say it's ok. Is N.D. involved in any of the foundation projects?
