Administration shortage at U. Nebraska leads to distance education program (University Wire)

(Daily Nebraskan) (U-WIRE) LINCOLN, Neb. -- Because of an increased demand for administrators in Nebraska's school system, the Division of Continuing Studies at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln has implemented a statewide distance education program.

The program is the first of its kind at UNL and will allow educators with a master's degree in the K-12 school system to obtain a doctorate in education within three years.

The doctorate in education program begins next August and will offer specialized degrees in curriculum and instruction and education administration, said Norma Patterson, program specialist for the Department of Academic Telecommunications.

Educators enrolled in the distance education program will take two classes a semester for six semesters.

Through the use of satellite and Internet instruction in centers around the state, students will be able to complete most of their degrees at or near their homes.

The only on-campus requirement will be two five-week summer sessions. Students will take one session each summer.

CD-ROMs and e-mail will also be used for instruction, Patterson said, depending on each instructor's teaching style.

Patterson said the state is in need of administrators now more than ever.

According to a study by the Nebraska Council of School Administrators and the Nebraska Association of School Boards, 60 percent of school administrators in Nebraska will retire within the next 10 years.

According to the Web site for the Department of Academic Telecommunications, www.unl.edu/conted/telecom/workshop/index.html, people learn more when a variety of instructional tools are used.

A combination of multimedia such as television, the Internet and satellite streaming creates a "richer, more diverse learning experience for students," the Web site said.

Patterson said interested students should contact the Division of Continuing Studies' academic telecommunications office before the middle of January, and staff there will help qualified students enroll in the program.

People in charge of the distance education program hope to meet with all enrolled students in February for a short orientation, Patterson said.

Similar regional programs have been offered at UNL since 1993.

The first program originated in western Nebraska because there was a need for more administrators in education there.

Since then, Patterson said, there have been cohorts in Scottsbluff, eastern Nebraska and the Norfolk/Grand Island area.

"This is the fourth cohort that's been started," Patterson said. "Now is timely. Now more than ever we need new leaders coming up."

Copyright questions plague Iowa State U. instructors (University Wire)

(Iowa State Daily) (U-WIRE) AMES, Iowa -- With increasing technology enabling students to get class notes off the World Wide Web and note-taking services available, Iowa State University faculty have mixed opinions on whether the notes help students understand material or deter them from coming to class.

Barbara Mack, associate professor of journalism and mass communication, explained that there are several lawsuits currently going on to determine the fate of intellectual copyright, or if a professor's lectures are his or her own property and cannot be marketed without permission.

Mack, who has notes for two of her journalism classes, JLMC 101 and JLMC 460, available at Notes, 111 Lynn Ave., and at StudentU.com, www.studentu.com, said she doesn't have a problem with those services, as long as they act as a supplement to education instead of a substitute.

Palmer Holden, professor of animal science, doesn't have a problem with students buying notes if it's going to help them learn.

"If a student can go someplace else and get a better set of notes, then I'm all for it," said Holden, who also is the at-large senator for the College of Agriculture in the Faculty Senate.

He added that he isn't too sure about the concept of intellectual property.

"I can see that a professor's lecture notes are his property, but what he says in class and what a student takes notes on becomes a student's property," he said.

Holden also said downloading notes from the Internet or buying notes from a note-taking service can't compare to actually attending class regularly.

"There's more to a good lecture than notes, that you try and copy the best you can and sell those notes, but it's not the same input that you get from coming to class," he said.

Chris Schilling, associate professor in materials science and engineering, said the debate over online and purchased notes hasn't affected him yet, but he's concerned about the increase in distance-education learning and other technological advancements in education, which he believes are beneficial to students.

"With younger students, the college experience is more than just learning calculus; there's a social side of it, so the face-to-face contact with other students is really important, and the personal interactions with the professor, that's really important."

However, Dorothy Schweider, university professor of history, said she's vehemently against the selling of notes, whether from an online service or from a note-taking service, because she believes it discourages students from coming to class.

"I feel it's very unfair that any person can send someone, or I guess it's hiring a student who's already in the class, to take notes in the class. ... I think this is wrong, and the teachers have no choice in the matter.

"Someone who, from my point of view, is doing no work whatsoever or contributing to the quality of the class, that that person can make a profit off of the labor of someone else, I think that's wrong," she said.

Schweider said she can see the other side of the argument -- that some students use notes just as a helpful supplement rather than a substitute for going to class -- but she's not convinced that note-taking services don't discourage students from attending classes.

She believes that convenience will lead students to "ask that, 'Why do I need to bother [going to class]?' So they don't."

"This argument is that it really helps the students stay away from class," Schweider said.

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

December 2, 1999

Thank you for confirming your attendance at the roundtable discussion on December 8 from 2:00-3:30. Our conversation is intended to be open-ended--a forum for you to bring the issues that you believe to be critical to the success of elementary and middle schools and students. In general, we are interested in your thoughts on issues such as improving and supporting school leadership, turning around failing schools, and the impact of federal initiatives. That said, the conversation is not limited to those issues and we look forward to your perspective on the key challenges to school improvement.

Please arrive at the 17th and G street entrance of the Old Executive Office Building at 1:45 on Wednesday December 8th. The meeting will be in room 100, the First Lady's conference room. I will need you to fax your full name, date of birth, and social security number to 202/456-5581 in order to clear you in to the OEOB. Please call Kendra Brooks at 202/456-5228 with any questions. We look forward to meeting with you.

DRAFT
WASHINGTON

November 15, 1999

Helen Flagg
Orr Elementary School
2200 Minnesota Avenue, SE
Washington, DC 20020

Dear Helen:

Improving public education and enhancing opportunity for all Americans have been at the center of President Clinton's agenda since he took office in January of 1993. Over the past seven years, the President has fought hard to improve America's schools through a focus on standards, accountability, and investment.

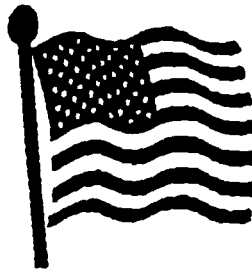

In our efforts to stay abreast of critical challenges facing public education from the perspective of those who face them daily, we convene "roundtable conversations" from time to time with public school teachers, principals and superintendents. These roundtables are informal and off-the-record, and are attended by members of the President's domestic policy staff.

I would like to invite you to participate in a roundtable conversation for elementary and middle school principals at the White House on Wednesday, December 8, 1999 from 2:00 – 3:30 p.m. While the meeting will not have a set agenda, we are interested in discussing the major challenges you are facing as principals, including your thoughts on successful strategies for turning around failing schools and avenues for improving school leadership.

Please let us know if you will be able to attend the roundtable by Monday, November 29. Please call Kendra Brooks at 202 456 5228. Further information will be sent out upon notification of your intent to attend. We look forward to seeing you on December 8th and to your insight into the challenges facing principals and public education.

Sincerely,

Bruce N. Reed
Assistant to the President for Domestic Policy

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

December 2, 1999

Thank you for confirming your attendance at the roundtable discussion on December 8 from 2:00-3:30. Our conversation is intended to be open-ended--a forum for you to bring the issues that you believe to be critical to the success of elementary and middle schools and students. In general, we are interested in your thoughts on issues such as improving and supporting school leadership, turning around failing schools, and the impact of federal initiatives. That said, the conversation is not limited to those issues and we look forward to your perspective on the key challenges to school improvement.

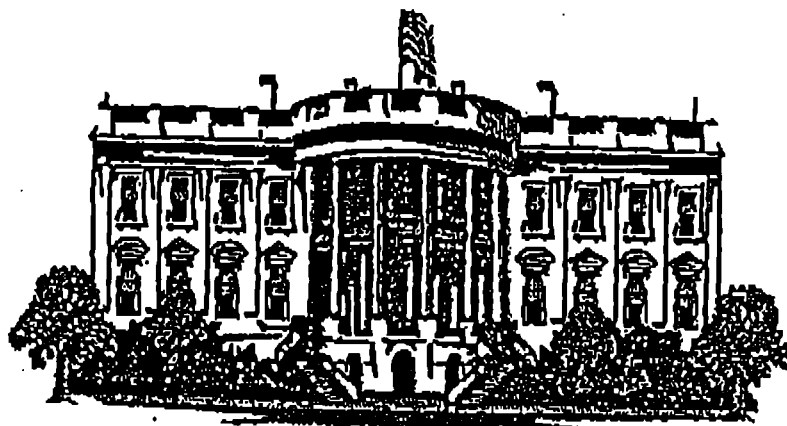

Please arrive at the 17th and G street entrance of the Old Executive Office Building at 1:45 on Wednesday December 8th. The meeting will be in room 100, the First Lady's conference room. I will need you to fax your full name, date of birth, and social security number to 202/456-5581 in order to clear you in to the OEOB. Please call Kendra Brooks at 202/456-5228 with any questions. We look forward to meeting with you.
