

Our young people are this Nation's greatest resource. I write to you today out of deep concern for the future of our youth, a future that is being clouded by the increased use of dangerous, illicit drugs.

As you may know, drug use by junior high, high school, and college-aged young people had declined markedly from the mid-1970s through the mid-1980s. As early as 1989, however, we began to see some evidence that the downward trend had begun to level off, and possibly even reverse. In survey data reporting on the 1991-92 school year, there were already indications that drug use among some age groups, and for certain substances, had begun to increase. More recent data released this month provides further evidence of an alarming broad-based increase in drug use by our young people. And a report on marijuana use just completed by the Office of National Drug Control Policy finds that increasing numbers of young Americans are using marijuana and that today's marijuana is ten times more potent than that of a decade ago.

This problem is truly national in scope. The destructive impact of drug use is being felt in every state, in every town and city, in every community, and in countless families throughout the country. The problem is rooted in behavior, in societal norms, and in the attitudes of young people who, surveys tell us, are becoming increasingly receptive to drug use.

Our 1994 National Drug Control Strategy took this trend data into account, and that is why we have sought to emphasize programs that reduce the demand for drugs and that prevent drug use. We know these programs work. It is clear now that this was the right strategy and that we must maintain that direction.

My Administration recognized the problem and has worked hard to solve it. I fought so hard to include prevention programs in the Crime Bill. The bill includes funding for sound prevention programs that address gang violence and drug-related issues. We are working aggressively to implement these initiatives with the active involvement of all levels of state and local government.

I need your help. I need every governor to become personally involved in the efforts of this nation to reverse the resurgence in drug use by our young people.

I pledge to you that I will keep this issue among my top priorities. You will be hearing me speak frequently on this topic. You will hear other members of my cabinet speak on it. I call upon you to engage in this public dialogue and support efforts to prevent drug abuse among our youth. We must teach our youth and we must convince them, that using marijuana is dangerous, that using LSD is dangerous, and that using any illicit drug is dangerous. We must teach them that drugs aren't "cool." We must teach them that drugs are a dead end.

I call upon you to assist me in getting America's youth to commit their energy to this crusade. We must call upon them to talk to their parents, to their friends, to their brothers and sisters about drugs. It's imperative that they become part of the solution.

As the father of a teenage daughter, I have a personal interest in making sure that young people understand the danger of drugs. Drugs threaten millions of American families and millions of American young people. Together, we can make a difference, and for the sake of our children, we must.

Sincerely,

BILL CLINTON

DRAFT LETTER FOR THE PRESIDENT

Dear Mayor:

Our young people are this Nation's greatest resource. I write to you today out of deep concern for the future of our youth, a future that is being clouded by the increased use of dangerous, illicit drugs.

As you may know, drug use by junior high, high school, and college-aged young people had declined markedly from the mid-1970s through the mid-1980s. As early as 1989, however, we began to see some evidence that the downward trend had begun to level off, and possibly even reverse. In survey data reporting on the 1991-92 school year, there were already indications that drug use among some age groups, and for certain substances, had begun to increase. More recent data released this month provides further evidence of an alarming broad-based increase in drug use by our young people. And a report on marijuana use just completed by the Office of National Drug Control Policy finds that increasing numbers of young Americans are using marijuana, and that today's marijuana is ten times more potent than that of a decade ago.

This problem is truly national in scope. The destructive impact of drug use is being felt in every State, in every town and city, in every community -- and in countless families -- throughout the country. The problem is rooted in behavior, in societal norms, and in the attitudes of young people toward drugs, attitudes that surveys tell us are becoming increasingly receptive to drug use.

Our 1994 National Drug Control Strategy took this trend data into account, and that is why we have sought to emphasize programs that reduce the demand for drugs, and that prevent drug use. We know these programs work. It is clear now that this was the right strategy, and that we've got to maintain that direction.

This administration not only recognized the problem - but we took on the challenge - that is why I fought so hard to include prevention programs in the Crime Bill. The act includes funding for sound prevention programs which address gang, violence and drug-related issues. We are working aggressively to implement these initiatives with the active involvement of all levels of State and local government.

I need your help. I need every mayor to become personally involved in the efforts of this nation to reverse the resurgence in drug use by our young people.

I pledge to you that I will keep this issue at the top of my administration's domestic agenda. You will be hearing me speak frequently on this topic. You will hear other members of my cabinet speak on it. I call upon you to engage in this public dialogue and support efforts to prevent drug abuse among our youth. We must teach our youth, we must convince them, that using marijuana is dangerous, that using LSD is dangerous, and that using any illicit drug is dangerous. We must teach them that drugs aren't "cool." We must teach them that drugs are a dead end.

I call upon you to assist me in getting America's youth to commit their energy to this crusade. We must call upon them to talk to their parents, to their friends, to their brothers and sisters about drugs. It's imperative that they become part of the solution.

As the father of a teenage daughter, I have a very immediate and very personal interest in doing all I can to persuade our young people to avoid drugs. Drugs threaten my family, and my child, just as they threaten millions of American families and millions of American young people. Together, we can make a difference, and for the sake of our children, we must.

Sincerely,

William J. Clinton

Subject:

Request of President to Lee Brown

Yesterday on the return flight from New Mexico, the President and Dr. Brown reviewed a number of topics related to the status of the Office of National Drug Control Policy efforts in addressing drug efforts.

The President requested that Dr. Brown draft a letter from the President to several groups: Governors, U.S. Conference of Mayors, League of Cities, and County officials. The purpose of the letter is to raise the awareness of these groups to the issue of drug data trends and to call upon them to assist the President in the effort to prevent drug abuse.

Attached are drafts/samples of the letters.

DRAFT LETTER FOR THE PRESIDENT

Dear Mayor:

Our young people are this Nation's greatest resource. I write to you today out of deep concern for the future of our youth, a future that is being clouded by the increased use of dangerous, illicit drugs.

As you may know, drug use by junior high, high school, and college-aged young people had declined markedly from the mid-1970s through the mid-1980s. As early as 1989, however, we began to see some evidence that the downward trend had begun to level off, and possibly even reverse. In survey data reporting on the 1991-92 school year, there were already indications that drug use among some age groups, and for certain substances, had begun to increase. More recent data released this month provides further evidence of an alarming broad-based increase in drug use by our young people. And a report on marijuana use just completed by the Office of National Drug Control Policy finds that increasing numbers of young Americans are using marijuana, and that today's marijuana is ten times more potent than that of a decade ago.

This problem is truly national in scope. The destructive impact of drug use is being felt in every State, in every town and city, in every community -- and in countless families -- throughout the country. The problem is rooted in behavior, in societal norms, and in the attitudes of young people toward drugs, attitudes that surveys tell us are becoming increasingly receptive to drug use.

Our 1994 National Drug Control Strategy took this trend data into account, and that is why we have sought to emphasize programs that reduce the demand for drugs, and that prevent drug use. We know these programs work. It is clear now that this was the right strategy, and that we've got to maintain that direction.

This administration not only recognized the problem - but we took on the challenge - that is why I fought so hard to include prevention programs in the Crime Bill. The act includes funding for sound prevention programs which address gang, violence and drug-related issues. We are working aggressively to implement these initiatives with the active involvement of all levels of State and local government.

I need your help. I need every mayor to become personally involved in the efforts of this nation to reverse the resurgence in drug use by our young people.

I pledge to you that I will keep this issue at the top of my administration's domestic agenda. You will be hearing me speak frequently on this topic. You will hear other members of my cabinet speak on it. I call upon you to engage in this public dialogue and support efforts to prevent drug abuse among our youth. We must teach our youth, we must convince them, that using marijuana is dangerous, that using LSD is dangerous, and that using any illicit drug is dangerous. We must teach them that drugs aren't "cool." We must teach them that drugs are a dead end.

I call upon you to assist me in getting America's youth to commit their energy to this crusade. We must call upon them to talk to their parents, to their friends, to their brothers and sisters about drugs. It's imperative that they become part of the solution.

As the father of a teenage daughter, I have a very immediate and very personal interest in doing all I can to persuade our young people to avoid drugs. Drugs threaten my family, and my child, just as they threaten millions of American families and millions of American young people. Together, we can make a difference, and for the sake of our children, we must.

Sincerely,

William J. Clinton

DRAFT LETTER FOR THE PRESIDENT

Dear Governor:

Our young people are this Nation's greatest resource. I write to you today out of deep concern for the future of our youth, a future that is being clouded by the increased use of dangerous, illicit drugs.

As you may know, drug use by junior high, high school, and college-aged young people had declined markedly from the mid-1970s through the mid-1980s. As early as 1989, however, we began to see some evidence that the downward trend had begun to level off, and possibly even reverse. In survey data reporting on the 1991-92 school year, there were already indications that drug use among some age groups, and for certain substances, had begun to increase. More recent data released this month provides further evidence of an alarming broad-based increase in drug use by our young people. And a report on marijuana use just completed by the Office of National Drug Control Policy finds that increasing numbers of young Americans are using marijuana, and that today's marijuana is ten times more potent than that of a decade ago.
