CRIME BILL

BILL NO.: S. 1607

AMENDMENT NO.: 11

TITLE: "Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1993"

SUBJECT: Feinstein amendment (to the Levin amendment No. 1151—Vote No. 365) which makes it unlawful to manufacture, transfer, or possess a semiautomatic assault weapon, replica or duplicate of any caliber after the date of enactment or to transfer or possess a large capacity ammunition feeding device; does not apply to any firearm replica or duplicate of a firearm that is manually operated by bolt, pump lever or slide, is unserviceable, or is a semiautomatic rifle or shotgun that cannot accept more than five rounds; doubles the penalty to ten years for use of a banned gun in a violent crime or drug trafficking, and imposes a five year and/or $5000 penalty for other violations under this act; requires the serial number of any banned weapon or magazine manufactured after the date of enactment to clearly show the date of manufacture; bans semiautomatic assault pistols, or rifles with detachable magazines and two or more specified characteristics; and requires the Attorney General to study and report to Congress on the effectiveness of the ban and the impact on violent and drug trafficking crime.

S. 1607: Vote Nos. 350-358, 360-365, 375-379.

United States Senate

WASHINGTON, DC 20510

August 23, 1994

The Honorable Robert J. Dole
 Republican Leader
 United States Senate
 Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Bob:

As you know, we are deeply concerned about the escalation of violent crime in our country. We want to pass a tough crime bill, believing that strong federal legislation can make a real difference in the lives of all Americans.

Unfortunately, in its current form, the conference report is seriously deficient in a number of important areas. The conference report, for example, still earmarks billions of dollars for wasteful social programs. It also fails to include a number of important tough-on-crime proposals adopted by the Senate last November.

Bob, we are writing to urge you to initiate negotiations immediately with the Administration and with the Democratic Leadership of the Senate. Unless most of our concerns are resolved, we will support you and vote against the motion to waive the budget point-of-order.

The American people deserve the toughest crime bill possible. We should not lose this opportunity to fix what is wrong with the conference report and make the crime bill even stronger.

Sincerely,

Jim Walsh

351. S 1607. Omnibus Crime/Hate Crimes. Feinstein, D-Calif., amendment to allow enhanced penalties for hate crimes. Adopted 95-4: R 41-3; D 54-1 (ND 40-1, SD 14-0), Nov. 4, 1993. (Story, p. 3047)

352. S 1607. Omnibus Crime/Additional Funds. Byrd, D-

W.Va., amendment to provide additional funds beyond those in the underlying bill, including $3.72 billion for 40,000 additional state and local law enforcement personnel for a total of 100,000 new officers; $3 billion for the construction and operation of regional prisons; $1 billion for the construction of jails, boot camps and other minimum-security facilities; $500 million for the construction of violent juvenile offender facilities; and $1.8 billion to combat violence against women. To fund the provisions, the amendment would create a Violent Crime Reduction Trust Fund of $22.3 billion over five years by fully implementing the reductions in federal employment proposed in the National Performance Review. Adopted 94-4: R 41-1; D 53-3 (ND 40-2, SD 13-1), Nov. 4, 1993. (Story, p. 3047) many persons to commit crimes of violence, to use confusing procedures to their own advantage, and then to have the door open to them to return to the society which they victimized," he said.

Hinckley Verdict Prompts Outrage

The response on Capitol Hill reflected widespread public outrage at the verdict in the Hinckley case, which grew out of the March 30, 1981, assassination attempt at the Washington Hilton Hotel. (1981 Almanac p. 6)

Following the verdict, the 27-year-old defendant was committed to St. Elizabeths Hospital in the District of Columbia for a minimum of 50 days to undergo additional psychiatric evaluations. Both his family and his attorneys said they would not seek his release until convinced he was no longer a danger to himself or others.

The verdict came after the presiding judge told a jury of seven women and five men that it could only convict Hinckley if the prosecution had proved "beyond a reasonable doubt" that Hinckley was not suffering from a mental disease or defect, or that he nonetheless had substantial capacity both to conform his conduct to the requirements of the law and to appreciate the wrongfulness of his conduct.

The jury, confronted with days of sharply conflicting testimony from defense and prosecution psychiatrists, found itself unable to dismiss all doubts about Hinckley's sanity.

On June 24, just three days after the verdict, a Senate Judiciary subcommittee summoned five members of the Hinckley jury to testify about the verdict and the insanity law. All five jurors testified that they believed Hinckley had some type of mental disability they could not ignore. "We had that mental problem to deal with," said Maryland T. Copelin. "We just couldn't shut that out."

The Focus for Change

The legislative proposals focused on three main issues — redefining legal insanity, creating a new verdict for someone found to be guilty but mentally ill, and shifting the burden of proof on the question of insanity.

According to the American Bar Association (ABA), a majority of states and the federal courts required the prosecution to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was sane at the time of the crime. A "respectable minority," the ABA said, put the burden of proof on the defendant to show by "a preponderance of the evidence" that he was insane.

Idaho and Montana abolished the insanity defense. Five states had a "guilty but mentally ill" verdict: Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, Georgia and New Mexico.

The ABA specialist said that a major concern with some of these state laws was that a person adjudged guilty but mentally ill had no right to treatment. Instead, many of those convicted were sent directly to prison with no medical help.

The "guilty but mentally ill" verdict was a feature in some bills introduced in Congress. The judge would sentence the defendant and determine whether treatment was needed. If so, the defendant would be placed in an institution until found to be well. At that time, he would serve out the rest of his sentence in prison.

Another proposal, which was part of an omnibus crime bill (S 2572), would have replaced the current insanity definition with a new verdict of "not guilty only by reason of insanity." A defendant would have to prove that, because of a mental disease or defect, he did not have the requisite state of mind — such as intent — to commit the crime with which he was charged. (S 2572, p. 415)

Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, a sponsor of the bill, said this would apply to someone who thought, for example, that when he shot a person, he was shooting a cabbage.

If a jury returned this verdict, the defendant would be confined in an appropriate mental institution until a judge determined by a preponderance of the evidence that he had recovered.

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., sponsored another proposal (S 2658) that would have required the defendant to prove by clear and convincing evidence that he was insane.

No Action Taken

The provision revising the insanity defense was deleted from S 2572, the omnibus anti-crime package, July 1 under an unusual time agreement worked out by Senate leaders.

The Reagan administration had supported the insanity provision of S 2572 and tried to see that it was kept in the bill. On July 1, the day the time agreement was worked out, Attorney General Smith wrote a letter to Baker backing the provision.

"In short, we believe that reform of the insanity defense is urgently needed to restore public confidence in the criminal justice system," Smith wrote, adding that the S 2572 proposal was a "well thought out and considered approach — not an emotional response to the public furor" over the Hinckley decision.

Senate Judiciary Chairman Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., read Smith's letter to colleagues, but Howell Heflin, D-Ala., a former state Supreme Court chief justice, insisted that the insanity provision be withdrawn. Otherwise, he said, he would object to the bill coming up. Heflin said the insanity issue needed more study.

Thurmond finally agreed to delete the provision. No further action was taken on the insanity defense during the 97th Congress.

Reagan Vetoes Package of Anti-Crime Bills

President Reagan Jan. 14, 1983, vetoed a package of anti-crime legislation (HR 3963) that had been cleared by Congress Dec. 20. (Veto message, p. 28-E)

The anti-crime measure, which incorporated a number of bills approved earlier by one chamber or the other, was put together in House-Senate staff negotiations in the closing days of the 97th Congress.

Final action came Dec. 20 when the Senate, by voice vote, accepted the House package. The House had adopted the measure under suspension of the rules earlier in the day by a 271-27 vote. (Vote 456, p. 134-H)

HR 3963 began in 1981 as a simple three-year reauthorization of a program to provide drug abuse monitoring and treatment to convicted federal offenders released on parole or probation. (1981 Almanac p. 437)

Appended to it in December 1982 was an amendment containing a new grant program to help states combat crime; increased fines for drug traffickers and provisions allowing forfeiture of property related to illegal drug enterprises; new penalties for tampering with drugs, food or other consumer products; a "career criminal" provision that would allow certain repeat offenders to be tried in federal court; and a new federal drug enforcement office to direct national and international drug enforcement operations.

The Reagan Veto

Reagan vetoed HR 3963 primarily because of objections from administration officials to the new centralized anti-drug office the bill would have created. Informally termed a "drug czar," the new position was to be a Cabinet-level office with authority over existing agencies involved in anti-drug law enforcement.

A senior Justice Department official told reporters Jan. 14, 1983, that the Justice, State and Treasury departments all opposed the proposed new drug office because they feared it "had a tremendous potential for disruption" of existing law enforcement projects. The official called the drug czar proposal "a band-aid, a gimmick" that would "create more paperwork, not arrests."

He said a drug czar would mean "sweeping changes in the executive branch." Such an office would "undermine the authority of Cabinet officers and alter the chain of command" within existing agencies, such as the FBI and Drug Enforcement Administration, the Justice official said.

The official said Justice also opposed the provision in HR 3963 that would have allowed federal prosecution of repeat state offenders under specified circumstances. He said the department opposed language giving local prosecutors power to veto a decision by federal prosecutors to take jurisdiction over a case. He said the bill had "grave constitutional" problems and raised "practical concerns."

The administration supported the bill's other provisions, the official said, but concerns about the drug czar and the "career criminal" provisions prevailed.

Half a Loaf

During House floor debate Dec. 20, William J. Hughes, D-N.J., chief sponsor of the House bill and chairman of the House Judiciary Crime Subcommittee, praised HR 3963 as a useful anti-crime package. But Thomas N. Kindness, R-Ohio, complained that the legislation amounted to "a pitiful dribble of legislation."

Missing from the bill were two controversial proposals — bail reform, to allow expanded pretrial detention, and a completely new federal sentencing scheme that set standardized fines and prison terms and virtually abolished parole. These had been included in an omnibus crime package (S 2572) containing remnants of a criminal code revision that was approved by the Senate Sept. 30 but never passed by the House. (Criminal code, p. 415)

As approved by Congress, HR 3963 included the following major elements:

Drug-Dependent Offenders

The program reauthorized by the original version of HR 3963 provided for the examination of all convicted federal offenders released on parole or given probation to determine if they were drug users.

Drug abuse treatment and monitoring, largely through urinalysis, was to be provided to help defendants end their drug dependence.

The House Judiciary Committee reported the original version Oct. 21, 1981 (H Rept 97-283) and the full House passed it Oct. 26, 1981.

The bill as approved in 1982 authorized $4.5 million for fiscal 1983, $5.5 million for fiscal 1984 and $6.5 million for fiscal 1985.

Drug Offense Penalties

Title I of the amendment to HR 3963 was essentially the drug penalty measure (HR 7140 — H Rept 97-883) reported Sept. 28 by the House Judiciary Committee and passed by the House the same day. The measure passed the Senate with amendments Oct. 1, and then was rolled into HR 3963.

This title included the following provisions:

- Increased substantially the penalties for manufacturing and trafficking in drugs, and for sales of drugs. For example, the maximum fine for manufacturing and trafficking in amphetamines was increased from $15,000 to $250,000 for individuals, and $1 million if an association was involved. The maximum fines for manufacturing and trafficking in heroin or cocaine were increased from $25,000 to $250,000, with a maximum $1 million fine if more than one individual or an organization was involved.

- Created a new, alternative fine allowing a judge, instead of assessing fixed penalties, to fine offenders up to twice their gross profits or proceeds.

- Provided for forfeiture to the government of property in all felony drug cases. The bill authorized courts to restrain the transfer of property that might be subject to forfeiture and to order the seizure of property to ensure its availability for a forfeiture proceeding. The Senate had passed a broader forfeiture bill (S 2320 — S Rept 97-520), covering cases other than those involving drugs. But it accepted the House version.

- Established a $10 million fund from forfeiture proceeds in fiscal 1984 and 1985 to be used for enforcement of federal drug laws.

- Expanded the authority of U.S. Customs officials, in civil proceedings, to dispose of property related to drug operations.

Justice Assistance Act

Title II of the amendment to HR 3963 created a new anti-crime assistance program for states and local communities, a successor to the now-defunct Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. The House and Senate had passed differing versions of a bill (HR 4481) to provide grants for fiscal 1983 and 1984.

HR 4481 was reported Oct. 26, 1981, by the House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 97-293) and passed Feb. 10, 1982. (1981 Almanac p. 433)

The Senate passed HR 4481 on Dec. 9 after amending it to incorporate provisions of S 2411, reported Sept. 24 by the Senate Judiciary Committee (S Rept 97-587)

This title of HR 3963 contained the following provisions:

- Created an Office of Justice Assistance to administer a program of about $130 million in block grants to states. Funds would be available for proven programs such as drug treatment projects, undercover operations to recover stolen property and programs within prosecutors' offices to provide speedy trials of repeat offenders.

- Created a discretionary grant program authorized at about $35 million for programs that train judges, prosecutors, and other law enforcement officials and provide technical assistance for criminal court systems.

- Required states and local communities to match any federal grant.

- Based the amount of block grants on population.

- Provided that the minimum block grant for any state would be $250,000, which the state would then parcel out for projects specified under the law.

- Provided grants for law enforcement emergencies.

- Authorized funding for fiscal 1983 and fiscal 1984 for two anti-crime research agencies, the Bureau of Justice Statistics and the National Institute of Justice, at an annual $25 million each, their current funding level.

- Authorized creation of an assistant attorney general for justice assistance who would oversee the Office of Justice Assistance, the Bureau of Justice Statistics and the National Institute of Justice.

Other Anti-Crime Measures

Title III of the amendment to HR 3963 included four different measures.

Anti-Tampering Provisions

The first part of Title III was a revision of a Senate bill (S 3048) to make tampering with food and drug products a federal felony. The measure was largely a response to the seven deaths that occurred in October when unsuspecting consumers ingested Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules that had been laced with cyanide.

S 3048 was reported Dec. 8 by the Senate Judiciary Committee, but no written report was filed. It was passed Dec. 17.

This section included the following provisions:

- Made it a felony for anyone, with an intent to cause bodily harm, to tamper with drugs, food, cosmetics or other devices and thereby cause bodily injury or death.

- Provided for a fine of up to $20,000, a prison term of up to five years, or both, for attempted tampering.

- Provided a fine of up to $100,000, life in prison, or both, of death or serious bodily harm resulted.

- Provided a fine of up to $100,000, up to 20 years in prison, or both, in any other case of actual tampering.

The Senate bill had included penalties for cases involving an intent to damage the reputation of another's business. This was stricken from the final version.

Protecting Intelligence Officers

Part two of Title III included elements of a Senate bill (S 2552) that made it a federal crime to assault or murder certain designated intelligence officials. The bill was reported Sept. 23 (S Rept 97-575) by the Judiciary Committee and passed by the Senate Oct. 1.

The version adopted in the conference report covered fewer intelligence personnel than the original Senate bill. Currently, an attack on an intelligence official was covered by the law of the state in which the offense occurred.

Career Criminals

Part three of Title III was a bill (S 1688 — S Rept 97-585) passed by the Senate Sept. 30 giving federal courts jurisdiction to try "career criminals" — repeat offenders — who used a firearm in burglaries or robberies, provided they had at least two prior convictions for such crimes.

This section was one of two that prompted Reagan's veto. Its major provisions included the following:

- Gave the federal courts authority to handle criminal cases involving state offenses if the defendant used a firearm to commit a crime and had been convicted at least twice before in state court of robbery, burglary, or an attempt or conspiracy to commit such an offense.

- Set a mandatory minimum 15-year prison term, a fine of $10,000, or both, for those convicted under the new law. No parole or probation would be allowed.

- Required a federal prosecutor to obtain consent from the local prosecuting authority or from the U.S. attorney general or his top assistants. These officials had to determine there was a sufficient federal interest to take the case and that a federal prosecution would "likely result in a significantly faster trial or lengthier sentence."

- Gave local prosecutors veto authority over a federal request to take a case authorized under the legislation.

New Federal Drug Office

The last section of Title III established a new Cabinet-level office to direct and coordinate national and international operations for combating drug trafficking. This provision, which drew heated objections from departments already involved in drug enforcement, was part of S 2572, passed Sept. 30 by the Senate.

Under HR 3963, the director of the proposed Office of National and International Drug Operations and Policy would have been appointed by the president and confirmed by the Senate. This "drug czar" would have had authority to order other Cabinet officials, including the attorney general, to follow his priorities. ■ territory and the legitimate security concerns of the parties involved.

The proof is in the five-year period of transition which would begin after free elections for a self-governing Palestinian authority to prove to the Palestinians that they could run their own affairs, and that such Palestinian autonomy poses no threat to Israel's security. The United States will not support the use of any additional land for the purpose of settlement during the transitional period. Indeed, the immediate adoption of a settlement freeze by Israel, more than any other action, could create the confidence needed for wider participation in these talks. Further settlement activity is in no way necessary for the security of Israel and only diminishes the confidence of the Arabs that a final outcome can be freely and fairly negotiated.

I want to make the American position clearly understood. The purpose of this transitional period is the peaceful and orderly transfer of authority from Israel to the Palestinian inhabitants of the West Bank and Gaza. At the same time, such a transfer must not interfere with Israel's security requirements.

Beyond the transition period, as we look to the future of the West Bank and Gaza, it is clear to me that peace cannot be achieved by the formation of an independent Palestinian state in those territories, nor is it achievable on the basis of Israeli sovereignty or permanent control over the West Bank and Gaza. So the United States will not support the establishment of an independent Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza. And we will not support annexation or permanent control by Israel.

There is, however, another way to peace. The final status of these lands must, of course, be reached through the give and take of negotiations. But it is the firm view of the United States that self-government by the Palestinians of the West Bank and Gaza in association with Jordan offers the best chance for a durable, just, and lasting peace. We base our approach squarely on the principle that the Arab-Israeli conflict should be resolved through negotiations involving an exchange of territory for peace.

This exchange is enshrined in United Nations Security Council Resolution 242, which is, in turn, incorporated in all its parts in the Camp David Agreement. U.N. Resolution 242 remains wholly valid as the foundation stone of America's Middle East peace effort. It is the United States' position that, in return for peace, the withdrawal provision of Resolution 242 applies to all fronts, including the West Bank and Gaza. When the border is negotiated between Jordan and Israel, our view on the extent to which Israel should be asked to give up territory will be heavily affected by the extent of true peace and normalization, and the security arrangement offered in return.

Finally, we remain convinced that Jerusalem must remain undivided. But its final status should be decided through negotiation. In the course of the negotiations to come, the United States will support positions that seem to us fair and reasonable compromises and likely to promote a sound agreement. We will also put forward our own detailed proposals when we believe that they can be helpful. And, make no mistake, the United States will oppose any proposal from any party and at any point in the negotiating process that threatens the security of Israel. America's commitment to the security of Israel is ironclad. And I might add, so is mine.

During the past few days, our Ambassadors in Israel, Egypt, Jordan, and Saudi Arabia have presented to their host governments the proposals, in full detail, that I have outlined here today. Now, I am convinced that these proposals can bring justice, bring security, and bring durability to an Arab-Israeli peace. The United States will stand by these principles with total dedication. They are fully consistent with Israel's security requirements and the aspirations of the Palestinians. We will work hard to broaden participation at the peace table as envisaged by the Camp David Accords. And I fervently hope that the Palestinians and Jordan, with the support of their Arab colleagues, will accept this opportunity.

Tragic turmoil in the Middle East runs back to the dawn of history. In our modern day, conflict after conflict has taken its brutal toll there. In an age of nuclear challenge and economic interdependence, such conflicts are a threat to all the people of the world, not just the Middle East itself. It is time for us all — in the Middle East and around the world — to call a halt to conflict, hatred and prejudice. It's time for us all to launch a common effort for reconstruction, peace and progress.

It has often been said — and regrettably too often been true — that the story of the search for peace and justice in the Middle East is a tragedy of opportunities missed. In the aftermath of the settlement in Lebanon, we now face an opportunity for a broader peace. This time we must not let it slip from our grasp. We must look beyond the difficulties and obstacles of the present and move with a fairness and resolve toward a brighter future. We owe it to ourselves — and to posterity — to do no less. For if we miss this chance to make a fresh start, we may look back on this moment from some later vantage point and realize how much that failure cost us all.

These, then, are the principles upon which American policy toward the Arab-Israeli conflict will be based. I have made a personal commitment to see that they endure and, God willing, that they will come to be seen by all reasonable, compassionate people as fair, achievable, and in the interests of all who wish to see peace in the Middle East. Tonight, on the eve of what can be a dawning of new hope for the people of the troubled Middle East — and for all the world's people who dream of a just and peaceful future — I ask you, my fellow Americans, for your support and your prayers in this great undertaking. Thank you and God bless you.

★ VETO MESSAGE Message on Crime Legislation

Following is the White House text of President Reagan's Sept. 13 message to Congress proposing legislation to reform the criminal justice system.

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

I am herewith transmitting proposed legislation entitled the Criminal Justice Reform Act of 1982. This Act — plus other proposals now pending in Congress — would strengthen society's defenses against the continuing and pervasive menace of crime.

Crime is clearly one of the most serious problems we face today. Crime — and the fear of crime — affect the lives of most Americans. Government's inability to deal effectively with crime diminishes the public's confidence in our system of government as a whole. Last year alone, one out of every three households in the country fell victim to some form of serious crime. By 1981, according to one survey, nearly eight of ten Americans did not believe that our system of law enforcement discouraged people from committing crimes — a fifty percent increase in just the last fifteen years. As the threat of crime has become clearer to all Americans, so too has the need for improving our defenses against crime. As my Attorney General said only a few weeks ago:

"In recent years, through actions by the courts and inaction by Congress, an imbalance has arisen in the scales of justice. The criminal justice system has tilted too decidedly in favor of the rights of the criminal and against the rights of society."

It is time to restore the balance — and to make the law work to protect decent, law-abiding citizens.

To protect the rights of law-abiding citizens, the Administration has previously announced its strong support for a comprehensive law enforcement measure, the Violent Crime and Drug Enforcement Improvements Act of 1982, introduced in the Congress as S. 2572 and H.R. 6497. That important legislative initiative addresses many of our most pressing needs: bail reform, victim-witness protection, strengthened drug penalties, protection of federal officials, sentencing reform, expanded criminal forfeiture, donation of surplus federal property to State and local governments for needed correctional facilities, and a series of miscellaneous improvements in federal criminal laws.

The attached legislative proposal that I am now submitting would reform three additional areas of federal law affecting the criminal justice system. First, it would limit the insanity defense so that only those who did not have the mental state which is an element of their crime would escape responsibility for their acts. Second, the proposal would reform the exclusionary rule to prevent the suppression of evidence seized by an officer acting in the reasonable, good faith belief that his actions complied with law. Although the argument for retaining the exclusionary rule in any form is, at best, tenuous, this proposal eliminates application of the rule in those cases in which it most clearly has no deterrent effect. Finally, the bill would reform federal habeas corpus review of State adjudications to ensure greater deference to full and fair State judicial proceedings and to limit the time within which habeas corpus proceedings may be initiated. Habeas corpus reform would conserve scarce federal and State judicial and prosecutorial resources.

This new proposal and the Violent Crime and Drug Enforcement Improvements Act of 1982 represent a legislative program to protect all our citizens. These are not partisan initiatives. They are far too important to the Nation's well-being. In my view, they provide the basis for a renewed effort against the menace of crime. They will help restore the balance between the forces of law and the forces of lawlessness. I join with all Americans in urging the Congress to give both these legislative proposals its immediate attention and to begin the process of reclaiming our communities from criminals.

Multinational Force to Re-enter Lebanon

Following is the White House text of President Reagan's Sept. 20 announcement to send U.S. Marines back into Lebanon.

THE PRESIDENT: My fellow Americans, the scenes that the whole world witnessed this past weekend were among the most heartrending in the long nightmare of Lebanon's agony. Millions of us have seen pictures of the Palestinian victims of this tragedy. There is little that words can add. But there are actions we can and must take to bring that nightmare to an end.

It is not enough for us to view this as some remote event in which we ourselves are not involved. For our friends in Lebanon and Israel, for our friends in Europe and elsewhere in the Middle East, and for us as Americans, this tragedy, horrible as it is, reminds us of the absolute imperative of bringing peace to that troubled country and region. By working for peace in the Middle East, we serve the cause of world peace, and the future of mankind.

For the criminals who did this deed no punishment is enough to remove the blot of their crime. But for the rest of us, there are things that we can learn and things that we must do. The people of Lebanon must have learned that the cycle of massacre upon massacre must end. Children are not avenged by the murder of other children. Israel must have learned that there is no way it can impose its own solutions on hatreds as deep and bitter as those that produced this tragedy. If it seeks to do so, it will only sink more deeply into the quagmire that looms before it. Those outsiders who have fed the flames of civil war in Lebanon for so many years need to learn that the fire will consume them too if it is not put out. And we must all rededicate ourselves to the cause of peace. I re-emphasize my call for early progress to solve the Palestinian issue and repeat the U.S. proposals which are now even more urgent.

For now is not the time for talk alone. Now is a time for action. To act together to restore peace to Beirut; to help a stable government emerge that can restore peace and independence to all of Lebanon; and to bring a just and lasting resolution to the conflict between Israel and its Arab neighbors, one that satisfies the legitimate rights of the Palestinians who are all too often its victims.

Our basic objectives in Lebanon have not changed, for they are the objectives of the government and the people of Lebanon themselves. First and foremost, we seek the restoration of a strong and stable central government in that country, brought into being by orderly constitutional processes. Lebanon elected a new president two short weeks ago only to see him murdered even before he could assume his office. This week a distressed Lebanon will again be electing a new president. May God grant him safety as well as the wisdom and courage to lead his country into a new and happier era.

The international community has an obligation to assist the government of Lebanon in reasserting authority over all its territory. Foreign forces and armed factions have too long obstructed the legitimate role of the government of Lebanon's security forces. We must pave the way for withdrawal of foreign forces.

The place to begin this task is in Beirut. The Lebanese government must be permitted to restore internal security in its capital. It cannot do this if foreign forces remain in or near Beirut. With this goal in mind, I have consulted with our French and Italian allies. We have agreed to form a new multinational force, similar to the one which served so well last month, with the mission of enabling the Lebanese government to resume full sovereignty over its capital, the essential precondition for extending its control over the entire country.

The Lebanese government, with the support of its people, requested this help. For this multinational force to succeed, it is essential that Israel withdraw from Beirut. With the expected cooperation of all parties, the multinational force will return to Beirut for a limited period of time. Its purpose is not to act as a police force but to make it possible for the lawful authorities of Lebanon to discharge those duties for themselves.

Secretary Shultz, on my behalf, has also reiterated our views to the government of Israel through its Ambassador in Washington. Unless Israel moves quickly and courageously to withdraw, it will find itself ever more deeply involved in problems that are not its own and which it cannot solve.

The participation of American forces in Beirut will again be for a limited period. But I've concluded there is no alternative to their returning to Lebanon if that country is to have a chance to stand on its own feet.

Peace in Beirut is only a first step. Together with the people of Lebanon, we seek the removal of all foreign military forces from that country. The departure of all foreign forces at the request of the Lebanese authorities has been widely endorsed by Arab as well as other states. Israel and Syria have both indicated that they have no territorial ambitions in Lebanon and are prepared to withdraw. It is now urgent that specific arrangements for withdrawal of all foreign forces be agreed upon. This must happen very soon. The legitimate security concerns of neighboring states, including particularly the safety of Israel's northern population, must be provided for. But this is not a difficult task if the political will is there. The Lebanese people must be allowed to chart their own future. They must rely solely on Lebanese armed forces who are willing and able to bring security to their country. They must be allowed to do so, and the sooner the better.

Ambassador Draper, who has been in close consultation with the parties concerned in Lebanon, will remain in the area to work for the full implementation of our proposal. Ambassador Habib will join him, will represent me at the inauguration of the new President of Lebanon and will consult with the leaders in the area. He will return promptly to Washington to report to me.

Early in the summer our government met its responsibility to help resolve a severe crisis and to relieve the Lebanese peo-

HOUSE VOTE (SENATE VOICE VOTE)

456. HR 3963. Contract Services for Drug Dependent Federal Offenders Act Amendment. Hughes, D-N.J., motion to suspend the rules and recede from disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment to provide stiff new penalties for drug trafficking, a new crime aid program for states, a new federal offense to curb tampering with drugs and other consumer products, new protections for U.S. intelligence officials, federal authority to try certain repeat violators of state law, and a new Cabinet-level office to coordinate anti-drug operations. Motion agreed to 271-27: R 113-15; D 158-12 (ND 102-8, SD 56-4), Dec. 20, 1982. A two-thirds majority of those present and voting (199 in this case) is required to suspend the rules.

457. HR 3809. Nuclear Waste Policy Act. Adoption of the rule (H Res 636) providing for consideration of the bill to establish a federal program for the interim storage and eventual permanent disposal of highly radioactive nuclear waste and spent (burned) fuel from civilian nuclear reactors. The rule provided that the bill, as amended by the Senate, would be passed upon adoption of the rule. Adopted 256-32: R 121-6; D 135-26 (ND 81-24, SD 54-2), Dec. 20, 1982. A "yea" was a vote supporting the president's position.

458. HR 7093. Virgin Islands Tax Reduction/Disability Insurance. Adoption of the conference report on the bill to allow the Virgin Islands to reduce taxes on certain investment income earned from sources within the Virgin Islands and paid to individuals in the United States; to provide disability insurance payments and Medicare coverage to individuals appealing their termination from the disability rolls before Oct. 1, 1983, and to make other changes in the disability review process. Adopted 259-0: R 115-0; D 144-0 (ND 102-0, SD 42-0), Dec. 21, 1982.

459. HR 6211. Transportation Assistance Act of 1982. Adoption of the conference report on the bill to authorize $71.3 billion in fiscal 1983-1986 for highway construction and repairs and mass transit, and to increase gasoline and other highway taxes. Adopted 180-87: R 73-46; D 107-41 (ND 85-19, SD 22-22), Dec. 21, 1982. A "yea" was a vote supporting the president's position.

Wilson blamed the ERA's defeat on the seniority system in state legislatures, which she contended gave anti-ERA legislators key political positions. "The seniority system gave power to the unrepresentative few, small-minded men who became our true adversaries in this decade of struggle for equality," she said.

"We will continue to change the political complexion of the legislatures at large. With more feminists in the ring, these men will never again be the ring leaders."

New Effort Begun

Even before ERA was put to rest, an identical constitutional amendment was introduced in the House.

On June 24, six days before the ERA died, Rep. Mario Biaggi, D-N.Y., dropped an identical constitutional amendment (H J Res 529) into the House hopper.

And July 14, two weeks after the ratification deadline passed, another — identically worded — amendment (S J Res 213, H J Res 533) was introduced.

The new Senate amendment had 51 cosponsors, led by Paul E. Tsongas, D-Mass., and Bob Packwood, R-Ore. A two-thirds majority — 67 if all members vote — is required to pass a constitutional amendment.

In the House, where the effort was headed by Democratic Reps. Don Edwards, Calif., Peter W. Rodino Jr., N.J., and Patricia Schroeder, Colo., and Republican Rep. Margaret M. Heckler, Mass., sponsors claimed 205 supporters. This was well short of the two-thirds majority (290) that would be needed if all members voted.

However, no action was taken on the new ERA before the 97th Congress adjourned. Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker, R-Tenn., said shortly after the original version died June 30 that he favored a "cooling off" period before starting the congressional debate all over again. ■

LEAA Goes Out of Business

Fourteen years after its creation, the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA) went quietly out of business April 15, a demise ordered by Attorney General William French Smith but preordained in the final years of the Carter administration.

In its somewhat troubled life, the grant agency dispensed nearly $8 billion to local law enforcement agencies for programs such as improved police equipment, shelters for homeless youth and special local task forces to prosecute "career criminals." In recent years, however, LEAA was criticized for requiring too much red tape in its grant program and for wasting money on Dick Tracy-type gadgetry.

The LEAA's official end came by order of Attorney General Smith, who announced Dec. 30, 1981, that the agency would be out of business by April 15. The agency came to a practical end March 20, when all LEAA personnel either were transferred to related law enforcement divisions or laid off.

Four LEAA programs continued after April 15 but were operated through the Office of Justice Assistance, Research and Statistics (OJARS), the government's umbrella law enforcement assistance agency. They were: a benefit program that paid $50,000 to the survivors of police officers killed in action, a regional organized crime intelligence center, a drug treatment program and a program that helped local police run "sting" operations.

The death knell of the LEAA was sounded in 1979

when Congress, after lengthy skirmishing, passed a bill restructuring the agency and giving supervisory authority to OJARS. Research and statistical work previously done by the LEAA was transferred to the newly created National Institute of Justice and the Bureau of Justice Statistics. (Background, 1978 Almanac p. 370)

The LEAA had not had a separate appropriation since fiscal 1980, and President Carter did not ask for money for the LEAA in his revised fiscal 1981 budget. ■

Employee Claims Settlement

The Senate July 16 cleared for the president a bill (HR 4688 — PL 97-226) increasing from $15,000 to $25,000 the amount the United States can pay in claims settlements to military personnel and civilian government employees.

The measure, which amended the 1964 Military and Civilian Employees Claims Act (PL 88-558), was reported from the House Judiciary Committee March 8 (H Rept 97-452) and passed by the House March 18 under suspension of the rules.

In the Senate, a companion bill (S 1739) was reported from the Judiciary Committee June 24 (S Rept 97-482) and passed July 14, a proceeding that was subsequently vacated in favor of passage of HR 4688. ■

Missing Children Legislation

A bill (HR 6976 — PL 97-292) aimed at allowing the federal government to help locate missing children was cleared for the president Oct. 1.

Final action came when the Senate adopted a conference report on the measure (H Rept 97-911) one day after the House had done so.

As cleared, the bill authorized entry into the FBI's central crime computer of descriptive data about missing children. If state and local officials failed to enter the information, parents or guardians could have the FBI do so.

The legislation also required inclusion in the FBI computer of a clearinghouse file listing descriptions of unidentified bodies that have been found anywhere in the country. Many of these are children.

Background

Every year, according to federal government estimates, some 1.5 to 1.8 million children are missing from their homes. A majority are runaways who eventually are found unharmed.

But at the end of each year, almost 10 percent of the missing children cases remain unsolved.

The FBI's National Crime Information Center (NCIC) was established in 1967 to centralize criminal history records and to maintain a list of stolen property and persons wanted for crimes.

In 1975, the NCIC started a missing persons file, allowing state and local police to enter information about missing persons into the system. But only a small fraction of the children missing from their homes each year were ever reported to the FBI computer.

Sen. Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., chief sponsor of the Senate version of the missing children bill (S 1701), said that a survey of 25 of the nation's 35 largest police departments

Major Crime Package Cleared by Congress

President Reagan Oct. 12 signed into law a sweeping anti-crime package that represented the culmination of an 11-year effort to make major changes in the federal criminal code.

The crime provisions were attached to the fiscal 1985 continuing appropriations resolution (H J Res 648 — PL 98-473) cleared by Congress Oct. 11. (Funding bill, p. 444)

The package was not quite as comprehensive as earlier criminal code reform proposals. But the new law incorporated many major elements of the earlier proposals, and it was the most far-reaching anti-crime measure enacted since the 1968 Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act. (Code reform history, 1979 Almanac p. 363; Safe Streets Act, 1968 Almanac p. 225)

Major Elements

The new law overhauled federal sentencing procedures to reduce the disparity in punishment for defendants who commit similar crimes, and allowed pretrial detention of defendants considered dangerous to the community.

Other provisions prohibited tampering with computers, unauthorized use of credit cards or bank-account access numbers, and trafficking in counterfeit trademarked goods. Still others substantially increased penalties for major drug offenses and gave federal prosecutors new authority to seize the assets and profits of drug traffickers.

In addition, the law re-established a grant program for state anti-crime projects, although one substantially more modest than the defunct Law Enforcement Assistance Administration.

Further, it tightened the legal definition of insanity and made it harder for criminal suspects to employ such a defense successfully. This section was largely an outgrowth of concern over the acquittal based on insanity of John W. Hinckley Jr., who shot President Reagan and three other people in a March 30, 1981, assassination attempt. (1981 Almanac p. 6)

Pressure From Reagan

President Reagan could claim a large share of credit for getting the crime package enacted. Beginning with his 1983 State of the Union address, he made it one of his top domestic priorities.

"It is high time that we make our cities safe again," the president declared in that Jan. 25 message. "This administration hereby declares an all-out war on big-time organized crime and the drug racketeers who are poisoning our young people." (Text, 1983 Almanac p. 3-E)

On March 16, 1983, Reagan sent to Capitol Hill an anti-crime proposal that contained a number of provisions ultimately included in the legislation that cleared Congress. (Text, 1983 Almanac p. 19-E)

The Senate on Feb. 2, 1984, passed by 91-1 a comprehensive crime bill (S 1762) containing most of Reagan's proposals. (Vote 6, p. 3-S)

At his next televised press conference, on Feb. 22, the president opened his remarks by declaring the legislation "long overdue," and urging the Democratic-controlled House "to stop dragging its feet and to act promptly." He returned to the theme repeatedly in the months thereafter.

Throughout the year, House Republicans also hammered away at the crime issue, denouncing the Democratic leadership in general and the House Judiciary leadership in particular for failing to act on the Senate-passed package.

The criticism greatly annoyed House Democrats, but they never found an effective way to counteract it. The House Judiciary Committee, which disliked omnibus bills, approved several important elements of the Senate package as separate pieces of legislation, and the full House passed those bills. Sentencing reform and pretrial detention legislation, however, lagged behind other provisions, and these were considered to be the most important sections of the crime package.

Legislative Maneuvering

On Sept. 25, House Republicans employed an end run to get the Senate crime bill passed. Rep. Dan Lungren, R-Calif., a Judiciary Committee member, made a motion to send the "must-pass" fiscal 1985 continuing appropriations resolution (H J Res 648) back to the Appropriations Committee with instructions to attach a House bill (HR 5963) identical to the Senate crime package and return the measure to the full House.

Lungren's motion was agreed to 243-166, with 89 Democrats joining 154 Republicans in supporting the maneuver. (Vote 370, p. 112-H)

The funding bill, with the crime package attached, promptly returned to the House floor and was passed the same day, 316-91. (Vote 371, p. 114-H)

On Oct. 2, House Democrats countered by consolidating various Judiciary Committee proposals into one bill (HR 5690) and proposing it for passage under suspension of the rules, which requires a two-thirds majority. The bill passed 406-16. (Vote 382, 118-H)

When the funding bill (H J Res 648) got to the Senate, members decided to retain the crime provisions, even though most other riders were eventually stripped from the measure. A few amendments were made to the crime section, and a number of new provisions were added. Nearly all of the new provisions had been approved as separate bills by one chamber or the other. They dealt with such issues as terrorism, trademark counterfeiting, computer and credit card fraud, and victim compensation.

The Senate decision assured that major crime legislation would be enacted in 1984. And the House Democrats' Oct. 2 move to pass their own bill did have some effect on the final product. When appropriations conferees met Oct. 10, they called in House and Senate Judiciary members to advise them on the crime section of H J Res 648.

During a lengthy and somewhat testy meeting, a final compromise crime package was worked out. Senators resisted efforts to alter the pretrial detention and sentencing provisions. But House Judiciary members succeeded in tailoring the measure's drug enforcement provisions more to their liking.

Criticisms of the Bill

While most lawmakers hailed passage of the anti-crime measure, representatives of the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) expressed deep concern about the preventive detention, insanity and computer crime provisions. They said these provisions infringed on individual liberties, and Jerry Berman, of the ACLU's Washington, D.C., office, contended that it was "fraudulent" to claim "that this bill will reduce violence ... or make this a safer society."

Berman said one of the computer crime provisions was so broad that it amounted to a "government secrecy" law. He was referring to a provision that made it a crime for a person who was authorized to use a government computer to use it in a manner beyond the scope of his authorization and subsequently disclose the information he obtained.

The Senate passed a bill (HR 5616) Oct. 11 to revise this provision in PL 98-473, but the House did not act on it.

The sentencing provisions caused some concern in the federal judiciary, because they reduced the historically broad discretion of judges to impose punishment. Under the new law, federal judges were required to stay within specific sentencing guidelines, to be written within 18 months, or justify in writing why they had departed from those guidelines. Judges were given three of the seven slots on a special commission that was to draft the sentencing guidelines.

The U.S. Judicial Conference, the policy-making arm of the federal judiciary, had supported a House Judiciary Committee version of the sentencing bill (HR 6012), which gave judges greater authority over the creation of the sentencing guidelines.

The federal judiciary "recognizes the need to have a commission and guidelines," said conference spokesman William James Weller, "but judges have been apprehensive about the process being controlled by people who aren't in the business every day of actually sitting there and making the difficult sentencing decisions."

Final Provisions

As cleared by Congress, the crime sections of PL 98-473 included the following major provisions:

Bail, Preventive Detention

- Authorized federal judges to consider whether a defendant posed a danger to the community in deciding whether to release him before trial.
 - Authorized judges to detain a suspect before trial upon a determination that no conditions for release would assure both the defendant's appearance at trial and the safety of the community. Existing law required pretrial release under the minimal conditions required to assure the defendant's appearance for trial.
 - Established a presumption that a defendant was not entitled to pretrial release if there was enough evidence to charge him with a major drug offense or specified other serious crimes. The defendant could seek to rebut the presumption.
 - Required detention after conviction pending sentencing or appeal, unless a judge found by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant was not likely to flee or pose a danger to the community.
- Previously, there was a presumption in favor of release on bail, even after conviction.
- Increased penalties for bail jumping from a maximum of five years in prison and a $5,000 fine to 10 years in prison and a $25,000 fine.
 - Required revocation of bail of a person arrested for a crime committed while on pretrial or post-conviction release, and set up procedures for such revocation.
 - Permitted an appeal of release and detention orders by both the government and the defendant. Under the law prior to PL 98-473, only the defendant could appeal.

Sentencing

- Established four general purposes of sentencing and specified that individuals could be sentenced to probation, a fine, a prison term or a combination of those sentences. An organization could be put on probation, fined or a combination of the two.
- Created a grading system for crimes, ranking them according to their seriousness.
- Established a seven-member commission to write guidelines for sentencing, which were to be completed within 18 months of enactment. Panel members, to be appointed by the president and confirmed by the Senate, must include three federal judges.
- Required judges to follow sentencing guidelines produced by the commission, although a judge could deviate from them if he stated in writing the mitigating and aggravating factors that led him to do so.
- Authorized a defendant to appeal a sentence that was harsher than the guidelines and authorized the government to appeal a sentence more lenient than the guidelines.
- Barred parole for prisoners incarcerated after the guidelines went into effect. Phased out parole over five years for prisoners incarcerated before the guidelines took effect.
- Provided that a sentence of more than one year could be shortened at the end of each year by 15 percent for good behavior.
- Gave a judge authority to modify a term of imprisonment if certain conditions specified in the bill were met.
- Gave a judge authority, when imposing a sentence, to order supervision of a defendant after his prison term ended. Existing law provided varying degrees of supervision when defendants were put on parole, but not after completion of a prison term.

Forfeiture: Seizure of Assets

- Expanded the government's authority to require forfeiture of profits and proceeds from organized crime enterprises and narcotics trafficking.
- Established revolving funds in the Justice and Treasury departments for a number of purposes, including maintenance of equipment seized through forfeiture proceedings, payment of rewards for information leading to seizure, purchase of drugs pursuant to an undercover operation, and rebuilding seized equipment so it could be used for drug enforcement.
- Increased the value of goods that could be forfeited to federal agents without a full-scale court proceeding. Prior to enactment of the law, goods valued at up to $10,000 could be forfeited through default proceedings, when no one showed up to claim the goods. The new law raised the value for most cases to $100,000.

Insanity Defense

- Modified the definition of insanity to require a defendant to prove that as a result of a severe mental disease or defect, he was unable to appreciate the nature and wrongfulness of his acts. Existing law required proof that a defendant suffered from a mental disease or defect that left him unable to appreciate the criminality of his conduct or conform his conduct to the law.
- Shifted the burden of proof for establishing insanity to the defendant, who had to show by clear and convincing evidence that he met the legal test. Under existing law, the prosecutor had to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did not meet the insanity test.

- Limited psychiatric testimony to the presentation and explanation of a diagnosis of mental disease or defect; no testimony would be allowed on whether the defendant had the mental state or condition constituting an element of the crime, such as intent, or a defense to it, such as the inability to understand the wrongfulness of his actions.

- Provided for commitment to a mental hospital or other suitable facility of anyone found not guilty by reason of insanity until such time as a court determined that the person had recovered sufficiently so that his release would not endanger other people or their property. Under the previous law, there was no federal procedure for commitment of those acquitted on insanity grounds.

Drug Enforcement

- Increased maximum fines for most serious drug offenses from $25,000 to $125,000 for individuals. For trafficking in large quantities of specified drugs, including heroin and cocaine, the maximum fine was set at $250,000, and the maximum prison term at 20 years. Under current law, the maximum prison term was 15 years.

- Authorized judges to fine a drug offender up to twice the gross profits from his enterprise instead of imposing the fine specified for the crime in question.

- Increased the first-offense penalty for illegally distributing or making certain drugs from a maximum of five years to 15 years.

- Gave the attorney general emergency authority to require tight control, similar to that already in effect for heroin, of new chemical substances when he determined such action was "necessary to avoid an imminent hazard to the public safety." Required 30 days' notice before the attorney general could place a substance on "Schedule I" status, the most restrictive for controlled substances. The emergency listing would expire after one year, although the attorney general could extend it for up to six months.

- Required anyone who manufactured or distributed any controlled substance to obtain an annual registration from the attorney general.

- Required anyone dispensing or proposing to dispense any controlled substance to obtain a registration from the attorney general for a term of not less than one nor more than three years.

- Required the attorney general to register a physician or pharmacy to dispense and conduct research with controlled substances if an applicant was authorized to do so under the laws of the state in which he practiced, and no circumstances existed that would make such registration "inconsistent with the public interest." Such circumstances would include, among others, a prior criminal record involving drug offenses, or an adverse recommendation by a state licensing board or professional disciplinary authority.

- Expanded the authority of the attorney general to deny or revoke a registration upon a finding that the registration was inconsistent with the public interest, as determined according to specified factors.

- Required the attorney general to present the applicant or registrant with a document stating the basis of the denial or revocation and to give the person an opportunity to respond.

- Authorized the attorney general to suspend any registration on an emergency basis upon finding that there was "imminent danger to the public health and safety." Previously, a practitioner could be stripped of his registration only upon criminal conviction, upon proof that the application for registration was false, or upon revocation of a license to practice medicine by an appropriate licensing board.

- Authorized the attorney general to seize or place under seal any controlled substances owned or possessed by a registrant whose registration had expired or who had ceased to practice or do business in the manner contemplated by his registration.

- Authorized the attorney general to establish programs, including investigations, collection of information and grants, to help states reduce the amount of drugs diverted from medical channels to the black market.

Justice Assistance

- Created an Office of Justice Programs within the Department of Justice, headed by an assistant attorney general appointed by the president and confirmed by the Senate.

- Authorized the assistant attorney general to publish and disseminate information on the progress of criminal justice systems, and maintain liaison with the executive and judicial branches of the state and federal governments, public and private research and educational institutions.

- Gave the assistant attorney general authority to coordinate programs of the National Institute of Justice and Bureau of Justice Statistics.

- Created a Bureau of Justice Assistance within the Justice Department, headed by a director appointed by the attorney general.

- Authorized the director to provide funds to eligible states, local governments and private, non-profit organizations for criminal justice projects through a block grant program.

- Provided "such sums as may be necessary" to carry out the block grant program.

- Provided that of the amount appropriated each year, 80 percent was to be set aside to give each participating state at least $250,000. Any remaining amount would be allocated based on population.

- Established that the purpose of the block grant program was to provide funds for anti-crime programs of proven effectiveness, with special emphasis on combating violent crime and dealing with serious offenders. The measure specified 18 types of programs that could be funded.

- Limited federal grants to 50 percent of program costs.

- Required applicants to make a detailed request for funds covering the type of program the funds would be used for and providing assurance that state and local officials and members of the public had been apprised of the application and given an opportunity to comment upon it.

- Provided an applicant the opportunity to seek a reconsideration of any grant proposal that was rejected.

- Required each state to designate a "state office" to prepare applications and administer grants.

- Provided that 20 percent of the funds appropriated would be for "discretionary" grants to public agencies and non-profit organizations for training of criminal justice personnel, technical assistance to state and local governments, multi-state projects and demonstration projects.

- Created a pilot program of grants to help states and localities build new prisons to relieve overcrowding and improve substandard facilities.

- Limited grants to no more than 20 percent of the cost of constructing a correctional facility.

- Authorized the director of justice assistance to establish a clearinghouse of information on the construction and modernization of prisons.

- Authorized $25 million annually for fiscal years 1984-88 to carry out the pilot program and set up the clearing-house.

- Authorized the head of the FBI to conduct training programs for state and local officials at the FBI's National Academy in Quantico, Va.

- Required annual reports to Congress on the various programs set up under this title.

- Provided for $50,000 in benefits to the survivors of law enforcement officers and firefighters who died as the result of injuries sustained in the line of duty.

- Permitted immediate payment, upon a showing of need, of up to $3,000 to a survivor expected to qualify for full benefits. Any interim sum would be deducted from the $50,000.

Surplus Property

- Authorized the donation of surplus federal property for the construction and modernization of state prison or jail facilities.

Violent Crime Amendments

- Made murder-for-hire a federal crime when interstate commerce was involved; made violent crimes such as murder, kidnapping and assaults federal offenses if they were in aid of racketeering activities.

- Prohibited "solicitation" to commit a crime of violence, which covered a person who tried to persuade another to commit a crime of violence.

- Revised and strengthened existing requirements of minimum mandatory sentences for use of a firearm in the commission of federal crimes, setting a minimum sentence of five years in addition to whatever sentence was imposed for the underlying crime.

- Provided new penalties for kidnapping specified federal officials and for crimes directed at the family members of specified federal officials.

- Prohibited carrying or using in a crime of violence a handgun loaded with armor-piercing ammunition, and set a mandatory five-year prison term as the minimum penalty.

- Made it a federal offense to damage willfully energy facilities such as electrical transmission towers if the damage exceeded $100,000 or resulted in a significant interruption of the facility; the maximum penalty was set at 10 years in prison and a $50,000 fine.

Non-Violent Crime

- Created a new obstruction-of-justice offense for impairing an authorized search by moving, concealing or destroying the property that was the object of the search.

- Created a new offense to cover theft, fraud and bribery involving federal money disbursed to private organizations or to state and local governments under a federal program.

- Created a new offense for counterfeiting the securities of state and local governments or of corporations.

- Clarified the law covering receipt of stolen bank property to cover situations in which a defendant knew property was stolen even though he did not know it was stolen from a bank.

- Revised the law covering bank bribery to broaden the types of institutions, such as credit unions and the Federal Home Loan Bank System, not currently covered and to cover indirect as well as direct bribes.

- Created a new bank fraud offense to cover anyone who knowingly executed or attempted to execute a scheme to defraud a federally chartered or insured financial institution or to obtain any assets of such institution through false or fraudulent pretenses. A prison term of up to five years and a fine of up to $10,000 was established.

- Made possession of contraband in prison a criminal offense. Under previous law, bringing contraband into a prison or moving it around was a federal offense, while possessing such material was not.

- Revised current law barring theft and fraud involving "cattle" to cover theft and fraud involving "livestock."

- Prohibited anyone from obtaining or using without permission another's livestock worth $10,000 or more, and set a penalty of up to five years in prison and a fine of up to $10,000.

Juvenile Justice

- Reauthorized the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention for fiscal 1985-88, to be funded by "such sums as may be necessary" for each of the years. The office was to help states develop alternatives to incarceration of juveniles and to develop programs to combat juvenile delinquency.

- Reauthorized the Runaway and Homeless Youth Act of 1974 (PL 93-415) for fiscal 1985-88. This law, administered by the Department of Health and Human Services, authorized assistance to state and local facilities that provided emergency shelter care for runaways.

- Authorized such sums as necessary to carry out these programs for fiscal 1985-88.

- Emphasized in both the juvenile justice and runaway youth programs that the family of the children involved should be made part of any counseling and treatment program.

- Continued the two mandates of the original 1974 law — removal of juveniles from adult jails and the creation of institutions, such as group homes, for juveniles who committed no crimes but who were runaways or truant.

- Required for the first time that grants from the administrator's discretionary pool of funds be made on a competitive basis. Previously, there were no statutory requirements for awarding these grants.

Missing Children

- Required for the first time federal assistance in locating missing children and providing treatment for such children and their families. The programs were to be run by the administrator of the juvenile justice office.

- Required establishment of a national toll-free hotline that members of the public could use to report information about missing children aged 13 or under.

- Established a national clearinghouse to provide technical assistance to public and private agencies involved in locating missing children; coordinate public and private missing-children programs, and disseminate information about such programs.

- Required periodic studies to determine how many children were reported missing each year, how many were abducted by strangers, how many were the victims of parental kidnappings, and how many were recovered.

- Authorized the administrator to award grants to public agencies and non-profit organizations for research, demonstration projects or service programs related to the problem of missing children and sexual exploitation of children.

- Created an advisory board on missing children to make recommendations for federally assisted missing-children programs.

- Provided $10 million for fiscal 1985 for the program and such sums as might be necessary for the remaining fiscal years.

Procedural Changes

- Allowed federal prosecution as adults of certain juvenile defendants charged with serious federal drug offenses or crimes of violence. Under previous law, most cases involving juveniles were transferred to the states unless the attorney general determined that the state could not handle the case.

- Authorized emergency wiretaps without a court order in situations involving immediate danger of death or serious physical injury to any person. Emergency wiretaps also were authorized in cases involving child pornography, illegal currency transactions and offenses against crime victims and witnesses.

- Gave the attorney general new authority to seek a court order to bar a mail-fraud, wire-fraud or bank-fraud scheme once he had sufficient evidence of a violation of anti-fraud laws.

Labor Racketeering

- Raised from a misdemeanor to a felony willful violation of the Taft-Hartley Act provisions involving labor bribery or payoffs in excess of $1,000. Increased penalties to a maximum of five years in prison and a $15,000 fine, from one year in prison and a $10,000 maximum.

- Barred union officials from holding union or trust fund positions for a minimum of three years and a maximum of 13 years after conviction on corruption charges. Under previous law, the maximum disqualification was five years.

- Provided disqualification only for those union officials who used their position in a labor union to seek or obtain an illegal gain.

- Made clear that federal labor racketeering provisions did not bar states from enacting their own laws to deal with labor racketeering.

Foreign Currency Transactions

- Increased civil and criminal penalties for violating record-keeping and reporting requirements involving the transport of currency in and out of the United States.

- Authorized customs officers to stop and search, without a warrant, any vehicle, vessel or person entering or leaving the United States if the officer had reasonable cause to suspect a violation of currency transaction laws.

- Authorized rewards of 25 percent, up to a $150,000 maximum, to anyone who provided information leading to recovery of more than $50,000 through a penalty, fine or forfeiture.

Witness Protection

- Authorized relocation and protection of federal or specified state witnesses and potential witnesses when the attorney general determined that a crime of violence was likely to be committed against those individuals.

- Authorized relocation and protection for the immediate family of the witness, or another person closely associated with the witness, if those individuals might also be endangered.

- Required the attorney general to issue guidelines on the types of cases in which witnesses could be protected.

- Gave U.S. officials and employees immunity from civil liability for their decisions to protect or not to protect a witness.

- Gave the attorney general discretion to determine how long to protect a witness, and authorized the attorney general to provide the witness with identity documents, housing, transportation to a new home, a payment to meet basic living expenses, and help in obtaining a job.

- Required deductions from living-expense payments to a protected witness to cover court-ordered family support payments.

- Gave the attorney general discretion to disclose or withhold information on the identity or location of a protected witness. Required disclosure of such information to state and local law enforcement officials when the person in question was sought for a crime of violence or an offense punishable by more than one year in prison.

- Provided for a $5,000 fine, five-year prison term or both for anyone convicted of illegally disclosing information about the identity and location of a protected witness.

- Required the attorney general, "to the extent practicable," to obtain information about the suitability of a person for protection and relocation. Such information was to include a criminal history, if any, and a psychological evaluation of the person.

- Required the attorney general to determine whether the need for a person's testimony outweighed the risk of endangering people and property in the community where a witness was to be relocated, and barred relocation if the risk to the public outweighed the need for the person's testimony.

- Required the attorney general to issue a written "memorandum of understanding" to the protected witness specifying the person's responsibilities under the program. These required no criminal conduct, payment of all legal obligations and civil judgments, agreement to testify and provide information to law enforcement officials, and agreement to take the necessary steps to avoid detection.

- Provided for emergency protection in specified circumstances without the written memorandum.

- Allowed the attorney general to terminate protection of a witness for a substantial breach of the memorandum of understanding.

- Specified procedures for notifying a protected witness of a civil proceeding against him and set out elaborate procedures for enforcing the rights of any litigant who had a judgment against a protected witness. Authorized disclosure to the plaintiff of the identity and location of a protected person who failed to comply with a civil judgment against him. If the attorney general did not make such disclosure upon request, the plaintiff could seek a federal court hearing on the issue.

- Barred the attorney general from relocating any child in connection with protecting a witness if it appeared that a person other than the witness had legal custody of that child.

- Provided detailed procedures for safeguarding custody and visitation arrangements involving a protected witness who had legal custody of a child, and required the parent being relocated to seek and abide by modifications in the existing court-ordered custody arrangements if compliance with a visitation order was not possible.

- Specified that the custody and visitation rights of the non-relocated parent could not be infringed if a child was relocated as part of the program.

- Required the Justice Department to pay transportation and security costs necessary to ensure up to 12 visits per year, or up to 30 days, between parents and children.

- Provided for arbitration if no agreement on modifying a custody arrangement was reached within 60 days of a legal action to alter the arrangement.

- Authorized the attorney general to pay restitution or, in the case of death, compensation to any victim injured or killed by a person protected under the federal program.

- Authorized $1 million annually for this compensation program.

- Limited compensation in cases involving death to a maximum of $50,000, and prohibited payments to victims receiving restitution or compensation through other programs or through insurance.

Foreign Business Records

- Permitted the use of foreign business records as evidence in criminal proceedings if the custodian of those records provided a certification setting forth specified information about how the records were compiled and kept.

- Allowed a defendant to challenge the admission of the records into evidence under certain circumstances.

- Transferred from the State Department to the Justice Department responsibility for administering the Foreign Agents Registration Act, but required the attorney general to inform the State Department of foreign registrations it had received.

- Made clear that the United States had jurisdiction over any offense committed by or against a national of the United States any place outside the jurisdiction of another country. This provision was intended to cover crimes that might occur on Antarctica, an ice floe or the moon. (A "national" was a U.S. citizen or a person whose principal place of residence was the United States.)

Drug Policy Board

- Created a National Drug Enforcement Policy Board, a high-level interagency council to coordinate federal drug enforcement activities.

- Designated the attorney general as chairman and included on the board the secretaries of state, Treasury, defense, health and human services, the director of the Office of Management and Budget, the director of the Central Intelligence Agency and any other officials the president wanted to appoint.

- Authorized the board to develop and coordinate all U.S. efforts to halt national and international drug trafficking.

- Authorized the chairman to make recommendations to the board for coordination of drug enforcement activities, to be the primary adviser to the president on drug enforcement issues, and to review and approve the reprogramming of funds relating to drug enforcement.

- Specified that neither the new drug board nor its chairman could "interfere with the routine law enforcement or intelligence decisions of any agency" or undertake activities "inconsistent with" the authority and responsibilities of the director of central intelligence.

- Required the chairman to submit a report to Congress within nine months of enactment on drug enforcement policy. After the first report, others would be required every two years.

Victim Compensation

- Created a Crime Victims Fund in the Treasury Department financed through fines collected from persons convicted of federal offenses, with specified exceptions, plus forfeited bonds and collateral.

- Set a $100 million maximum for the fund and required any excess money to go to the Treasury.

- Barred deposits in the fund after Sept. 30, 1988.

- Specified that half the amount in the fund each year would be available for grants to existing state victim-compensation programs to meet claims, and half to states to provide victim assistance programs such as rape counseling.

- Allowed the attorney general to deduct up to 5 percent of the total in the fund for services to victims of federal crimes. This money would come out of the share allotted to states for victim services.

- Authorized the attorney general, in making annual grants to state victim-compensation programs, to provide funds equal to 35 percent of the amounts awarded to crime victims by the state program during the previous fiscal year, other than awards for property damage.

- Defined an "eligible" program as one that was operated by a state and offered compensation to victims or their survivors for medical expenses, loss of wages and funeral expenses.

- Authorized the attorney general to make grants to states, subject to available funds, for crime victim-assistance programs run by public agencies or non-profit organizations.

- Provided that each state should receive $100,000 under the grant and that any remaining money should be distributed among the states on the basis of population. If there was less than $100,000 per state available, then the money would be distributed to the states equally.

- Authorized a federal court, upon request by a U.S. attorney, to ensure that someone convicted of a crime causing physical harm to an individual did not profit from that crime. A court could order forfeiture of all or part of the proceeds the defendant or his designee received from a contract relating to depiction of the crime in a movie, book, newspaper, magazine, drama, radio or television production.

- Authorized a judge to order the person who contracted with the defendant to pay the specified amount to the attorney general.

- Provided that proceeds paid to the attorney general through forfeiture be held in the Crime Victims Fund for five years, but allowed payment for specified purposes, including a fine or monetary award to the victim. At the end of the five-year period, a court could require all or part of forfeited proceeds to be released for use by the Crime Victims Fund.

Trademark Counterfeiting

- Prohibited trafficking in goods or services using a counterfeit trademark and set a fine of up to $250,000, a prison term of up to five years, or both for a first offense by an individual. A corporation could be fined up to $1 million. A second offense by an individual would carry a maximum $1 million fine and 15-year prison term, while an organization could be fined up to $5 million.

- Authorized a judge to order the destruction of goods in the possession of a defendant that were determined to be counterfeit.

- Increased civil penalties for counterfeiting by allowing a judge to impose triple damages or three times the profits from counterfeiting, whichever was greater. A judge could decline to award triple damages if he found "extenuating circumstances."

- Authorized a plaintiff to seek a court order — without prior notice to the opposing party — directing federal authorities to seize counterfeit goods, the equipment and documents used to make and sell them.

- Required, before such an "ex parte" order was issued, that the plaintiff post bond covering the costs of the goods in question, and that the judge find factual evidence indicating that only such an order would assure that the goods in question remained intact for further legal proceedings.
- Required a court hearing on the seizure within 15 days.
- Authorized an award of damages and attorneys' fees to anyone whose goods had been wrongfully seized.

Credit Card Fraud

- Provided a maximum fine of $10,000 or twice the value obtained, and a prison term of up to 10 years, for anyone who used or trafficked in one or more unauthorized credit cards or other "access devices," such as bank card numbers, and obtained at least $1,000 in value in any one-year period.
- Set the same penalties for anyone who possessed with intent to defraud 15 or more counterfeit or unauthorized cards or code numbers.
- Set a maximum $50,000 fine or twice the value obtained and a maximum 15-year prison term for anyone who produced, used or trafficked in counterfeit access devices or who trafficked in equipment to make such devices.
- Provided a maximum $100,000 fine, or twice the value obtained and a maximum 20-year prison term for a second offense of the above crimes.

Computer Fraud

- Made it a felony to gain unauthorized entry into a computer for purposes of obtaining classified information with intent or reason to believe the information would be used to the injury of the United States or advantage of another country. Unauthorized use of classified information by someone authorized to have access to the computer was also banned.
- Made it a felony to attempt to commit the above crime.
- Provided a maximum penalty on the first offense of $10,000 or twice the value obtained, and a maximum prison term of 10 years. A second offense would carry a maximum $100,000 fine or twice the value obtained, and a maximum 20-year prison term.
- Made it a misdemeanor to enter a computer illegally and obtain information covered by federal laws protecting privacy of financial and credit information.
- Made it a misdemeanor to enter a government computer illegally and affect the computer's operations.
- Made it a misdemeanor to use a government computer for purposes other than the authorized use and then modify, destroy or disclose information obtained, or prevent authorized use of the computer.
- Set a maximum $5,000 penalty or twice the value obtained, and a maximum one-year prison term, for the first misdemeanor offense. A second offense would carry a maximum fine of $10,000 or twice the value obtained, and a maximum 10-year prison term.

Armed Career Criminals

- Allowed federal prosecution of specified repeat state offenders.
- Provided a mandatory 15-year prison term and $25,000 fine for any defendant with three previous state convictions for robbery or burglary who possessed a firearm that had traveled in interstate commerce. The sentence could not be suspended nor could the defendant be paroled.

Terrorism

- Required imprisonment for up to life for taking hostages either inside the United States or outside the country in order to compel a third person or government to do or abstain from doing a particular act as a condition for releasing the hostages.
- Barred prosecution under this section unless the offender or person detained was a U.S. national, the offender was found in the United States, or the U.S. government was the one the offender sought to influence.
- Set a fine of up to $100,000, imprisonment of up to 20 years, or both for anyone who destroyed or damaged aircraft or aircraft facilities in the United States, or acted violently toward any person on such an aircraft, or knowingly provided false information that could endanger an aircraft in flight. The same penalties were established for anyone attempting to commit the above crimes.
- Provided the same penalties for anyone who performed an act of violence against a "civil" aircraft of another country or placed a dangerous device aboard such aircraft, if that offender was later found in the United States.
- Provided a maximum $25,000 fine and maximum five-year prison term for anyone who willfully threatened to commit any of the above offenses.
- Provided a civil penalty of up to $10,000 for anyone who knowingly conveyed false information that was likely to be believed concerning an attempt or alleged attempt to violate specified regulations governing aircraft licensing and safety.
- Provided a civil penalty of up to $10,000 for anyone, other than law enforcement officers and certain authorized personnel, who boarded or attempted to board an aircraft while carrying a concealed dangerous weapon.
- Raised the fine for carrying concealed weapons or explosives aboard an aircraft from $1,000 to $10,000. The offense also carried a maximum one-year prison term.
- Raised the fine for committing an act with a weapon or explosive aboard an aircraft from $5,000 to $25,000. The offense also carried a maximum five-year prison term.
- Set a maximum $25,000 fine and five-year prison term for anyone who willfully and maliciously, or with reckless disregard for human life, knowingly conveyed false information about committing a crime on board an aircraft, interfering with flight crews, or carrying weapons or explosives aboard.
- Provided a maximum $25,000 fine and five-year prison term for anyone who threatened to commit such acts.

U.S. Attorneys' Salaries

- Authorized the attorney general to fix the salaries of U.S. attorneys and their assistants at a level not to exceed the maximum paid to employees in the Senior Executive Service. The maximum salary was thereby raised to $69,900 per year, up from a current maximum of $66,400.

Defense Attorneys' Fees

- Raised the current rate for court-appointed defense lawyers from $20 per hour for out-of-court work and $30 per hour for in-court work to $40 and $60 respectively. The pay rates for these attorneys had not been changed since 1970.
- Raised the maximum payment for a felony case and for an appeal from $1,000 for each to $2,000 for each.

- Raised the maximum payment for a misdemeanor case from $400 to $800.

- Raised the maximum for other proceedings, such as a parole revocation, from $250 to $500.

- Maintained current law allowing the maximums to be exceeded through a request to the chief judge of the federal district where the case in question resided.

Background

Criminal Code Reform History

The effort to revise the federal criminal code dated back to 1966, when, at the instigation of Congress, a National Commission on Reform of Criminal Laws was created. Headed by Gov. Edmund G. Brown of California (1959-67), the commission produced a report that led to the introduction on Jan. 4, 1973, of the first omnibus crime bill, S 1. That proposal drew swift and steady fire from civil liberties groups, who claimed it was harmful to individual rights. (1973 Almanac p. 374)

Although numerous hearings were held on the legislation, the Senate Judiciary Committee did not act on either S 1 or on a successor version introduced Jan. 15, 1975, at the start of the 94th Congress.

In 1977, however, Sens. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and John L. McClellan, D-Ark. (1943-77; House, 1935-39), introduced S 1437, a revised criminal code reform that omitted some of the more controversial provisions of earlier versions. That bill was passed by the Senate on Jan. 30, 1978, but died in the House.

Kennedy tried again in the 96th Congress, supported by Sens. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., and Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah. A criminal code bill (S 1722) was reported from the Senate Judiciary Committee Jan. 17, 1980, but Kennedy became so deeply involved in his unsuccessful bid to wrest the Democratic presidential nomination from President Carter that the bill was sidetracked. The House Judiciary Committee also approved a criminal code bill, HR 6915, but that measure went no further.

Work resumed in the 97th Congress, as the Senate Judiciary Committee approved yet another criminal code package (S 1630) Nov. 18, 1981, formally reporting the measure Jan. 25, 1982 (S Rept 97-307).

Although that measure, like its predecessors, proved too hot for the Senate to handle in an election year, some of its non-controversial provisions were passed separately (S 2572) on Sept. 30, 1982, and then attached to a minor House-passed bill (HR 3963) that was cleared by Congress in the session that began Dec. 20. However, Reagan objected to certain portions of the bill, most notably a section creating a new, centralized Cabinet-level office to combat drug trafficking, dubbed the "drug czar." He pocket-vetoed the measure Jan. 14, 1983. (1982 Almanac p. 419)

Senate Committee Action

With Reagan insisting that he placed a high priority on anti-crime legislation, despite his veto of the 1982 bill, Kennedy and Thurmond started over in the 98th Congress. Along with Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., and Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del., they introduced another omnibus anti-crime package (S 1762) that was approved by the Judiciary Committee July 21, 1983, and formally reported Aug. 4, 1983 (S Rept 98-225). Sen. Charles McC. Mathias Jr., R-Md., cast the lone vote against the measure in committee.

Controversial Items Split Off

To minimize the prospect that the crime package would get bogged down on the Senate floor in fights over emotional issues, the committee split off into separate bills provisions it knew would generate controversy. These included a revised drug czar proposal and measures to reinstitute the federal death penalty, restrict use of habeas corpus claims by state prisoners and modify the exclusionary rule, which barred use at trials of illegally seized evidence.

The drug czar plan was later incorporated into the final crime package (H J Res 648). The other three bills (S 1765, S 1763, S 1764) were passed by the Senate, but died in the House. (Stories, pp. 227, 228)

Senate Floor Action

The Senate began work on S 1762 on Jan. 27. Because the bill included only provisions with bipartisan support, it was expected to sail through the Senate.

That hope faded Jan. 31, however, when Sens. Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, and Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., offered an amendment to make it a federal felony for any government official or employee to record a phone conversation without the other party's consent. Exemptions were provided for law enforcement, national security, and foreign intelligence and counterintelligence personnel.

Telephone Taping

Metzenbaum and Bumpers said their amendment was prompted by disclosures that Charles Z. Wick, head of the United States Information Agency, had recorded dozens of telephone conversations without the other party's consent.

The amendment drew vehement protests from Senate Republicans, and representatives from the Justice Department and the government's intelligence agencies rushed to the Capitol to urge senators to block the amendment. Justice also sent over two long letters identifying possible problems with the proposals.

Bumpers and Metzenbaum said they were amazed at the opposition. They said that they had provided exemptions in the areas of concern, and Metzenbaum said repeatedly that he had asked Justice and the intelligence agencies to bring him proposed language for the exemptions.

None had been forthcoming, Metzenbaum said. "I'm starting to think that what this whole thing is about is that a lot more secret taping is going on than a lot of us imagined."

Some Republicans said the amendment was nothing but a slap at Reagan, a close friend of Wick, an allegation Bumpers called "misinformation." He said the amendment was designed to bar "peeping Tomism."

"Does this mean the president wants to go out and campaign that he was violently opposed to a law that in effect stopped peeping Toms?" Bumpers asked.

After considerable debate, the amendment was finally rejected 41-51. (Vote 5, p. 3-S)

Final Passage, Backup Steps

With the phone taping issue out of the way, the Senate passed S 1762 on Feb. 2 by a 91-1 vote. As in committee, Mathias cast the lone "nay." (Vote 6, p. 3-S)

Mathias expressed strong reservations about the bill's sentencing provisions, which he unsuccessfully sought to amend.

In a move designed to facilitate House passage of at least portions of S 1762, the Senate Feb. 2-3 passed three of the most important sections of the measure as separate bills.

A sentencing bill (S 668 — S Rept 98-223) was passed 85-3 on Feb. 2. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., and Howell Heflin, D-Ala., joined Mathias in voting "nay." (Vote 7, p. 3-S)

On Feb. 3, the Senate by 84-0 passed as a separate bill (S 215 — S Rept 98-147) provisions that permitted pretrial detention of criminal suspects deemed dangerous to the community. (Vote 9, p. 4-S)

Also passed separately Feb. 3, this time by voice vote, was legislation (S 948 — S Rept 98-224) to expand the federal government's authority to require forfeiture of profits and proceeds from organized crime and drug trafficking.

House Action

The House Judiciary Committee, and the House itself, dealt with crime bills in a piecemeal fashion until the very end of the session.

The effort was to little avail; the Senate simply ignored most of these House-passed measures. Senate provisions on the subjects addressed by the House ultimately became law after being attached en masse to the continuing appropriations resolution.

Crime bills that were passed by the House, only to be incorporated in H J Res 648 along lines approved by the Senate, included:

Pay for Defense Lawyers

This bill (HR 4307 — H Rept 98-764), passed by voice vote May 21, raised the hourly pay for defense lawyers appointed in federal criminal cases from a maximum of $30 an hour to $50 an hour. In special circumstances, the rate could be $75 an hour.

The hourly rate had not been changed since 1970. Since then, there had been a different pay rate for in-court time ($30 per hour) and out-of-court time ($20 per hour). HR 4307 would have ended this distinction.

Federal Witness Protection

By 376-41, the House May 22 suspended the rules and passed a bill (HR 4249 — H Rept 98-767) to tighten controls on a Justice Department program that gave new identities, relocation and other protection to federal witnesses in exchange for their testimony in criminal cases. (Vote 141, p. 48-H)

The legislation was prompted by criticism over the years that stemmed from crimes committed by witnesses who were given new identities and relocated.

The bill also established a victim compensation fund for innocent persons injured by individuals admitted to the witness protection program. A $2 million maximum was authorized for yearly appropriations for the fund.

Missing Children

The House June 4 passed by voice vote a bill (HR 4971 — H Rept 98-741) to create a national clearinghouse to coordinate efforts to locate missing children and to set up a toll-free hotline to receive tips about their whereabouts.

The program was included in legislation reauthorizing juvenile justice programs of the Department of Justice.

Computer, Credit Card Fraud

The House July 24 passed a bill (HR 5616 — H Rept 98-894) that for the first time would make it a crime to obtain unauthorized access to computers and obtain classified information, protected financial information, or something of value. The measure, which also made it a felony to use a credit or bank card, or their code numbers, without authorization, was passed by 395-0. (Vote 281, p. 86-H)

Criminal Fines

On July 30, the House by voice vote approved a bill (HR 5846 — H Rept 98-906) to make criminal fines more severe and improve the government's ability to collect them.

The House and Senate Judiciary committees had studied federal criminal fine levels over the last decade in connection with efforts to revamp the entire criminal code. Both committees concluded that current fine levels were too low to be effective.

HR 5846 substantially increased maximum fine levels for all federal crimes. The bill provided that an individual could be fined the greatest of the amount specified for the crime in question, twice the gain or loss resulting from the crime, or in the case of any felony or of a misdemeanor resulting in death, $250,000.

A similar scheme was established for corporations, except that if a corporation were convicted of a felony or a misdemeanor resulting in death, the fine could be the greater of $1,000,000 or twice the gain or loss resulting from the crime.

Foreign Business Records

A bill (HR 5919 — H Rept 98-907) to make it easier to use foreign-kept business records at criminal trials in the United States was passed July 30 by voice vote. The bill permitted the admission into evidence of foreign business records if the custodian of those records provided a certification setting forth specified information about the records and how they were kept. A defendant would have the right to challenge the admission of the documents under certain circumstances.

Bribery and Fraud

Also July 30, the House by voice vote approved a bill (HR 5872 — H Rept 98-901) to close loopholes in current laws prohibiting bribery and fraud involving financial institutions. The bill barred all payments intended to influence an officer or employee of a financial institution in making a discretionary decision. However, to avoid making a crime out of trivial actions, such as taking a loan officer to dinner following a successful transaction, the bill required that the payment in money or its equivalent be more than $100.

Escape From Custody

By voice vote July 30, the House passed a bill (HR 5526 — H Rept 98-902) to make it a federal crime to escape from federal custody or confinement that resulted from specified civil or criminal proceedings.

Contraband in Prison

A bill (HR 5910 — H Rept 98-908) to make it a crime to possess any contraband in prison was passed by voice vote July 30. Current law provided penalties for bringing contraband into a prison or removing it, but not for mere possession. The bill also amended the current law covering prison riots by adding a definition of "riot" and providing a $250,000 fine for conviction. Currently, there was only a 10-year prison term.

Drug Penalties

This bill (HR 4901 — H Rept 98-845, Parts I and II), passed Sept. 11 by voice vote, allowed forfeiture of assets of those convicted of certain drug offenses and substantially increased penalties for drug offenses.

HR 4901 increased maximum fines for the most serious drug offenses from $25,000 to $250,000 for individuals, and from $25,000 to $1 million for entities convicted of drug offenses. The measure also gave judges the option of fining a defendant twice the profits or gross proceeds from the trafficking.

Drug 'Czar'

This measure (HR 4028 — H Rept 98-1008) was also approved Sept. 11 by voice vote. In contrast to a 1982 proposal that provoked Reagan's veto, HR 4028 did not create any centralized new drug enforcement office. Instead, it increased the authority of the director of the existing Office of Drug Abuse Policy, created when the Drug Abuse Office and Treatment Act (PL 92-255) was enacted in 1972. (1972 Almanac p. 162)

Trademark Counterfeiting

Passed by a 403-0 vote on Sept. 12, this bill (HR 6071 — H Rept 98-997) created new criminal penalties for making and selling products with counterfeit trademarks. It also expanded and stiffened existing civil penalties. (Vote 344, p. 106-H)

The measure was intended to stem what sponsors and government experts said was a booming $6 billion business of passing off shoddy and sometimes hazardous goods as popular brand-name products.

HR 6071 provided a maximum fine of $250,000, a five-year prison term or both for a person convicted of counterfeiting goods or services. A corporation could be fined up to $1 million.

Money-Laundering

This bill (HR 6031 — H Rept 98-984), passed Sept. 10 by voice vote, increased civil and criminal penalties for illicit financial transactions, generally known as "money-laundering." The measure amended the Currency and Foreign Transactions Reporting Act, which set reporting and record-keeping rules for financial transactions.

Customs agents were authorized to conduct warrantless searches when they had "reasonable grounds to believe" that currency laws were being violated.

Drug Diversion

On Sept. 18, the House by voice vote passed a bill (HR 5656 — H Rept 98-835) to help control the diversion of prescription drugs from medical channels into the black market. It allowed the Drug Enforcement Administration to revoke or deny a physician's registration to write prescriptions if the attorney general found that registration inconsistent with the public interest.

Omnibus Bill

On Oct. 2, reacting to the parliamentary coup pulled by House Republicans in getting the Senate-passed crime package attached to the continuing resolution, House Democratic leaders put on the floor an omnibus crime bill (HR 5690) of their own.

This measure, which contained provisions generally paralleling those of the Senate bill, was passed 406-16 under suspension of the rules. (Vote 382, p. 118-H)

The greatest differences between HR 5690 and the Senate bill (S 1762) involved sentencing procedures, the insanity defense and drug laws.

Pharmacy Robberies

Congress May 17 cleared for President Reagan a bill (S 422 — PL 98-305) creating a new federal crime covering the robbery or burglary of controlled substances.

The measure was aimed primarily at thefts from drug stores, and pharmacists had been pressing for the legislation for years. They contended that as dispensers of powerful drugs with a street value far above their actual cost, they were vulnerable to attacks by those interested in making money on the black market.

Final action came when the Senate by voice vote accepted House amendments to S 422. The House had passed a compromise version of the measure by voice vote May 8.

The compromise, worked out through informal negotiations between the chambers, was essentially the same as the version reported March 30 by the House Judiciary Committee (HR 5222 — H Rept 98-644).

The Senate had passed S 422 in February, both separately (S Rept 98-353) and as part of a larger anti-crime package (S 1762 — S Rept 98-225). (Crime package, p. 215)

Background

The Justice Department already had authority under broad federal robbery and burglary statutes to prosecute crimes involving controlled substances. However, the department had told Congress in past years that it was not interested in investigating these types of crimes, which could be handled by state authorities.

Justice officials changed their minds in late 1983, however, and said they could live with legislation such as S 422 if requirements for federal jurisdiction were carefully worked out.

Rep. William J. Hughes, D-N.J., chairman of the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Crime, said there was merit to providing a federal "backup" to state prosecutions of drug robberies and burglaries.

Hughes said there were 6,000 robberies and burglaries of controlled substances between 1977 and 1981. Such crimes had "terrorized the community of dispensing pharmacists," he said.

"This legislation is an important step forward in controlling the diversion of large quantities of dangerous drugs from the legitimate channels of commerce to the streets and the black market," said Rep. Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J., chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

Major Provisions

As cleared, S 422 included the following major provisions:

- Provided for federal prosecutions in any one of three instances — when the value of the substances taken was at least $500; when the offender traveled in interstate or foreign commerce or used a facility of interstate commerce in the offense; or when a person other than the offender was killed or suffered "significant" bodily injury.

The original House bill provided for jurisdiction when

The anti-crime legislation now before Congress enjoys substantial bipartisan support, and numerous elements were introduced to the Crime Bill by Republican members of the Senate and the House of Representatives. Among the bipartisan and Republican-sponsored provisions included in the Chairmen's Mark are:

- Prohibition of awards of pell grants to prisoners. (Reps. Gordon, Holden and Fields; Sen. Hutchison)
- Education requirement for early release from prison. (Rep. Franks)
- Civil rights of institutionalized persons. (Rep. Canaday; Sen. Grassley)
- After-school programs for kids. (Sens. Dandorth, Domenici and Bradley)
- National Triad Program. (Rep. Taylor and 29 Republican cosponsors)
- Olympic Youth Development Centers. (Sen. Stevens)
- Family Unity Demonstration Project. (Sens. Dole, Durenberger and Simon)
- Police Corps. (Democrats and Sen. Specter)
- Mandatory life imprisonment for persons convicted of certain felonies -- "Three Strikes and You're Out." (5 GOP Congressmen, including McCollum)
- Driving while intoxicated prosecution program. (Sen. Domenici)
- Penalties for the foreign murder of U.S. nationals. (Sen. Thurmond)
- Asylum for aliens. (Sen. Kassebaum)
- Violence Against Women Act. (38 House Republicans; 16 Senate Republicans)
- Expedited deportation for denied asylum applicants. (Sen. Simpson)
- Removal of alien terrorists. (Sens. Smith and Simpson)
- Improving border controls. (Reps. Hunter, Moorhead and Cunningham)
- Penalties for passport and visa fraud. (Rep. Gilman; Sen. Simpson)
- Penalties for international trafficking in child pornography. (Sen. Grassley)

- Jacob Wetterling Crimes Against Children Registration Act. (Rep. Ramstad; Sens. Durenberger and Kassebaum)
- Rural crime provisions. (Reps. Long, Baesler and Ewing) Included are:
 - * Authorizations for rural law enforcement agencies. (Sens. Hatch and Biden)
 - * Rural drug enforcement task forces. (Sens. Hatch, Pressler and Kempthorne)
- Missing alzheimer's disease patient alert program. (Sen. Hatfield)
- Violent Crime Reduction Trust Fund. (Sens. Biden, Byrd, Mitchell, Kerry, Dole, Hatch, Gramm and Domenici)
- Interstate wagering. (Sens. Specter and Wofford)
- Increased penalties for arson (Sens. Dole and Feinstein)
- Assaults against children (Rep. Solomon)
- Federal law enforcement appropriations. (Sen. Domenici)

BIPARTISAN SUPPORT FOR THE HOUSE CRIME BILL

H.R. 4092, the House Crime Bill, comes to the floor with substantial bipartisan support for many of its major provisions. In the House Judiciary Committee, Democrats and Republicans alike supported key pieces of the bill, such as "three strikes and you're out," the death penalty and other provisions. The following is a list of those major issues garnering bipartisan support:

I. New Provisions

1. 3 Strikes - The Administration proposal to provide mandatory life imprisonment for a third serious violent felony was approved with the bipartisan support of 13 Democrats and 14 Republicans.
2. Death penalty - Provisions to reinstate and expand the federal death penalty were approved with the support of 11 Democrats and 14 Republicans -- another bipartisan tally.
3. Juvenile Crime - A Justice Department proposal to allow prosecution of juveniles 13 years old or more as adults for certain offenses also passed with bipartisan support (8 Democrats, 13 Republicans)
4. Safety Valve - A Schumer-Hyde-authored provision to lift application of the statutory mandatory minimum sentence from certain first-time, non-violent, low-level drug offenders was approved with bipartisan support (21 Democrats and 4 Republicans). There was bipartisan opposition to an amendment to eliminate all mandatory penalties for simple possession of drugs, including crack. In both instances, the Justice Department view commanded bipartisan support in the Committee.
5. Victims Rights - Provisions to help ensure rights for victims of crime, such as allocution at sentencing, were adopted by the Committee by a bipartisan voice vote.
6. Assaults Against Childrer - A bill introduced by Republican Representative Jim Ramstad to increase penalties for certain assaults against children passed with bipartisan support (8 Democrats, 14 Republicans).
7. Child Sex Abuse - Provisions authored by Jim Ramstad to address international child sex abuse were approved by voice vote with bipartisan support.
8. Insurance Fraud - Provisions to establish federal penalties for insurance fraud were adopted by a bipartisan voice vote.

II. Old Provisions

Many other provisions of the bill were adopted by the House last fall, also with strong bipartisan support. These provisions, now incorporated in the Crime Bill, include:

1. 50,000 Cops - Provisions to put up to 50,000 police officers on the beat, deployed in community policing, passed on a voice vote.
2. Prison Drug Treatment - A requirement that addicts in both state and federal prisons be put in drug treatment programs also passed by votes of 394-32 and 373-54.
3. The Youth Handgun Safety Act - This bill, which takes guns out of the hands of kids, passed on a 422-0 vote.
4. The Jacob Wetterling Child Abuse Prevention Act - This bill requires convicted child abusers to register with local law enforcement upon release. (Passed by voice vote)
5. The Violence Against Women Act - This bill provides $1.6 billion to fund programs to prevent domestic violence and abuse, rape and other violence against women. It also establishes federal remedies for victims and criminal penalties for offenders. It passed by 421-0.
6. The Hate Crimes Sentencing Enhancement Act - This bill providing for enhanced penalties for hate crimes passed by voice vote.

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

August 23, 1994

The President sent the following letter yesterday to all 100 United States Senators.

Jose
G7028
Senate ltr.

August 22, 1994

Dear Senator:

This week, the Senate has an historic chance to move us beyond the old labels and partisan divisions by passing the toughest, smartest Crime Bill in our nation's history.

I want to congratulate members of Congress in both houses and both parties who have reached across party lines and worked in good faith to produce this Crime Bill. This isn't a Democratic Crime Bill or a Republican Crime Bill -- it's an American Crime Bill, and it will make a difference in every town, every city, and every state in our country.

The Crime Bill produced by House and Senate conferees and passed yesterday by Democrats and Republicans in the House achieves all the same objectives as the bipartisan Crime Bill which the Senate passed last November by a vote of 95 to 4.

Many of the central provisions of this Crime Bill were included in the Senate bill:

- * Nearly $9 billion to put 100,000 new police officers on our streets in community policing;
- * An additional $4.6 billion for federal, state and local law enforcement (a 25% increase above the Senate bill);
- * $9.9 billion for prisons (a 30% increase above the Senate bill), coupled with tough truth-in-sentencing requirements that will shut the revolving door on violent criminals;
- * Life imprisonment for repeat violent offenders by making three-strikes-and-you're-out the law of the land;
- * Federal death penalties for the most heinous of crimes, such as killing a law enforcement officer;
- * A ban on handgun ownership for juveniles;
- * Registration and community notification to warn unsuspecting families of sexual predators in their midst;
- * A ban on 19 semiautomatic assault weapons, with specific protection for more than 650 other weapons; and
- * Innovative crime prevention programs, such as the Community Schools program sponsored by Senators Danforth, Bradley, and Dodd, and the Violence Against Women Act sponsored by Senators Biden, Hatch, and Dole.

One of the most important elements of this Crime Bill is the creation of a Violent Crime Reduction Trust Fund, which ensures that every crime-fighting program in the bill will be paid for by reducing the federal bureaucracy by more than 270,000 positions over the next six years. The idea for the Trust Fund came from Senators Byrd, Mitchell, Biden, Gramm, Hatch, and Dole, and the Senate approved it by a vote of 94 to 4. The Trust Fund will ensure that the entire Crime Bill will be fully paid for, not with new taxes, but by reducing the federal bureaucracy to its lowest level in over 30 years.

The Senate led the way in passing these important anti-crime proposals last November, and I urge you to take up this Crime Bill in the same bipartisan spirit that marked that debate. The American people have waited six years for a comprehensive Crime Bill. It's time to put politics aside and finish the job. After all the hard work that has gone into this effort by members of both parties acting in good faith, we owe it to the law-abiding citizens of this country to pass this Crime Bill without delay.

Sincerely,

Bill Clinton

Roll Call For Defeat Of Crime Bill

(Capitol Hill) -- Here is the 225-210 roll call by which the House refused to allow a 33-point-two (B) billion-dollar crime bill package to come before the chamber for a vote.

A ``yes'' vote was to debate the package on the House floor. A ``no'' vote was to block further consideration.

Voting yes were 198 Democrats, eleven Republicans and one independent.

Voting no were 58 Democrats and 167 Republicans.
