CC: Jeremy D. Benami

SUBJECT: Options for next appointees w/disabilities meeting

Regarding the next meeting of the Appointees with Disabilities group on April 10: the 3 topics we had kicked around were:

1. having an update and discussion of the White House Conference on Aging; (would this be handled, at least partly, by Fernando Torres-Gil?) Michelle Pucen'Ni (4014545)
2. having Jim Slattery in to talk about the childhood commission; and Sharon + 429-3372 to call
3. inviting the Kaleidoscope people in to talk about their programming, etc.

We can't do all 3 ideas in one meeting, though perhaps we could do two. I guess it's a good idea to do Slattery fairly soon. (We're having lunch with him next week.)

Do you have a preference or should I just quickly move to make sure at least one of these parties could make it?

NATIONAL COUNCIL ON DISABILITY

An independent federal agency working with the President and the Congress to increase the inclusion, independence, and empowerment of all Americans with disabilities.

November 29, 1994

Ms. Carol Rasco
Assistant to the President
Domestic Policy Council
The White House
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Carol:

Thank you for including Speed Davis, Acting Executive Director at the National Council, in the most recent meeting of the appointees with disabilities. Please continue to keep me posted on these meetings because they play an important role. Hopefully the mailing list for these events has been corrected because I will make every effort to participate if I have advance notice of them.

Speed Davis spoke with Stan Herr yesterday about the current plans for the National Council. In light of the recent changes in Washington, we have decided to reverse the order of our original list of Council priorities. Initially, we will work on an ADA project followed by our national disability policy development project, which will most likely result in coordinating our summit in the fall. Even though we are delaying our national disability policy project, we are very interested in taking part in your process. Speed offered our assistance and Stan indicated that he would be getting back to Speed sometime next week with any details and suggestions as to what the Council can be doing.

Carol, we look forward to working with you. Please keep us informed with the activities at the Domestic Policy Council.

Sincerely,

Marca Bristo

Dear Ms. Rasco:

I recently was requested by U.S. Department of Agriculture's Acting Secretary Jim Lyons, to serve on his behalf on the National Disability Policy Review Team. I very much look forward to this unique opportunity, and hope that both my background as a consumer of accessible services and as a senior level GS Government employee will contribute to your effort.

I have been championing program and service accessibility opportunities with the USDA Forest Service over the past 18 years, serving in a national leadership role for the past 4 years. The agency is globally the single largest provider of outdoor recreation, ranging from campgrounds, trails, fishing, scenic viewing, to activities and services provided through Recreation Service Partnerships such as snow skiing and outfitter and guides. Please find enclosed a briefing on this program and a biographical sketch for your background. I look forward to participating in this review.

I understand that the USDA Assistant Secretary for Administration, Wardell Townsend, has made a request of the Department's Office of Civil Rights Enforcement to prepare a report addressing your requests outlined in your memo to the National Disability Policy Review Team, dated January 18, 1995.

Over the past 2 years, I have served by Secretary appointment, on the USDA Secretary's Senior Executive Advisory Committee on Disability Issues. In addition to the quality programs the USDA Forest Service has put into action, I am also aware of other Departmental programs. Do to the recent appointment, time does not permit me to personally see to the formulation of the Departmental response to your request. So I have enclosed some background materials on those programs and services at USDA which I feel are of high merit.

I hope this is useful, and again I look forward to serving my Acting Secretary in carrying out this assignment.

Ms. Carol Rasco

BIOGRAPHICAL BACKGROUND

Joe Meade

National Recreation Developed Sites and Accessibility Program Leader

Recreation, Heritage, and Wilderness Resources

In 1994, Joe Meade was selected as the USDA Forest Service's National Program Leader for Recreation Developed Sites, located in Washington, D.C. In addition, he continues to provide program leadership for Universal Designs for Accessibility, a program he reported to the Washington Office in 1991 to establish. In 1993, Joe was appointed by the Agency's Chief to serve on the Agency's highest level management team, Chief and Staff. He now serves on the USDA Secretary's Advisory Committee on Disability issues. Prior to joining the Recreation Staff in the Washington Office, he was the Public Affairs Officer and Forest Management team member on the Ochoco National Forest, Pacific Northwest Region. He began his career with the Forest Service in 1977 on the Deschutes National Forest, working in Interpretive Services, employed at a Forest Service visitor's center. Later, branching into Public Affairs, he served as an Assistant PAO and Forest Public Affairs Officer.

He is qualified as an Incident (fire) Information Officer, serving on a National Fire Team for 5 years and has been involved in a number of campaign assignments. He was appointed by the Governor of Oregon as chair of the State's Blind Commission, overseeing vocation rehabilitation and as representative on the State's Independent Living Council.

In 1994, Joe received the USDA Secretary's Honor Award for his efforts in establishing a highly successful Accessibility program. In 1986, Joe received the Presidential Award as the USDA's National Disabled Employee of the Year. He received a similar award from the State of Oregon in 1978.

Joe has two children: daughter Kami and son Jory. Prior to moving to Washington, D.C., they lived on a farm in Oregon and enjoyed horseback riding, camping, and snow skiing.

Most recently Joe has actively been working with the Architectural and Transportation Barriers Compliance Board and the National Ski Area Association collaboratively pioneering new Program and Service Delivery guidelines and construction guidelines, integrating accessibility into outdoor recreation developed sites, recreation trails, ski areas, facility developments, and in addressing the Americans With Disabilities Act requirements into associated Agency policies.

USDA FOREST SERVICE - ACCOMPLISHMENTS FY 1994

The mission of the Forest Service is captured in the phrase, "Caring for the Land and Serving the People." As set forth in law, the mission is to achieve quality land management under the sustainable multiple-use management concept to meet the diverse needs of people. The Forest service advocates a conservation ethic in promoting the health, productivity, diversity and beauty of the forests and associated lands while listening to people and responding to their diverse needs, one of which is access to the outdoors.

In response to the Forest Service's commitment to providing access to the outdoor environment the position of National Accessibility Program Leader was created. Joe Meade filled this position in 1990. Since that time the program has grown to include accessibility coordinators in all 9 regions, accessibility champions, and accessibility coordinators on most of the agency's forests. The philosophy behind the accessibility program is that of customer choice. This affords the customer dignity, independence and social integration.

Most outdoor recreationists have the freedom to choose the type of recreation activity they want, the setting they want it in, and the personal level of challenge they desire for a quality recreation experience. People are drawn to the national forests for different reasons. Some seek the solitude of the primitive backcountry; others seek, a rustic campsite nestled in the woods; still others seek, a social setting with convenient facilities. It is simply a matter of choice!

Yet, for millions of Americans, choices for a desired recreation experience are limited. Historically, recreation facilities and programs were created by traditional design for the "average" person, which usually excluded people with disabilities. Thus, many people have become conditioned to viewing the great outdoors as inaccessible.

Recreation uses and customer expectations have changed. Recreationists, land managers, and designers are recognizing that all people should have the opportunity to participate in outdoor recreation. In response to this, the USDA Forest Service established a public private partnership with Play and Learning in Adaptable Environments, Inc. PLAE is a multi-disciplinary, non-profit organization. Together the Forest Service and PLAE collaborated on and developed the award winning book, Universal Access to Outdoor Recreation: A Design Guide. This state-of-the-art design guide is breaking new ground in the area of accessibility by focusing on integrating universal design into all outdoor recreation environments.

The philosophy and guidelines presented in Universal Access to Outdoor Recreation relate customers' expectations and choices with accessibility. Just as people seek different recreation opportunities and experiences in the national forests, so do their expectations of accessibility vary. To ensure that a diversity of recreation settings and customer expectations are considered, the Forest Service and other natural resource management agencies use the Recreation Opportunity Spectrum (ROS), an innovative recreation management and planning tool that divides outdoor recreation settings and levels of accessibility into four broad categories: urban/rural (easier), roaded natural (moderate), semi-primitive (difficult), and primitive (most difficult).

The development of the design guide has provided critical information on design guidelines to Forest Service Landscape Architects, Engineers, and Recreation Managers to name a few. In addition to the provision of design standards it captures the philosophy of the accessibility initiative providing direction and further supporting the agency's commitment to access for all ages ability and cultures.

The need for programmatic access underscores the importance of ensuring that service providers are sensitive to the needs of persons with disabilities and understand the vital importance of providing this access. Training and exposure to the issues and concerns of universal access is critical. Universal design improves the program and service for everyone.

The following lists projects the Forest Service has been actively involved in over the past year:

- * Final development and production of the book, Universal Access to Outdoor Recreation: A Design Guide, in partnership with MIG Communications.

- * Training:

This year the Forest Service in conjunction with the University of Minnesota and Wilderness Inquiry will offer for the third year a comprehensive universal design shortcourse entitled Universal Design and the Outdoor Recreation Environment. The course is divided into seven curriculum modules designed to lead participants systematically through the concepts and skills needed to understand and utilize universal design principles.

Part I focuses on an introduction to major themes and concepts of universal design.

Part II focuses on removing attitudinal barriers with the objective being to develop a common understanding to the needs and interests of persons with disabilities.

Part III focuses on universal programs and services. This is designed to help the student understand the legal rationale for Universal Design, the conceptual framework for insuring equal program participation, and the applications of Universal Design for interpretive services.

Part IV presents a comprehensive over view of the Design Guide for Universal Access to Outdoor Recreation, and its relation to the Recreation Opportunity Spectrum, benefits-based management and customer expectations.

Part V provides participants with an opportunity to experience field applications of Universal Design in programs and activities.

Part VI emphasizes the specific application of the concepts and skills learned in the first half of the course.

Part VII concludes with a presentation of ideas and materials participants can use to take the principles of universal design back to their home regions or agencies.

 Outfitters and Guides:

The Forest Service has established a partnership with Wilderness Inquiry Inc., and America Outdoors, an association of trade outfitters. Through this challenge cost share agreement, the outfitter industry and the Federal public land management agencies are developing a handbook to assist outfitters and guides in providing universal access to their programs and services.

 Access Guidelines for the Ski Industry:

Currently the American Ski federation (AFS), and the National Ski Area Association (NSAA), have joined forces with the USDA Forest Service to collaboratively develop access guidelines for the ski industry. This effort reflects not only a legal response to requirements of the ADA, but also the industry's view that providing accessible facilities makes good business sense. Developing guidelines together will create workable solutions which focus on quality customer service.

 Accessing the Wilderness:

A partnership involving the National Council on Disability and Wilderness Inquiry Inc. produced a Congressionally mandated report on Wilderness Accessibility for People with Disabilities. This study, presented to the President and Congress, focused on lands managed under the National Wilderness Preservation System (NWPS). The report concluded that people with disabilities were as concerned with protecting the integrity of the wilderness as non-disabled individuals; accessibility should be a secondary consideration to the preservation and protection of the environment in the NWPS.

 Access Board:

For the past year Joe Meade has served as a member of the Recreation Access Advisory Committee. During that time period the Forest Service was actively involved on the Developed Outdoor Recreation Subcommittee in developing recommendations and guidelines. The ATBCB has published notice of the availability of the recreation guidelines in the Federal Register.

The Forest Service created and provided a comprehensive display on access to the outdoors for the awards banquet. This display reached approximately 300 of the chief CEO's of major recreation providers such as, Disney, Fleetwood, and Coleman.

 National Press Conference:

On June 15, 1994 a National Press Conference on Access to America's Great outdoors was sponsored by Assistant Secretary Jim Lyons, and the White House. This press conference introduced the book, "Universal Access to Outdoor Recreation: A Design Guide" to the public. The press conference went on to highlight the Forest Service's philosophy and commitment to universal design for accessibility in outdoor environments. An outgrowth of the conference has been a multitude of calls and letters, including the Washington Post and the Congress Universal Access Caucus, requesting additional information.

 Western Governor's Conference - June 1994:

During an event sponsored by the American Recreation Coalition the Forest Service had the opportunity to brief a group of western governors on universal design and the outdoor environment. Once again this served as an outlet to highlight and encourage a philosophy of access to the out of doors.

 Surveys and Transition Planning:

Over the past three years the Forest Service has been surveying it's near 15,000 developed sites for accessibility. This has included picnic areas, campgrounds, fishing facilities, equestrian facilities, visitor information facilities and many more. This information is being compiled and transition plans are being completed for each of the National Forest.

 Directory of Accessible Sites:

An outgrowth of the surveys and transition planning is that of a directory of accessible outdoor recreation sites. The directory is currently in the planning phase and will be available in FY 95.

 Catalogue of Universally Designed Products:

Plans are underway to develop a comprehensive catalogue of universally designed products for use in outdoor recreation and facility construction. Such a book is currently not available and is in high demand to meet the new design ethic.

NOTES:

JUDITH E. HEUMANN

ASSISTANT SECRETARY

OFFICE OF SPECIAL EDUCATION AND REHABILITATIVE SERVICES
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

On June 29, 1993, Judith E. Heumann was sworn in as President Clinton's assistant secretary for special education and rehabilitative services in the U.S. Department of Education. She took the oath of office in the Berkeley (California) City Council Chambers to acknowledge the city where the world's first independent living center and the world's first disability policy think tank, the World Institute on Disability (WID), were established. As deputy director, Heumann managed the independent living center from 1975 to 1982, and for ten years she served as vice president of WID, which she co-founded in 1983. From 1982 to 1983 Heumann was special assistant to the executive director of the California State Department of Rehabilitation, a position to which she was appointed by former Governor Jerry Brown.

Since having polio at the age of eighteen months, Judy Heumann has known discrimination firsthand. She was able to begin her career as a teacher in the New York City school system only after she sued the Board of Education, which had turned her down for a teaching position because she could not walk. One of the first to recognize that discrimination against disabled people was a civil rights issue, she has championed the cause of equality for disabled people around the nation and around the world. She has worked tirelessly to change laws, policy, and perceptions about people with disabilities. While serving on U.S. Senator Harrison Williams' staff, she helped develop legislation that became the Education for All Handicapped Children Act (P.L. 94-142) and worked on the development of regulations for Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act. Later, she helped draft federal and state legislation that led to the creation of more than 200 independent living centers nationwide. In 1979 Heumann was appointed by Governor Brown to serve on the California Commission on Special Education, a post she held until 1983. Recognized nationally and internationally as an advocate for self-determination for disabled people everywhere, Heumann has served on the boards of various organizations and received numerous awards, including the Henry B. Betts Award in 1990, in recognition of her outstanding efforts to improve the quality of life for people with disabilities. She also is a well-known authority and speaker on disability issues. With her appointment to the Office of Special Education and Rehabilitative Services (OSERS), this longtime activist is now in charge of federal programs serving almost six million disabled children, youth, and adults. Assistant Secretary Heumann manages a budget of over $5.5 billion and oversees the Office of Special Education Programs, the Rehabilitation Services Administration, and the National Institute on Disability and Rehabilitation Research. She has strongly committed herself to aligning these programs with President Clinton and Education Secretary Riley's agenda: to promote the inclusion, independence, and empowerment of disabled people throughout society.

JUDITH E. HEUMANN

Among Heumann's top priorities is to ensure that OSERS programs are more accessible to disabled individuals from minority and culturally diverse backgrounds. To increase the number of such applicants who receive OSERS research and training funds, she is opening up the peer review process and redirecting outreach activities. Heumann is also committed to program accountability and to spreading the word about model programs that work. Equally important, she is working with Department and Administration officials to ensure the full participation of disabled people in the Goals 2000: Educate America Act, school-to-work legislation, and other federal initiatives, and she is committed to education and rehabilitation reform in OSERS programs and priorities. To accomplish these goals, she is working to establish a dialogue with practitioners, family members, disabled people, and others. She encourages people to share their experiences, participate in public meetings, comment on proposed regulations, and become involved in the education, rehabilitation, and community reform movement.

Heumann pledges to do as much as she can to make the government and the nation see that disabled people are an integral part of the whole fabric of our country. "I will feel that I have accomplished my goal if we stop seeing the needs of disabled people as being special and different, and disabled people become integrated, productive members of our communities," she says. She has articulated her vision for OSERS as "working aggressively and collaboratively to create a society in which all disabled people can obtain the knowledge and skills necessary to achieve the goals they set for themselves."

Heumann graduated from Long Island University in 1969 and received a masters degree in public health administration from the University of California at Berkeley in 1975.

Judy Heumann lives in Washington, D.C. and is married to Jorge Pineda.

Biography

Roberta Achtenberg Assistant Secretary for Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity

Roberta Achtenberg was nominated by President Bill Clinton to be Assistant Secretary for Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity on February 2, 1993. She was confirmed by the U.S. Senate on May 24, 1993 and sworn into office on June 3, 1993.

Achtenberg is responsible for enforcing federal Fair Housing Law and for ensuring that HUD housing programs provide equal opportunity for all qualified Americans.

Prior to her appointment at HUD, Achtenberg served on the elected San Francisco Board of Supervisors. She chaired the board's Housing and Land Use Committee and the City Services Committee. She also represented San Francisco as a Director of the Bay Area Air Quality District, and she served on the San Francisco County Transportation Authority.

Achtenberg's efforts as a San Francisco legislator include the establishment of occupancy standards for city residential units to help prevent discrimination against families with children; enhanced protection against wrongful eviction of tenants; support of construction of affordable housing for low-income families; ensuring small business competition for city contracts; more effective compliance monitoring by the City Human Rights Commission, and the augmentation of job training programs to facilitate the transition of people from welfare to permanent employment.

Achtenberg led San Francisco's efforts to enhance CDBG funding for domestic violence shelters. She authored ordinances which improved safety and access for disabled persons, and led efforts for legislation that required developers to build child care facilities or to contribute to a child care fund for low-income families. In addition, her legislation provides monthly child care subsidies to graduates of job training programs. She also helped to secure a $10 million annual set aside to establish and administer a children's budget.

Before her 1990 election to the Board of Supervisors, Achtenberg worked more than 15 years as a civil rights attorney. She was a teaching fellow at Stanford Law School, directed the Lawyer Skills Training programs at the New College of California School of Law, and later became dean of that institution. She was a director of the San Francisco Neighborhood Legal Assistance Foundation, served as Executive Director of the National Center for Lesbian Rights, and was the directing attorney of the Lesbian Rights Project of Equal Rights Advocates, Inc.

Her honors include that of the 1989 Management Volunteer of the Year from the United Way of the Bay Area and the California State Senate's Woman of the Year award for the Third Senate District in 1993.

Achtenberg was born July 20, 1950, in Los Angeles. She received her B.A. from the University of California at Berkeley where she was a member of Phi Beta Kappa. She received her law degree from the University of Utah Law School where she was elected to the Order of the Coif.
