PRESIDENT WILLIAM J. CLINTON
RADIO ADDRESS ON CITIZEN SERVICE
THE WHITE HOUSE
JULY 25, 1997

Good morning. I am joined here at the White House by the young men of Boys Nation, an outstanding youth organization that has inspired thousands of people -- including myself -- to serve their country by serving in their communities.

I want to talk to you today about what we must do to make citizen service a part of every American's life, for his or her entire lifetime. As I said at the Presidents Service Summit this past April, the era of big government may be over, but the era of big citizenship must now begin. At that summit, thousands of Americans pledged their commitment to service.

As we prepare to go forward into the 21st Century, every one of us must join them, so we can meet our challenges and come together as one America.

For the past four and a half years, my administration has worked to give every American a chance to serve. We want to spark a renewed sense of obligation, a new sense of duty, and a new season of service all across America.

Of everything we have done to meet that challenge, I am proudest of AmeriCorps, our national service organization that has helped more than 70,000 young Americans all over the country to earn money for college while they serve their communities. AmeriCorps members do real work to address critical problems -- from cleaning up the environment, to helping at-risk children learn to read, to working with police to keep our streets safe, to helping our nation reach record levels of child immunization.

At the Service Summit I announced that our Administration would provide 50,000 new AmeriCorps scholarships over the next five years to organizations that offer young people the chance to serve. I am pleased to say today that 77 organizations have answered that challenge by offering to sponsor 10,000 new AmeriCorps members next year alone. And I thank those organizations for their commitment.

The success of AmeriCorps proves that citizen service works. And it is only one of the many things the national government is doing to work in partnership with citizens, businesses and civic groups. My Administration is busy following up on the commitments we made in Philadelphia at the Service Summit. This Fall, the Department of Agriculture will hold a food recovery summit that will help organize volunteers to distribute food to the needy. The Justice Department's new Mentoring Alliance will link children in need with volunteer mentors. And the Department of Health and Human Services' new partnership with the Girl Scouts of America will teach girls about the danger of drugs. In all these ways, we are committed to encouraging service throughout American life.

Commitment to community should be an ethic that our children learn as early as possible, so they carry it throughout their lives. That is why I have called on every state to make service a part of the curriculum in high school or even middle school. There are many creative ways to do this -- including giving students credit for service, incorporating service into course work, putting service on a student's transcript, or even requiring service, as Maryland does.

In addition to the AmeriCorps scholarship program we announced at the Service Summit, last year we took additional steps to encourage our young people to serve their communities in high school. We said we would offer $500 scholarships to high school juniors and seniors with the best record of service in their class if communities and private service organizations would match that amount.

Just one year later, I am proud to say that some of our nation's most prominent service organizations have answered that call. Today, I am pleased to announce that 1,600 high school students -- some of whom are here with me today -- will receive scholarships of up to $1,000 to pay for college. The American Legion, the Kiwanis Club, the Rotary Club, the Elks Club, the Lions Club, the Junior Leagues, and the Miss America Foundation -- community groups are the glue that hold America together. And now they are giving our young people another reason to give something back to our communities.

This is just the first year of the National Service Scholars program, and I know that next year it will be even bigger. Our goal is to make this program available in every high school, so that every high school principal in America can stand before a graduating class and announce the name of a National Service Scholar. And with the support of groups like those who have already committed to help, I am confident that we can make this happen.

Something very important to our nation happened at the President's Service Summit -- people from all walks of life looked beyond their differences and came together around the common goal of serving our country. This is the way we meet our challenges: business working together with government, religious and community groups joining forces, and people lending a hand to help one another. Today we are taking an important step to build on that progress.

The spirit of the Service Summit is stronger than ever -- and it is up to us to keep it alive.

Thanks for listening.

Draft

Fact Sheet on National Service Scholars Program (if we decide to do one)

Today ^C the President announced that ^{more than} 1,600 high school students have won $1,000 scholarships ^{college} under the first year of the National Service Scholars program. These scholarships recognize ~~students with outstanding records of community service.~~

Under the National Service Scholars program, which the President first called for a year ago in a speech at Penn State, high school principals around the country are invited to nominate the junior or senior who has the school's best record of service. The federal government puts up $500 toward each scholarship and challenges community groups and others to match that amount.

A wide variety of groups accepted the President's challenge and agreed to provide the matching funds. These include many of our nation's most prominent civic groups, including the Rotary, Lions, Elks (list to be vetted). Sallie Mae provide the match for all high schools in the District of Columbia. Minnesota's state legislature voted to provide funds for all high schools state-wide.

Noting the success of the program's first year, the President today challenged schools and communities across the nation to award scholarships to many more students next year, with the goal of instituting the program in every high school in America. The President's FY1998 budget included $10 million for this program next year, enough to take the program nation-wide.

As the President said, [insert quote from POTUS speech; ideally similar to Penn State quote that "We should make service to the community a part of every high school in America and a part of life of every dedicated citizen in the United States."]

[Ask Corporation for: paragraph with more description of how winners are selected and how they are getting the word out to schools and groups. Also I believe they have an advisory committee on this program with civic groups as members that they may want to mention]

Attending today's event are....

The Corporation for National Service administers the National Service Scholars program.

Note: If the President does a letter to every principal in the country telling them about the program, that should obviously be mentioned and quoted prominently in any fact sheet.

I Congratulate ...

Suggested speech outline for portions of the speech related to service/Summit

National Service Scholars portion:

- As we honor those of you here today from Girls Nation, I want to announce some good news that tells us even more about the ethic of citizenship and service among our young people today. About a year ago, I announced at Penn State that we would launch a new program that would challenge our schools and communities to recognize young people who serve. The plan was to award $1,000 college scholarships for high school juniors or seniors identified by their principals as having an outstanding record of service. We agreed that the federal government would put up $500 toward the scholarship and reverse challenge community groups and others to match that amount. Today, I'm happy to announce that 1,600 high school students are the recipients of these scholarships this year -- the first crop of National Service Scholars. Some of them are here in the audience today.

- I'm also pleased that so many have stepped forward to take up my challenge and provide matching funds for these scholarships. Many of our nation's most prominent civic groups have stepped forward, including the Rotary, Lions, Elks (list to be vetted). In addition, order the American Legion, the American Legion Auxiliary, the Miss America Foundation, and the PTA... (list to be further vetted). Sallie Mae agreed to provide the ~~match~~ match for all the publ. high schools in the District of Columbia. In Minnesota, the state legislature stepped up to the plate to provide funds for all high schools state-wide. The list goes on and on.
Over 1/3 more than $500
- This is just the first year of the National Service Scholars program, and I'm encouraged that next year it will be even bigger. Our goal is to take it to every high school in America. And I challenge more organizations like these here today to step forward and help young people who are committed to their communities to attend college. We'd be doing something else here, too -- we'd be helping to make service to the community part of the ethic of every high school in America. It should be a part of the life of every citizen in the United States.

Summit portion:

- Last April I took part in an extraordinary event in Philadelphia -- a Presidents' summit on service, ~~it~~ aimed at using service and volunteers to reach 2 million ~~additional~~ children at risk. The summit framed the goal in a unique and clear way. It said that every child in America needs 5 key resources to grow up to be a productive citizen. Those 5 resources a caring adult or mentor in their life; a healthy start; a safe place; a marketable skill through an effective education; and a chance to give back to their communities.

forget that give us the 10,000?
At the Summit, organizations and communities from around the country made commitments to be part of that effort. I announced that we would offer 50,000 new? AmeriCorps scholarships to ~~young people who serve~~. I was also pleased that federal agencies were able to make over 40 commitments to the Summit -- both through the volunteer time of their own employees and through the vital partnerships that federal agencies have with nonprofit groups and community organizations across the country.

over the next 5 yrs

- Now we face the challenge of taking the Summit's extraordinary energy and sustaining it so we can reach the goal of reaching 2 million more children. Communities, nonprofit groups, and corporations across the country are now working to follow through on their commitments -- the sometimes less glamorous work at hand.
- To complement the federal government's traditional role, my Administration is committed to developing and fostering partnerships that can help us meet the Summit's goal. For example:
 - 10,000 applications
In May, the Vice President announced that he would head up a partnership of civic organizations around the country who have agreed that their members will serve as mentors for families seeking to leave welfare for work.
 - An organization called the Welfare to Work Partnership (headed by Eli Segal, the first head of the AmeriCorps program) is mobilizing businesses to hire welfare recipients, so that those parents can move out of the welfare system and into the economic mainstream, and their children will have a better future.

- I know the Summit's efforts are moving forward this weekend at an event that my friend the Rev. Tony Campolo of Philadelphia has helped organize. He is part of an effort by the faith community to encourage service among young people. Thousands of young people are gathering on the Mall here in Washington this weekend who have pledged to serve their communities at least three hours a week for the next six months.

FYI: Text from the President's 5/96 speech at Penn State where he first announced this program:

"I challenge every community to help those high school students answer the call of service. Today I'm prepared to make an offer and challenge any school district or civic organization in the country to match it: If you will raise $500 to reward a high school student who has done significant work to help your community, the federal government will match your $500 and help that student go on to college. That would cost us, by the way, about $10 million if every high school in the country did it. It would be the best $10 million we ever spent. We would get hundreds of millions of dollars -- of improved quality of life and service to people as a result of it.

"This fall I'll announce the winners of a nationwide competition to identify schools that have done the best job in encouraging this kind of service. Students at those schools will become National Service Scholars. A year from now I want it to be even bigger. I want every principal in America to be able to stand up before a graduating class and announce the name of a National Service Scholar. We should make service to the community a part of every high school in America and a part of life of every dedicated citizen in the United States."

Highlights of Progress on Federal Agency Summit Commitments

- The Department of Education now has 380,000 tutors and learning partners reading with children this summer, and is well on its way to its goal of 450,000. The program is now working with 1.1 million children, with the goal of reaching 1.5 million by summer's end.
- This summer, AmeriCorps members are helping 8,000 pre-K to 3rd grade students with reading as part of 20 "Summer Reads" programs.
- USDA Secretary Dan Glickman is preparing to convene his department's National Summit on Food Recovery in September, to develop a national strategy to increase gleaned efforts by one-third by the year 2000.
- In May, Transportation Secretary Rodney Slater launched his department's new effort, the Garrett A. Morgan Technology & Transportation Futures program, in Cleveland, Ohio. The program's goal is to give one million students better math, science, and technology skills and information about careers in technology and transportation, through tutoring, mentoring, and educational curricula. 200 COS. could
- In June, the Attorney General kicked off the Department of Justice's new Youth Network in Baltimore, with the goal of providing a forum for young people and community organizations to exchange ideas on juvenile violence and delinquency prevention.
- This month, the Department of Justice gave out grants to 26 Drug Education for Youth (DEFY) summer camp sites that are now serving 900 children. DEFY promotes positive life choices for children between the ages of 9 and 12. After the summer program, the children will have mentors from the local U.S. Attorney's office, police department, or university.
- In May, DOJ and the Corporation for National Service held the first meeting of a new public/private mentoring alliance that will provide support for mentoring. people - DC mit 78 PG+ 78 PS in DC public school - fit per - mentoring - AS
- In June, HHS Secretary Shalala launched a new partnership between the Girl Scouts of the U.S.A. and the Department's Girl Power! public education campaign. This national program will teach Girl Scouts about the dangers of substance abuse and other risky behaviors. It features a new patch that Girl Scouts can earn by completing the program. one to one - mckenna/BS + Saucy Child
- Many agencies are "adopting" new schools. For example, the Social Security Administration has adopted ~~10~~ more schools. The Labor Department is now operating a new four-week summer academic enrichment program for D.C. public school students in partnership with the National Council of Negro Women. HHS - Ev Wills

Event memo:

You will also tape the radio address on service at that time, in which you will talk about the first year of the new National Service Scholars program and Administration progress since the Presidents' summit on service in April.

National Service Scholars: You will announce that over 1,600 high school students have won scholarships of at least $1,000 as part of the first year of the National Service Scholars program. These scholarships recognize students with outstanding records of community service. You first called for this program in a speech at Penn State in May 1996, challenging communities to raise at least $500 for their local high schools, which the federal government would then match. In the first year, a host of leading community organizations stepped forward to raise local scholarships, including the Kiwanis, Rotary, Lions, Dollars for Scholars, Seventh Day Adventists, Veterans of Foreign Wars, the American Legion, Elks, Women's Clubs, Masons, Soroptomists, and Junior Leagues. The Miss America Foundation committed to provide scholarships in every state. Sallie Mae provided the matching funds for every public high school in D.C. The Minnesota state legislature voted to fund the match for all high schools in that state. Each high school principal is invited to nominate a junior or senior for the scholarship. (It is interesting to note, in the context of Boys Nation, that 70% of the 1,683 scholarship winners are girls.)

You will urge all 20,000 high schools in the nation to participate next year. Congress appears fairly supportive of this program. The House Appropriations Committee recently voted to appropriate the full $10 million cost of taking it nation-wide. (A House floor amendment then cut all AmeriCorps programs in half, but the House is expected to reverse this in conference.) The Senate did not include it, but appears likely to agree to it in conference. The Corporation for National Service found funds internally for the $800,000 cost of this year's program. In fact, it had set aside $3 million for this purpose, which would have funded 6,000 scholarships, but the program got a somewhat late start.

Representatives of civic groups along with five scholarship winners will be in the audience for the Boys Nation event and the radio address taping. Our hope is that civic organizations will publicize this event in their newsletters and drum up even more support for this program next year.

Summit Follow-up: You will also talk about how we are continuing to move forward to reach the goals of the Philadelphia summit on service and give more children what they need to grow up to be productive citizens. You can announce that service and religious organizations have responded positively to your summit challenge that we would provide 50,000 new AmeriCorps scholarships over the next 5 years to organizations that offer young people the chance to serve. Already, 77 organizations have answered that challenge by offering to sponsor 10,000 new AmeriCorps members.

Other progress we can cite includes the Vice President's May announcement of a new partnership of civic organizations that will mentor families seeking to leave welfare for work; Eli Segal's Welfare to Work Partnership that is mobilizing businesses to hire welfare recipients, so that those parents can move into the economic mainstream and improve their children's future; your announcement last month that Kaiser Permanente will commit $100 million to provide health coverage for uninsured children in California, which complements the Administration's efforts to enact new legislation on children's health coverage; and federal agencies' efforts to implement the more than 40 commitments they made at the summit, including mentoring and tutoring and launching new partnerships with corporations and nonprofits.

Suggested speech outline for portions of the speech related to service/Summit

National Service Scholars portion:

- As we honor those of you here today from Girls Nation, I want to announce some good news that tells us even more about the ethic of citizenship and service among our young people today. About a year ago, I announced at Penn State that we would launch a new program that would challenge our schools and communities to recognize young people who serve. The plan was to award $1,000 college scholarships for high school juniors or seniors identified by their principals as having an outstanding record of service. We agreed that the federal government would put up $500 toward the scholarship and challenge community groups and others to match that amount. Today, I'm happy to announce that 1,600 high school students are the recipients of these scholarships this year -- the first crop of National Service Scholars. Some of them are here in the audience today.

Congratulate winners

- I'm also pleased that so many have stepped forward to take up my challenge and provide matching funds for these scholarships. Many of our nation's most prominent civic groups have stepped forward, including the Rotary, Lions, Elks (list to be vetted). In addition, the American Legion, the American Legion Auxiliary, the Miss America Foundation, and the PTA...(list to be further vetted). Sallie Mae agreed to provide the match for all the high schools in the District of Columbia. In Minnesota, the state legislature stepped up to the plate to provide funds for all high schools state-wide. The list goes on and on.
- This is just the first year of the National Service Scholars program, and I'm encouraged that next year it will be even bigger. Our goal is to take it to every high school in America. And I challenge more organizations like these here today to step forward and help young people who are committed to their communities to attend college. We'd be doing something else here, too -- we'd be helping to make service to the community part of the ethic of every high school in America. It should be a part of the life of every citizen in the United States.

Summit portion:

- Last April I took part in an extraordinary event in Philadelphia -- a Presidents' summit on service, all aimed at using service and volunteers to reach 2 million additional children at risk. The summit framed the goal in a unique and clear way. It said that every child in America needs 5 key resources to grow up to be a productive citizen. Those 5 resources a caring adult or mentor in their life; a healthy start; a safe place; a marketable skill through an effective education; and a chance to give back to their communities.

At the Summit, organizations and communities from around the country made commitments to be part of that effort. I announced that we would offer 50,000 new AmeriCorps scholarships to young people who serve. I was also pleased that federal agencies were able to make over 40 commitments to the Summit -- both through the volunteer time of their own employees and through the vital partnerships that federal agencies have with nonprofit groups and community organizations across the country.

- Now we face the challenge of taking the Summit's extraordinary energy and sustaining it so we can reach the goal of reaching 2 million more children. Communities, nonprofit groups, and corporations across the country are now working to follow through on their commitments -- the sometimes less glamorous work at hand.
- To complement the federal government's traditional role, my Administration is committed to developing and fostering partnerships that can help us meet the Summit's goal. For example:

- In May, the Vice President announced that he would head up a partnership of civic organizations around the country who have agreed that their members will serve as mentors for families seeking to leave welfare for work.

What I sent Jordan as summary radio address:

We are continuing to move forward to reach the goals of the Philadelphia summit on service and give more children what they need to grow up to be productive citizens. That summit was about what we can accomplish together as citizens, through service and volunteerism, to reach our goals (era of big government is over, but era of big citizenship/big challenges has begun).

Today I am announcing that in the first year of our new National Service Scholars program, we have given scholarships to over 1,600 high school students with outstanding records of service. I am pleased that civic groups have stepped forward to provide matching funds to recognize these young people. Other Administration followup efforts to the summit include:

At the summit, the President issued a challenge: we would provide 50,000 new AmeriCorps scholarships over the next 5 years to organizations that offer young people the chance to serve. Already, 77 religious and service organizations have answered that challenge by offering to sponsor 10,000 new AmeriCorps members.

In May, the Vice President announced he would head up a partnership of civic organizations around the country who have agreed that their members will serve as mentors for families seeking to leave welfare for work.

An organization called the Welfare to Work Partnership (headed by Eli Segal, the first head of the AmeriCorps program) is mobilizing businesses to hire welfare recipients, so that those parents can move out of the welfare system and into the economic mainstream, and their children will have a better future.

Last month Kaiser Permanente announced that it will commit $100 million over the next five years to provide health care coverage for uninsured children in California. This effort goes hand in hand with the Administration's efforts to enact new legislation on children's health coverage.

Federal agencies are following up to implement the more than 40 commitments they made at the summit. (Steve Silverman wants me to give more details here, which I am working on.)
