Dear, socks,

I heard you have a new playmate Buddy.

How do you like your new play mate?

Do you guys get along, because you a cat and he a dog and sometime cat's and dog's don't get along. How do like playing in that big beautiful yard behind the white house.

Dear Socks,

I love cats!! They are my very, very, ^{very} favorite animals.

I have one cat named Sonja. I used to have two, but we had to get rid of her. Her name is Shingai.

I have alot of cat stuff.
Want to know why? Because cats are so cute!

I am nine years old. My birthday is April 17. I'm in fourth grade and I go to school
at Oxford Street.

My hobbies are singing,
writing, gymnastics, and baking. What do you enjoy doing?

I was wondering if you could send me a picture of yourself. I would really appreciate it.

Great talking to you!

Sincerely,

Rebecca Wilkerson

Dear Socks:

On hearing the news about your new roommate, we wanted to write and offer our support. We had long since been saved from the streets and were quite content to live out the remainder of our nine lives with our human caretaker when she had a mini-mid-life crisis. The result was a now seventy-five pound Kuvasz named Sarah.

Please be assured that you will be able to train Buddy. While our initial efforts with Sarah were trying, to say the least, we are quite happy with the end result. As the puppy stage passed, so too the need for 'the claw' and, as a three year old, she understands quite well her duty to guard us with her life.

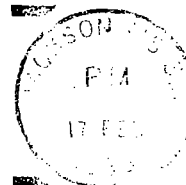

We are confident that you will be equally successful in your training efforts with Buddy. We would love to hear how things go and any 'war' stories you would like to share.

Sincerely,

Tux Pierce

Dear Sox,

how have you been lately? I hope that the first dog isn't causing you too many problems. Show him that you are boss if he starts being mean.

I sent a picture of my cat, Dudley for you. She is very nice, as long as you don't pick her up, and she is a wonderful companion. She wanted to say hello, wish you good health, and good luck in catching any mice or birds you may find.

I was wondering about your safety. When you go outside (if you do), how many secret service people come with for your protection? Does that inconvenience you or do you enjoy the attention? I don't know how I'd like being followed around and watched by secret service people.

Well, I hope you enjoy the letter and picture. I was hoping that you could send Dudley and I a picture of yourself. It would be greatly appreciated.

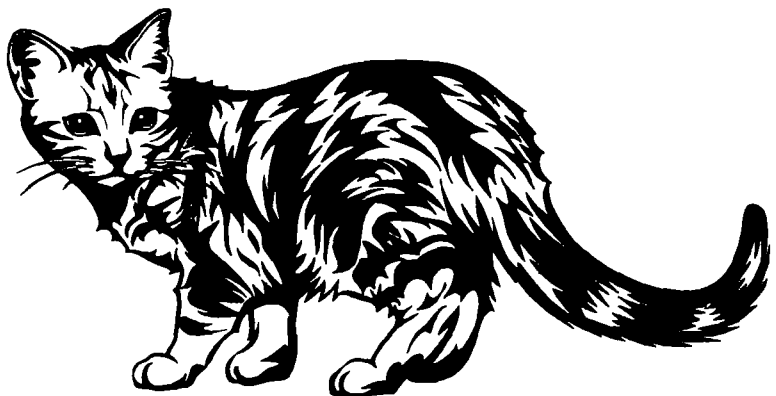

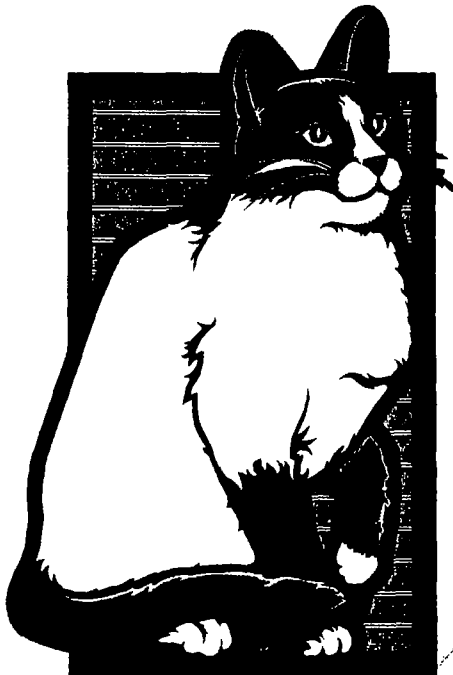

Sincerely,

THE FUTURE OF CUSTOMER SERVICE.

February 11, 1998

Socks Clinton
White House
1600 Pennsylvania Ave NW
Washington, DC 20500-0003

Dear Socks Clinton:

Remember consumer banking before ATMs? You had to do everything on the bank's terms: their hours, their locations, their long lines. Then banks with ATMs gave us the freedom to bank when and where we want, without lines or racing to beat closing hours. Banks that didn't take advantage of self-service technology started losing customers to the competition. Today, most businesses are in the pre-ATM state: force-fitting their customers into a costly and time-limited phone-support service model that is often slow and unsatisfying. Many executives will tell you there's no ATM-type solution for their business. In fact, they're wrong. (Someday soon, they may be dead wrong.)

The future of customer service is already taking shape on the World Wide Web. With self-service software from Inference Corporation, a growing number of companies are letting their customers serve themselves, ATM-style. Using plain English, people can ask and answer their own questions about products, services and support. Best of all, they can do it from anywhere, at any time, without human intervention. The information they get is always accurate, current and consistent. The business benefits include higher customer satisfaction and a lower cost per contact. That's why Gartner Group, Dataquest, Meta Group and others are predicting explosive growth in Web self-service solutions.

If you've visited the Inference-enabled Web sites of companies like Kenwood USA, Broderbund Software, or 3Com, you've got a sense of how Web self-service works. Now we'd like to give you the full story at a free, half-day seminar in the McLean area.

"The Future of Customer Service"
March 24, 1998; 8:00-11:30 a.m. at the Ritz-Carlton, Tysons Corner

We'll present the business case for Web self-service, show you the best self-service sites in action, and explain the processes and technologies used in implementing a Web self-service strategy. There is no cost to attend this unique event. Seating is limited, however, so I encourage you to register now by returning the attached response card. You can also use the phone, fax, E-mail or Web options detailed in the enclosed brochure.

I hope you can join us at this seminar and learn how a self-service solution from Inference Corporation can give your customers the same qualitative leap in service and support that ATMs brought to banking.

Sincerely,

Glen Vondrick
Senior Vice President
Americas and Far East Operations

P.S. Here's another reason to attend: you'll receive a complimentary copy of Knowledge Inc.'s executive report, Strengthening Relationships Through Knowledge-Based Technology.

JUST GIVE YOUR WEB SITE A JOB AS CUSTOMER SERVICE MANAGER.

With a Web self-service solution from Inference, you can serve more customers, better and faster, without increasing head count. That means you can keep growing your business—and your profits—faster than you're growing your support costs.

Inference software turns your Web site into an interactive customer service site that's easy and intuitive. Your customers can answer their own questions quickly and accurately, from anywhere, at any time. An Inference-enabled Web site provides current, complete, and consistent information every time, at a lower cost per transaction than with human service agents.

YOU SHOULD ATTEND IF YOU ARE A:

- CIO
- VP, Customer Service/Support
- VP, Online Services
- VP, Marketing
- VP, Sales
- Director, IT Support/Help Desk

WE'LL SHOW YOU HOW, AT A FREE SEMINAR.

If you would like to get the benefits of Web self-service for your business, plan to attend a free morning seminar "THE FUTURE OF CUSTOMER SERVICE". We'll show you how Web self-service works, analyze the competitive advantages it confers, and give you a practical model for assessing its potential in your business. We'll also show you some of the most successful Web self-service sites in action today—all enabled by Inference technology.

LEARN FROM THE LEADERS. Inference is the market leader in Web self-service, and we have the customers to prove it. Broderbund Software, for example, boosted its customer-service capacity the equivalent of 10 service reps—without spending $500,000 to hire them. PeopleSoft gave its fast-growing, remote computing workforce a self-service help desk that potentially saved $150,000 in support costs—in just the first six months. Without Inference self-service solutions, our customers would be keeping many more people on hold for phone support, or losing them to competitors who offered more responsive service.

RESERVE YOUR PLACE NOW!

 Space at this free seminar is limited, so contact Inference now to reserve your place:

8:00 a.m.
REGISTRATION AND WELCOME.

8:30 a.m.
THE FUTURE OF CUSTOMER SERVICE: When banks introduced ATMs, consumers gave up long lines and closing hours for the freedom to bank when and where they want. If your customers are waiting on hold for sales or customer service, you're at risk from competitors who allow people to serve themselves using the World Wide Web.

9:00 a.m.
HAS THE FUTURE ARRIVED ALREADY? Assess your own organization's need for Web self-service. If you meet one or more of five key criteria, Web self-service can help you improve customer service, reduce support costs, and enable business growth.

9:30 a.m.
COFFEE BREAK.

9:50 a.m.
LEADERS POINT THE WAY. Learn how five industry leaders—Broderbund Software, 3Com, PeopleSoft, Kenwood USA, and Symantec—made a business case for Web self-service, and how they measure their success.

10:30 a.m.
RETURN ON INVESTMENT: HOW BIG, HOW FAST? Few companies that tout Web self-service solutions will give you the whole story. Here's a practical, independent model for assessing the potential payback of Web self-service solutions.

11:00 a.m.
THE CRITICAL PATH: Get a clear picture of the process, technologies, and success factors involved in bringing Web self-service to your customers.

Bald Eagle (Haliaeetus leucocephalus)

Named for the white headfeathers that give it the appearance of baldness, an adult bald eagle can weigh from eight to thirteen pounds and have a wingspan of seven feet from tip to tip. Due to concerted conservation efforts, bald eagle populations in the lower 48 states have now been downlisted from "endangered" to "threatened" under the U.S. Endangered Species Act.

This card was created exclusively for WWF members and supporters – people who contribute to WWF's efforts to protect the abundance and diversity of plant and animal species that make up life on earth.

Nanking's story survives amnesia

By George F. Will

WASHINGTON — Something beautiful, an act of justice, is occurring in America today concerning something ugly that happened long ago and far away. The story speaks well of the author of the just act, and of the constituencies of conscience that leaven this nation of immigrants.

The rape of Nanking, a city of 1 million, by the Japanese army was perhaps the most appalling single episode of barbarism in a century replete with horrors. Yet it had been largely forgotten until Iris Chang made it her subject.

Her book "The Rape of Nanking: The Forgotten Holocaust of World War II" is refuting its subtitle. Already a bestseller in its 15th printing, it has stimulated seminars and conferences at Harvard, Yale, Princeton and many other places, and is assisting those honorable Japanese who are combating their country's officially enforced amnesia regarding what the Imperial Army did in December 1937 and January 1938.

Japanese soldiers murdered tens of thousands of surrendered Chinese soldiers, and almost certainly more than 300,000 noncombatants. (Civilian deaths at Hiroshima and Nagasaki totaled 210,000. Britain and France suffered a combined total of 169,000 civilian deaths from 1939 to 1945.) The Nanking killing continued for seven weeks in front of international witnesses, without any attempt at concealment, and with the sadism of recreational murder.

Chinese were used for bayonet practice and beheading contests. People were roasted alive, hung by their tongues from hooks, mutilated, drowned in icy ponds, buried up to their waists and then torn apart by German shepherds, buried up to their necks and run over by horses or tanks. In addition to pandemic rape by Japanese soldiers even of young children, some of them tied to beds or posts for days, fathers were forced to rape their daughters, sons their mothers.

In 1996 interest in Nanking's calamity was quickened by Chang's research, which led her to the descendants and diaries of John Rabe, the "Oskar Schindler of China." Rabe, who died in 1950, was a German businessman who lived in China from 1908 through 1938. A committed Nazi and leader of local Nazi activities, he nevertheless was one of a handful of foreigners who, at great risk to themselves in the welter of random violence, organized the "safety zone" that saved thousands of lives.

Chang, 29, who now lives with her husband in California's Silicon Valley, grew up in Urbana, Ill., and graduated from the University of Illinois, where her father is a physics professor and her mother is a microbiologist. Both parents were born in China — her father near Nanking, 11 months before the rape — and they first stimulated her interest in the historians' neglect of Nanking's martyrdom.

Cold War politics contributed to the neglect: Both China and the United States were solicitous of Japanese opinion, so too little was done to build a historical record by encouraging survivors to speak. And Japan compounded its crime by censorship. A certain, shall we say, understatement is customary in a country whose emperor, announcing surrender in August 1945, referred to the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki as developments "not necessarily to Japan's advantage." But something more sinister than cultural reticence explains resistance to candor about Nanking by portions of official Japan.

Senior politicians and officials have referred to the rape as "a lie," "a fabrication" and "just a part of war." Although Nanking fell with only slight Chinese army resistance, Japan's Ministry of Education rewrote one textbook to say, "The battle in Nanking was extremely severe. After Nanking fell, it was reported that the Japanese army killed and wounded many Chinese soldiers and civilians, thus drawing international criticism." The Japanese distributor of the film "The Last Emperor" cut the scene depicting Nanking's fate.

Fortunately, fresh interest in the untold history of World War II in Asia, and particularly China's suffering, was an indirect consequence of the Tiananmen Square massacre, which energized communities of Chinese origin around the world. Chang's book, the fruit of her training at the Johns Hopkins writing seminars, acquired early momentum from brisk sales in cities with large Chinese populations — San Francisco and Los Angeles, of course, but also Washington, Houston, Vancouver and Toronto. Sales quickly reached the critical mass that triggers self-sustaining word-of-mouth advertising among readers, reviewers and booksellers.

Justice delayed is not necessarily justice denied. Indeed, delayed justice can be especially luminous when rendered at a historical distance, leaving a truthful impress on humankind's memory. Elie Wiesel, Auschwitz survivor and Nobel laureate, says that to forget a holocaust is to kill twice. Because of Chang's book, the second rape of Nanking is ending.

George F. Will, a columnist for the Washington Post Writers Group, appears on this page every Sunday. Tomorrow's scheduled syndicated column will be by Richard Cohen.

Dogs demand their day

by Bolma Stiph / DAILY BISCUIT

Banned, barred and banished from numerous play areas, the local canine community has united in a drive to unearth a place they can call their own. "Dog Parks", a fairly recent phenomenon, are popping up in increasing numbers in North America, and local dog leaders feel the time is right to develop one for the Sunshine Coast.

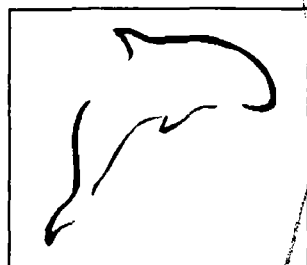

"Our constituents agree that it is long overdue. The goal is to provide a safe, secure place for dogs and their human companions to socialize and exercise together. The research shows that a well exercised human is a happier, healthier human,...and we enjoy it, too," remarked a local leader.

Official Dog Parks usually consist of a section of a public park area that has been completely fenced off and where dogs are allowed to play, unleashed, in the presence of their human companions. "I have a cousin in California who says that at the park he goes to, humans aren't allowed in unless they HAVE a dog. I never thought I'd hear of something coming out of California that made sense, but, hey, there's a first time for everything," a champion of the cause commented.

As enclosed play areas prevent off-leash dogs from infringing on the activities of other park users such as joggers, picnickers and children, they have proven popular with non-dog oriented groups as well.

Asked to comment on the idea, members of the feline community seemed perplexed by the whole issue. "Their mistake was acknowledging the concept of a leash in the first place," commented a relaxed Manx. "We never did." ■

—Pestilent Poisons—

Gardening season is here and with it the increased chance of accidental poisonings. Slug bait and rat poison can kill cherished family pets. So, how about trying more animal friendly methods of controlling pests this year?

For mice and rats, may we suggest a cat. They've got tons of experience. For slugs, nothing beats late night and early morning bucket patrols. Or, maybe a crop cover like Reemay to keep all the pests out of your garden. Ask at your local garden supply store.

There are lots of safe, non-toxic alternatives out there. For the sake of pets AND people, please check out what's available. ■

Your Stories

Back in the Spring of '75, my Lab, Rebecca, found an abandoned baby robin in our field alongside Kanaka Creek in Maple Ridge. We brought her home very gently as she was only a pink blob with a few pin feathers and a very wobbly head at this stage. We named her "Sweet Pea".

Sweet Pea
soaking up the sun rays.

Our first question was, what to feed this helpless, little creature? Canned dog food on the end of a toothpick was the answer. Within a few weeks Sweet Pea was flying in and around the house, returning home upon hearing our special whistle.

Sweet Pea would love to sit on my head to watch me prepare dinner and would often perch on the edge of the tub to share a bath with us. Her favourite sport was aiming for my husband's shaving mug. He wasn't too amused to find bird poo mixed in with the lather!

Our daughters would take turns digging worms to feed Sweet Pea and she would watch and learn. Eventually, Sweet Pea left with a band of robins and, by this time, was able to feed herself full of worms.

We moved away that winter, but the new owners of the house told us the following Spring about a very friendly robin who tapped at the window wanting to be let in. They had cats, so they didn't encourage her to stay.

Now again, years later, we have another robin tapping on our window wanting into our home on the Sunshine Coast. Could this be the reincarnation of our Sweet Pea?!
