THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

May 1, 1995

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

Jesse Souweine was a White House Intern in the Office of National AIDS Policy during the Spring of 1995. She has become a valuable asset to this office and I highly commend her integrity, initiative, and competency.

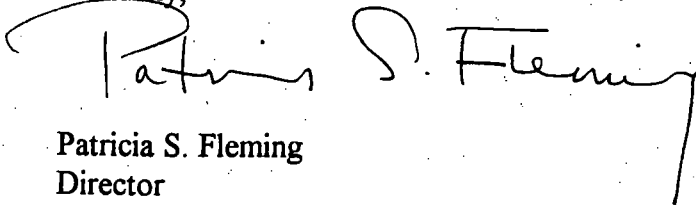

Jesse was an integral part of developing a report to the President on the status of HIV and AIDS in young people. She was able to translate the messages received from diverse youth constituencies into the policies and recommendations discussed in the report. The research and drafting that Jesse did for this project showed good analytical ability and an understanding of how the material would be read by various audiences. Completing this report also involved interacting with a wide range of professional and advocacy groups - a task which reflected Jesse's flexibility and ease in working with people.

I also appreciate the conscientious effort Jesse put into the other duties assigned to her. As liaison for the Federal Workplace HIV/AIDS Education Initiative, Jesse kept federal agencies aware of their resources and responsibilities under the Presidential directive that established this project. She also shared in the administrative tasks of the office, including drafting responses to correspondence addressed to myself or the President.

Jesse is an organized, efficient worker who frequently stayed late to finish an assignment. She has a professional attitude and worked hard with our other intern and her supervisors to complete tasks in a timely fashion. Jesse's ability to take a step back and look at the big picture has been a strength, and particularly vital with respect to the report to the President. She was able to keep her co-workers on task when the focus began to stray as well as take a macro look at detailed problems. Jesse has demonstrated a capability of thinking through a large project and organizing it effectively.

Therefore, it is my pleasure to highly recommend Jesse to any future employer or academic institution.

Sincerely,

Patricia S. Fleming
Director
Office of National AIDS Policy
