"U Can't Hurry Love" and Crew,

I would like to express a heartfelt thanks for the fantastic video. Your talent and commitment in the fight against AIDS uniquely came together to produce such a video. Video and similar forms of communication have been instrumental in bringing AIDS awareness to youth. As, you know, AIDS is a leading cause of death for adolescents. Education and awareness, like you video, are saving lives. Your efforts and commitment to your community are valuable and lifesaving.

Again, I commend your work and talent. Please, express my gratitude to those who have made this video and the work you do possible. You have become an example of how youth are becoming proactive to this common endeavor- stopping the spread of HIV/AIDS.

Sincerely,

Patricia S. Fleming

The female condom has been available for almost a year now. What's the verdict?

By Linda Carroll

UNTIL RECENTLY, if a woman wanted to protect herself from sexually transmitted diseases, she had to depend on her partner to wear the condom. But the female condom, which has been available in drug stores in the New York area since last summer, has changed all that.

"This is a device that the woman has an element of control over," said Dr. J. Courtland Robinson, an associate professor of gynecology and obstetrics at Johns Hopkins Medical School in Baltimore. "If the guy says he's not going to wear a condom, she now has the option of wearing hers."

New York area women who have been using the new contraceptive agreed. Besides that, they said in interviews, it actually feels better than the traditional male condom.

Of all, it works. A recent study found that the female condom is as effective as the traditional male condom in protecting against pregnancy and sexually transmitted dis-

Wisconsin Pharmaceutical, the maker, says sales are increasing but wouldn't give details.

The new device — a polyurethane sheath with a ring at either end — is not without its drawbacks. The Reality brand condom is significantly more expensive than a male condom; its insertion takes study and practice, and because part of the condom protrudes outside the vagina — it's designed that way so that it will completely cover the female genitalia and better protect against STDs — it may be a little off-putting to the man, at least in the beginning.

Nevertheless, some women are happy with the new product.

Debra Simmons, a 39-year-old Manhattan resident, said she now uses the female condom almost exclusively.

"I like it better than the male condom," Simmons said. "That's because I feel like I'm in control. If the guy says he won't wear a condom, it doesn't matter. This way I don't have to worry about getting pregnant or getting an STD. Because it's more durable, I don't have to worry about it breaking or tearing. I also like the fact that it protects my whole vagina. Basically, I just feel safer."

Simmons also likes the way the new condom feels. It heats up to body temperature faster than the traditional latex condom, she explained. "And it feels a little smoother."

Maria Sanders, a 29-year-old Bronx resident, agreed: "If you use a lot of lubricant, you really don't feel it at all." She works for Planned Parenthood and has experience with both types of condoms.

"Another advantage to the female condom is that you can insert it ahead of time, like the diaphragm," Sanders said. The maker says it can be worn for as long as eight hours before intercourse.

There have been complaints that the female condom "squeaks" when couples put it to use. But Sanders said this problem can be eliminated if more lubricant is used.

More women might use the female condom, she said, if its price were more comparable to that of the male condom. Right now, female condoms are selling for about $2.50 each.

But Sanders' guy isn't as glowing when he talks about the female condom. "They're okay," said George Thomas, 37. But, he cautioned, if it's the couple's first time, the female condom should wait.

"You have to get used to it," Thomas said. "The thing is so big."

If it's the first time, it might turn a man off. You don't really see the male condom once it's on." The external ring is 3 inches wide.

Some men appear to like Reality better, though.

Simmons said her boyfriend says he's happy with the female condom. "He said he feels better sensation, because it feels thinner," she added. "He likes them. He asks me if I'm going to wear 'one of those female things.'"

Sanders said she was a little concerned about the original studies on the female condom that said it was only 87 percent effective at preventing pregnancy.

More recently, however, a study followed 328 women, ages 18 to 40, from the United States and Latin America for six months. Overall, U.S. women had accidental pregnancy rates of 12.4 per 100.

women, the same as the male condom, while the Latin American women had rates of 22.2 per 100, North Carolina researchers reported in the American Journal of Public Health.

But when the researchers

Makers of Reality brand female condom say use of the product is increasing.

out women who admitted to using the new contraceptive sporadically, the pregnancy rates improved: 2.6 per 100 among U.S. women and 9.5 per 100 among the Latin American women. The researchers could not explain why pregnancy rates were higher among Latin American women.

By comparison, typical — as opposed to perfect — use of a cervical cap or diaphragm with spermicide results in accidental pregnancy 18 percent of the time.

One other problem with the female condom: It needs an operating manual, because insertion isn't obvious.

"We had a little trouble the first time because I didn't read the instructions," Sanders said. "But when I followed the instructions it went quicker."

Simmons said she used the female condom three times before she felt comfortable with it. ■
