MAJOR SCHOOL DESEGREGATION CASES (1954 - 1975)

FREEDOM of CHOICE

SUMMARY OF SCHOOL DESEGREGATION DECISIONS

A. Brown v. Board of Education (1954)

The landmark Supreme Court decision in the school desegregation area in this century was Brown v. Board of Education (of Topeka), decided in 1954. In Brown, the Supreme Court held that segregation in public schools on the basis of race, even though the physical facilities and other "tangible" factors may be equal, denies children of the minority group the equal protection of the laws in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. In the Brown decision, the Supreme Court did not prescribe any specific method for accomplishing desegregation.

B. Brown II (1955)

In a follow-up to its 1954 Brown decision, the Supreme Court in 1955 directed that desegregation proceed with "all deliberate speed."

C. "Freedom of Choice"

In the years immediately following Brown, from 1954 to 1964, the courts wrestled with the issue of appropriate remedies in cases of de jure segregation, finally concluding in a number of cases that the "freedom of choice" method of dismantling dual school systems was an acceptable approach. Under freedom of choice, school districts merely gave students -- black and white -- the choice of the schools they wished to attend. The result was a modest degree of desegregation, as some blacks elected to attend formerly white schools. However, rarely did whites choose to attend formerly black schools. The result was that only 1.2 percent of black students in the 11 southern states attended schools with whites in 1963-64.

D. Civil Rights Act of 1964 and Bradley Case

Shortly after passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Supreme Court stated in Bradley v. School Board of Richmond (1965) that "delays in desegregating school systems are no longer tolerable." The Civil Rights Act of 1964 provided additional support for the desegregation process through Titles IV and VI. Under Title IV, technical assistance may be given to applicant school boards in the preparation, adoption, and implementation of plans for desegregation of public schools. If efforts to secure a school district's voluntary desegregation failed, administrative enforcement proceedings under Title VI would be initiated.

E. Green Decision (1968)

In April 1968, HEW's Office for Civil Rights directed that, where freedom of choice plans had not effectively eliminated dual school systems, the systems should adopt plans that would accomplish this task. During that year, the Supreme Court strengthened the HEW position in deciding Green v. New Kent County School Board (Virginia). In Green, after noting that in many areas desegregation was not yet a reality, the Court said that the time for mere "deliberate speed" had run out. The Court held that where a freedom of choice assignment plan failed to effectively desegregate a school system, the system had to adopt a student assignment plan which "promised realistically to work now." This was the death knell since rarely, if ever, did freedom of choice result in effective school desegregation.

F. Alexander v. Holmes (1969)

In the summer of 1969, the Court decided Alexander v. Holmes County Board of Education (Mississippi), holding that school districts had a constitutional obligation to dismantle dual school systems "at once" and to operate now and hereafter as unitary systems. The Court, quoting from Green, reiterated its determination that school systems must develop desegregation plans that "promise realistically to work now." Thus, Alexander clearly reaffirmed the Court's position on the issue of timing in desegregation cases.

G. Busing - Swann v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Board of Education (1971)

In the spring of 1971, the Supreme Court handed down the first "busing" decision in the case of Swann v.

Charlotte-Mecklenburg Board of Education (North Carolina). In Swann, the Court held that:

1. desegregation plans could not be limited to the walk-in neighborhood school;
2. busing was a permissible tool for desegregation purposes; and,
3. busing would not be required if it "endangers the health or safety of children or significantly impinges on the educational process."

The Court also held that, while racial balance is not required by the Constitution, a District Court has discretion to use racial ratios as a starting point in shaping a remedy.

H. HEW Responsibilities to Enforce (1973)

The immediate desegregation mandate of Alexander and the insistence in Swann that schools having disproportionately minority enrollment were presumptively in violation were not acted upon by HEW, which permitted these districts to remain "under review." HEW attempted to secure compliance through persuasion and negotiation, and the Title VI enforcement mechanism fell into disuse. These conditions led to the initiation of Adams v. Richardson, in which HEW was charged with delinquency in desegregating public educational institutions that were receiving Federal funds.

This suit alleged that HEW had defaulted in the administration of its responsibilities under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The district court (District of Columbia) stated on February 16, 1973, that, where efforts to secure voluntary compliance with Title VI failed, the limited discretion of HEW officials was exhausted. Where negotiation and conciliation did not secure compliance, HEW officials were obliged to implement the provisions of the Title VI regulations: provide for a hearing; determine compliance or noncompliance; and, following a determination of noncompliance, terminate Federal financial assistance.

The district court's decision was modified and affirmed by the Court of Appeals (D.C. Circuit, 1973). Essentially, the district court order requires that HEW properly recognize its statutory obligations, ensuring that the policies it adopts and implements are consistent with those duties and not a negation of them.

I. Keyes - "Segregative Intent" (1973)

In June 1973, the Supreme Court rendered its decision in Keyes v. School District No. 1 (Denver, Colorado). This was the Court's first decision on the merits in a school desegregation case arising in a State which did not have an official policy of racial dualism in 1954. In Keyes, the Court held that where it could be demonstrated that a school board had acted with "segregative intent" to maintain or perpetuate a "dual school system" this was tantamount to de jure segregation in violation of the Constitution. A finding of de jure segregation as to one part of the system creates a presumption that segregative intent existed in the entire system and in such cases, the school board had "an affirmative duty to desegregate the entire system 'root and branch'".

J. Milliken - Cross District Busing (1974)

In its most recent ruling respecting school desegregation, Milliken v. Bradley (Detroit, Michigan), the Supreme Court refused to require busing between school districts absent a showing that there has been a constitutional violation within one district that produced a significant segregative effect in another district.
