In 1944, Weaver left the Federal Government and turned to education, especially to the financing of graduate study. He took a position with the John Hay Whitney Foundation as director of Opportunity Fellowships. These were grants made to promising black students to support them while they were earning advanced degrees and preparing for college teaching. Two other foundations and the Federal Government also consulted with him in respect to fellowships.

In 1955, Weaver went back to the field of housing, starting as Deputy State Rent Commissioner in New York and becoming Commissioner within a year. This position made him the first black member of a Governor's cabinet in New York. He next went to New York City as vice chairman of the city's Housing and Redevelopment Board, the agency which supervised urban renewal and middle-income housing programs.

At President Kennedy's request, Weaver returned to Washington in 1961, as head of the Housing and Home Finance Agency. For the next five years, he directed the Federal programs aimed at better housing and improved communities. Along the way he wrote four topflight books on labor, housing, and urban development.

In 1961, it was already clear that the country needed an executive department of housing. President Kennedy asked Congress to create one. The four-year delay before such a department was set up was due to two factors: the death of President Kennedy and the recognized fact that if the new department were set up the man who was best qualified to run it, the one man with the knowledge, experience, and ability, was a black man, Robert C. Weaver.

In 1965, the new department was created, and in January, 1966, President Johnson chose the one man to run it, Robert C. Weaver.

IN THE WHITE HOUSE

appointments

E. Frederic Morrow was the first black member of a President's White House staff. He was born in Hackensack, New Jersey, in 1909. After graduating from Bowdoin College in Maine, he earned a law degree at Rutgers. He then worked first for the National Urban League, next for the NAACP. In World War II, he held the rank of major. From 1949 to 1952, he was in the public affairs division of the Columbia Broadcasting System.

In 1952 he dropped everything to take part in General Eisenhower's Presidential campaign. He traveled over 100,000 miles going around the country making speeches. After General Eisenhower was elected, Morrow was appointed for a short time in the Department of Commerce. In later 1955, he was appointed Administrative Assistant to the President in the White House. He held the position for six years.

Morrow left the White House when President Eisenhower did. He first became vice president of the African-American Institute, a large, privately endowed foundation set up to improve this country's economic and cultural relations with the African states. His next move took him to the Pacific Coast, where he became the first black assistant vice president in the Bank of America, later becoming vice president in the New York City branch.

In 1963, Morrow published a book about his experiences entitled Black Man in the White House. In it, among other things, he tells about his tireless but unsuccessful efforts to make the Eisenhower Administration more active in the field of civil rights. He also expresses disappointment that, although he was consulted as a specialist on race relations, his very considerable knowledge in other areas was not recognized and drawn on.

The "Kennedy Years" began for Andrew T. Hatcher with a long distance phone call which reached him in Trinidad in the West Indies, May, 1960. The call came from John F. Kennedy's friend and associate, Peirre Salinger, and his first words were, "We need you to clinch the nomination." Salinger and Hatcher had worked together as newspapermen and were good friends. Salinger had chosen a good opener to persuade Hatcher to join him on the Kennedy team. Hatcher did join the team immediately, and he was a vital member of it as long as President Kennedy lived.

After the election, President Kennedy's first appointment going to a black man went to Andrew Hatcher, making him Associate White House Press Secretary. His friend Salinger was named Press Secretary a little later.

Andrew Hatcher was thirty-seven at this time. In addition to his newspaper work, he had been an Air Force officer and assistant labor commissioner of the state of California. On the White House press staff, reporting the President's views, correcting press misinterpretations, advising key officials of behind-the-scenes events, preparing press releases, and making advance arrangements for presidential visits, Andrew Hatcher was an official spokesman for the White House.

Immediately after President Nixon's election of 1968, he appointed Robert J. Brown of High Point, North Carolina, to the White House staff as a special assistant to the President. Robert Brown followed E. Frederic Morrow of the Eisenhower days as the second executive aide. and

"Bob" Brown attended Virginia Union A. and T. Universities. He began his employment as an agent in the Bureau of Narcotics, U.S. Treasury Department, and law enforcement officer with the High Point, North Carolina, police department. Energetic and fast-moving, this young man established his own public relations firm, B. and C. Associates, with important clients from nationally known business firms. He moved into this phase of "black capitalism," a profession in which blacks were becoming more successful since the 1950's. His additional business ventures made him the vice president of the Citizens' Housing Corporation, partner in the Harlem Freedom Associates land development firm, and president of the Friendly Leader Manufacturing Company, Inc. While he was serving on numerous civic boards in his city and state, the Governor of North Carolina appointed him to state-wide advisory positions, inclusive of two trusteeships—a college and a university.

All through his thirty-three years, Brown had demonstrated the private initiative which made American business successful. He was also an ardent supporter of the NAACP, Martin Luther King, and the YMCA of the two Carolinas. He concludes that in marches and sit-ins during the racial turmoil of the 1960's, "He paid his Dues." In 1964, he was given the Distinguished Service Award as the most outstanding young man in his city by the High Point Junior Chamber of Commerce of the Southern Region, and named one of the outstanding young men of America in 1965. Brown threw his public relations firm into the Nixon campaign in 1968. He began his new career with the new President.

ADMINISTRATIVELY CONFIDENTIAL

MEMORANDUM FOR: DONALD RUMSFELD
DICK CHENEY

THROUGH: BILL BAROODY, JR.

FROM: STAN SCOTT

SUBJECT: Recommendation of Philip J. Davis
for Congressional Relations Post

During the last several weeks, two significant meetings of Black Republicans were held in Washington. The first such session consisted of a large contingent of Black Republicans in attendance at the National Republican Leadership Conference; the second session was a meeting between you and the Council of Black Appointees, here at the White House. At both of these conferences, the need to include Blacks in top level positions within the Administration was thoroughly explored.

One matter which surfaced at the sessions was that a Black person has never been appointed as an Assistant Secretary for Congressional Relations in an executive agency department or, in fact, to the White House legislative liaison staff. It is in this regard, that I feel it necessary to bring this historical circumstance to your personal attention and, at the same time, to make a specific recommendation.

I am fully aware that any person placed in either of the above named posts must have related legislative experience. Fortunately, this Administration has such a person among its Black appointees.

Philip J. Davis, now serving as a Deputy Assistant Secretary of Labor, started on Capitol Hill in 1958 as a student intern in the office of former Rep. Howard W. Robison of New York. Upon his graduation from Howard University, Phil remained as a full-time assistant to the Congressman. He quickly became deeply involved in total congressional staff functions which included: liaison with the Executive Branch, constituent casework activities, legislative programs, research and, of course, reelection campaigns.

In 1966, after spending over eight years on the Hill, Mr. Davis returned to his hometown of Elmira, New York, to serve as Executive Director of the County Community Relations Office. This move was prompted by his desire to become more personally involved in local community affairs and further, gave him an opportunity to review, firsthand, the impact of Federal legislation upon the local municipality. On the local level, he was very active in numerous civic endeavors as well as local and statewide Republican politics. The Chamber of Commerce, in 1970, selected Phil as the Most Outstanding Young Man of the Year.

In 1971, Phil was sought out by former Secretary of Labor Jim Hodgson to return to Washington to serve as his legislative liaison officer. He was responsible for assisting in the coordination of departmental legislation in employment standards, occupational safety and health, manpower, international labor, labor-management relations and agency appropriations. As top assistant to Frederick L. Webber, now at Treasury, Phil was cited by Mr. Webber and Secretary Hodgson for his outstanding legislative performance and promoted to a Deputy Assistant Secretary.

In November, 1974 Phil was a candidate for the White House legislative office. His candidacy was supported by such legislative notables as Fred Webber, Bill Cliford, John Calkins, Howard Robison, Under Secretary Richard Schubert and Rep. James Hastings. Unfortunately, because of the limited number of vacancies, he was not selected. Presently, his name continues on the White House list of qualified people to head a top legislative office.

With our renewed commitment to broaden the base of our Party, a high appointment of this nature in Congressional Relations will certainly gain us some points and future meaningful results. The significant advantage to such an appointment is that it has never been done by any Administration. This is a first.

I understand that the top vacancies at Transportation, perhaps at Labor and possibly the White House Congressional staff are in the making. I strongly recommend that this appointment be made. I will gladly pass along any additional information if you are in need of such. Of course, I am available to discuss this matter further.
