II. MILITARY DEVELOPMENTS IN NORTH VIETNAM

1. Recent evidence shows that the level of infiltration has risen sharply during the past ten days.

[redacted] strongly suggests that at least 13 battalion-sized units approximately 7,500 troops, entered the infiltration pipeline in North Vietnam during the period. This rate is considerably higher than that noted during the first several days of January. Another four groups (about 1,600 men), which had previously been assumed to have started south before January, were positively identified this month in Laos.

3. The continued appearance of infiltration [redacted] in rough sequential order further strengthens the impression that [redacted] is providing a reliable basis for measuring the general level of infiltration activity. Altogether, the number of North Vietnamese combat troops believed to have entered the pipeline since late October now stands at over 28,000.

4. The Communists are continuing to assign the bulk of their new infiltrators to the southern portions of South Vietnam, probably including the Mekong Delta region. Most of these troops will be arriving at their destinations during February, March and April.
