MEMORANDUM FOR

HARRY DENT

An advance man, Vince ^XDeCain, is now working at the Post Office Department. Vince mentioned to me the other day that he was very much interested in being one of your political coordinators. I don't know what your situation is, but he is a likely candidate if you are in need.

Regardless, I'd appreciate it if you would have one of your people call him and at least tell him no if such an opportunity is not available.

Thank you very much.

THE WHITE HOUSE

January 6, 1970

Two great and traditional traits of the American character are the determination of people to work toward self-improvement, and the willingness of others to lend a helping hand in that effort.

I can think of no place where our whole-hearted encouragement of these two characteristics is needed more than in disadvantaged parts of our great urban centers.

We know that the most practical and effective kind of help we can offer is help in educating our inner-city young people.

The United States Post Office Department, in cooperation with the Office of Economic Opportunity and the Labor Department, has developed an approach to ghetto education that has great promise. The program will permit inner-city postal people to establish and staff Postal Academies.

These postal people will use their knowledge of the inner-city to help young people continue their education, even after they have dropped out of the established educational structure. By using resources already on hand to operate this program the Post Office Department can avoid the costly administrative hierarchy and staffing normally associated with the operation of such efforts.

The Postal Academy program will serve a vital need. It offers promise as a workable, effective means through which we can provide practical help for those who need it most.

Dear Mr. Hahn:

In the course of a distinguished career of forty-four years you have risen from the position of letter carrier to the highest councils of the Post Office Department. Your dedication to your profession and to America has been of great consequence to both. Your work and the recognition you have received reflect great honor upon yourself as upon the traditions of the Civil Service.

I want to extend my warmest congratulations to you on the occasion of your retirement and I join your many friends in wishing you every happiness in the years to come.

Sincerely,

Mr. August C. Hahn

Title Slide - Major Provisions of Postal Service Act of 1969

The Administration's bill for total postal reform is called the "Postal Service Act of 1969." It provides for the complete modernization of the postal service, in terms of its financing, its operations and its management structure.

Slide #1 - Organization

The Act provides for the creation of a new government agency known as the "United States Postal Service." It is a so-called corporate-form agency. It is not a private corporation, it is owned entirely by the federal Government. The Postal Service would have as its objective to become self-supporting, through economies in operation, within five years. (As you will see later, there is provision for continuing special "public service" mail, through Congressional funding.)

The Postal Service would be headed by a 9-man Board of Directors. Seven would be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, for 7-year overlapping terms. This arrangement - which is common in regulatory agencies - provides for continuity of top policy and the 7-year term goes a long way toward meeting one of the main objectives of postal reform, removing partisan politics from postal operations.

The seven public members of the Board would select a "chief executive officer" who would serve at their pleasure.

This is to confirm what I believe you already know -- that Harry Dent, Harry Flemming and I have concluded that any further pressing of Postmaster General Blount to become politically practical inside his Department would be not simply unproductive, but counter-productive.

We believe that this effort should await further progress on postal reform in the Congress. Dent and Flemming visited with Blount only last week and returned convinced even more strongly that this is an inappropriate time to discuss politics in any form with Blount.

I send this memorandum in relation to your message to me of mid-October on this subject.

Dear Mr. Lashley:

It is a pleasure to congratulate you on your retirement after 51 years in the Postal Service, one of the longest terms of duty in the history of the Post Office. The dedicated and faithful attention you have given to our country and the many friends you have made throughout your career must be a source of great satisfaction to you. I am pleased to join your colleagues and associates in wishing you the happiness you so richly deserve in the years ahead.

With my best wishes,

MEMORANDUM FOR JAMES HOLLAND
Post Office Department

Here is Mr. Morrison's letter in regard to Operation Amigo. I told his office after we talked that you would be in touch with him shortly to arrange a meeting in the United States where the Postmaster General of Ecuador could present the Operation
Amigo stamps to Postmaster General Blount.

Mr. Klein thinks this is a very worthwhile project which will result in highly favorable publicity. Would you send me a copy of any press release that is associated with the presentation?

Thank you.

Office of Herb Klein
White House
Washington, D. C.

Robert C. Odle, Jr.
Staff Assistant to the Director of Communications for the Executive Branch

I have four times with the Johnson Administration, was sent to El Salvador. I think we would just pick up the phone and get the answer immediately. It would be even easier under this Administration because of the Secretary's relationship with Copley and Operation Amigo's connection with the St. Anthony and the Rockefeller group. Nevertheless here is what we require.

The Salvadorian Government has bestowed one of the highest honors in Central America on the United States by issuing these Operation Amigo stamps.

A stamp which is on every letter going out of their country at present. As you know this takes a presidential decree and the obtaining of this stamp.

During the past nine years Operation Amigo has moved from a small student group from every part of Latin America to the United States and expanded the fare Interprise system at work. Operation Amigo has been in Latin America and as well as in the United States. The group has travelled to 32 states. Currently there are groups at the University of Denver, Springfield High School in Springfield, Massachusetts, Vetcher High School in Jacksonville, Florida, Marathon High School in Marathon, Florida, and two of these groups in the San Diego area.

President Nixon could obtain quite a bit of publicity in the United States if he would receive the Postmaster General of Ecuador in the White House.

With regard to the attached memorandum from Peter Flanigan on domestic satellites, I think you should know the following:

1. OS&T and CEA are in agreement with this policy direction.
2. General Lincoln, Director of OEP, agrees with this; however, his Director of Technical Management is in disagreement because they are in favor of more government regulation and monopolistic domination - a basic economic philosophical difference (I believe we should go with Lincoln).
3. The Justice Department has no problems on either the legal question or the anti-trust question.
4. The Post Office Department has been consulted with regard to their long-range plans and they find that this policy is acceptable.
5. Dean Birch has read the memorandum and okayed it.

In developing the policy, a very broad group including the Commerce Department, Department of Transportation, OEP, CEA, OS&T and the FCC was involved in the investigation of this subject and the subsequent recommended policy proposal.

It is my understanding that Senators Pastore and Scott have already approved it and that Congressman Springer and Staggers are being consulted with initial indications being that they will not object. It is possible that we will get some flak from the liberal side.

It is important that the two major communications companies be briefed prior to release. If possible, we could release it as early as Friday, January 23; therefore, an indication from you as to what to do early this afternoon would be helpful.

R.W.

Dear Mr. President:

I appreciate so much the first anniversary gift you gave to members of the Cabinet at the Blair House party.

The opportunity of serving in your Cabinet for the past year has been the outstanding experience of my life. It has not been without its full share of frustrations and disappointments, but the feeling of contribution far outweighs the price.

With kindest regards, I am

Sincerely,

Winton M. Blount

Dear Mr. Rush:

Your prompt action in saving a child from drowning has come to my attention and I want to commend you for your heroism. Your courageous deed is in the best tradition of America's mailmen, who have so frequently gone beyond the call of duty in the service of others. It is a pleasure to congratulate you and offer you my best wishes for the years ahead.

I have noted that every such account involves the nation's mailmen, who so frequently go beyond the call of duty to help others in distress, even at the risk of their own lives.

This is a proud tradition

Dear Red:

I feel that in the next six or eight weeks what we say with regard to the economy may really be every bit as important as what we do. A number of indices and indicators have begun to suggest that the sentiment among businessmen and consumers is going to be susceptible to what, in other times, might be considered insignificant pressures.

Therefore, I am requesting each of you to meet with those of your subordinates who have occasion to speak publicly on monetary or fiscal matters, budgetary matters, employment and unemployment and similar subjects which affect the economy. I ask that you impress upon them the delicacy of the situation and make clear that no public announcements on these subjects will be considered appropriate unless clearly within policy guidelines established by statements of mine or of Dr. McCracken and his associates. If any speech content (or publication content, for that matter) is in question, it should first be cleared with Dr. McCracken.

Sincerely,

RN_L

Dear Red:

On your birthday, I want to send you my warm congratulations as well as my appreciation for all your contributions to the success of our goals in the year gone by.

I want you to understand that my sending this note to you by special messenger has nothing to do with any mistrust of Washington mail or any lack of confidence in your Department. Nor is it because I couldn't decide which of the handsome new stamps you have issued to use on my envelope: I chose instead the stamp of my approval.

Pat joins me in the hope that this "Red" letter day will bring "first-class" satisfaction to a first-class friend and adviser -- and that all the returns are happy ones.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Housman:

I want to express my personal compliments and appreciation for your outstanding role in developing the Postal Academy Program.

I know that much work lies ahead for you and your associates to insure the success of this program, but the launching of such an innovative effort was a major achievement in itself, and I know that your vision and leadership were largely responsible.

REMARKS OF
POSTMASTER GENERAL WINTON M. BLOUNT
AT PRESS CONFERENCE
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TUESDAY, JANUARY 6, 1970 -- 11:00 A. M.

Secretary Shultz, Director Rumsfeld, Ladies and Gentlemen:

Thank you for joining us today.

Our purpose is to announce what I consider to be an exciting and imaginative program aimed at helping disadvantaged young people in the nation's ghettos to achieve a better life.

This is an action program which can provide hope for the large number of inner-city youths who drop out of established educational channels and, because of a lack of basic educational skills, are relegated to the ranks of the unemployed and underemployed.

The Postal Academy program, as we have named this project, is the result of a close cooperative effort between the Post Office Department, the Department of Labor, and the Office of Economic Opportunity. Secretary Shultz and Director Rumsfeld will assist in today's presentation.

This program has the full support of President Nixon. His interest in the disadvantaged young people has been an important catalyst in making the program a reality.

Last Spring the Assistant Postmaster General for Personnel, Ken Housman, described to me a program he had been involved with when he was with Union Carbide Corporation called the Street Academy program.

He felt it could be applicable at the Post Office Department. The more we talked about it the better it sounded and we concluded that we should test the basic concept -- that we had many thousands of people that worked for the Post Office Department who lived in the ghetto areas of our cities, who every day walked the ghetto streets and called on each home daily and who are respected in these areas, who had never been asked to help with the urban problem but would respond if asked to help.

So Mr. Housman devised a summer employment program to use with disadvantaged young people wherein we called for volunteers from the regularly employed Postal workers to serve as counsellors to these disadvantaged youths. The counsellor would recruit five disadvantaged youths and would work alongside them during the Summer, counselling them and helping them to get a meaningful work experience. We had 1800 volunteers work with 8200 youths with 94 per cent of them staying on all Summer. The program was an outstanding success. This proved to us that we did indeed have a unique asset that could be used. So we set about devising a program that could be utilized to help solve one of the great problems of this country and also be helpful to the Post Office Department in its great manpower problems.

We decided that we would have to have this program financed by other agencies in the main so that we could be sure the Postal system would receive at least as much benefit as it put into the program.

What we were doing in effect was taking a concept that had been proven -- the Street Academy idea -- and marrying that with the unique assets of the Post Office Department to produce more useful citizens of the dropout youths of our cities and to provide a potential source of highly motivated Postal employees.

So we approached the Office of Economic Opportunity on the theory that utilizing the Post Office Department in this program was experimental and in line with their new approach and that it was appropriate for them to finance a substantial part of this effort. Then we sought from the Department of Labor the balance of the funds from their Manpower Training Program. Without the outstanding cooperation of Secretary Shultz and Director Rumsfeld we could not have put this program together.

We know from careful studies that minority-group youths between the ages of 16 and 21, who live in ghetto areas of our great cities, lack employment skills and are dropouts from the established educational channels, are a primary source of permanent unemployment and a serious social problem. These youngsters need help if they are to gain the combination of educational skills and self-confidence that will enable them to support themselves and take their place as constructive citizens in our society.

This program is designed to provide that help.

Under this project, we will establish storefront postal academies in six cities at first. Local postal employees, familiar with ghetto conditions, will recruit students. Qualified volunteers from the postal system will be assigned on a full-time basis to teach in these academies. The curriculum will consist of the basic educational skills -- reading, writing and arithmetic. Students will hold part-time jobs in the Post Office to support them during their training. Our objective will be to channel academy graduates into higher institutions of learning, into post office positions, or into other jobs in the community.

The cities we have selected for pilot operations under the program are Washington, Newark, Atlanta, San Francisco, Detroit and Chicago. If the programs in these cities are successful, we will expand to other cities.

We estimate the six-city pilot program will cost $1,161,746 for 1970, including training costs for postal employees, rental of neighborhood storefront classrooms, and maintenance of small staffs of postal street workers who will counsel enrollees on a 24-hour-a-day basis.

Ten per cent of the cost of the pilot program will be borne by the Post Office Department, and we believe the number of graduates who will help alleviate manpower problems within the postal service will more than justify this investment. The other 90 per cent will be financed by the Office of Economic Opportunity and the Department of Labor.

The Postal Academy program will ultimately mean a savings in the cost of employment to the Post Office Department.

As you know, we now have approximately 23 per cent employee turnover per year. So by giving some of our own people an opportunity to improve their skills and obtain better postal jobs, we will have happier, more satisfied employees in that area.

As we go out and seek potential employees through the Postal Academies and upgrade their own educational levels and skills, they will become the type of permanent employees that the future postal service needs.

In other words, the upgrading of our own people and the seeking of more permanent type new employees can do nothing but decrease our employee turnover and our costs.

FOR RELEASE 11:30 A. M.
TUESDAY, JANUARY 6, 1970

GENERAL RELEASE NO. 2

A six city postal academy program to give remedial education and job opportunities to economically disadvantaged school dropouts aged 16 through 21 was unveiled today by Postmaster General Winton M. Blount.

In a joint Washington press conference, Postmaster General Blount, Labor Secretary George Shultz and Office of Economic Opportunity Director Rumsfeld announced the Post Office Department will establish postal academies in the ghettos of six cities to enable young school dropouts to attain basic educational skills, and to give educational help to postal employees who have been unable to qualify for advancement to clerk and carrier positions. The six cities are: Washington, D. C., Newark, New Jersey, Atlanta, Georgia; Chicago, Illinois; San Francisco, California, and Detroit, Michigan.

Financing for the program will be shared by the three Government agencies. Staffing and operation will be the responsibility of the Postal Service.

Local volunteer postal people, familiar with inner-city conditions, will recruit and train the disadvantaged youths on a full-time basis in store-front academies.

Those enrolled as students in the postal academies will include dropouts without employment as well as underemployed young men and women now working at low-level chores in postal installations.

"The Post Office Department has great potential in manpower, talent and structure to open new doors to the urban youth of America who have dropped out of school," Postmaster General Blount said.

"No other institution is so well situated and organized to do this job."

Among the Post Office's strongest assets are the fact that it is a multiple business operation in every city in the nation; employees walk every street, knocking on every door, many employees are known, trusted and respected by most individuals in or out of the ghetto; and employees walk daily in and out of every business establishment where employment opportunities exist.

Postal academies will be staffed by specially trained postal people familiar with the inner-city way of life.

The postal academy program is aimed at helping to upgrade disadvantaged youth educationally by providing basic skills, for instance, in the three R's.

The postal academies will teach these basic skills, while at the same time providing enrolled students with money-earning opportunities at nearby postal installations.

Upon completing basic courses, students can go to work at better jobs in post offices, can be placed in business and industry, or can continue their education further.

Under the six-city pilot program, the new postal academies will have graduated or commenced training of 2,100 dropouts by the end of Fiscal Year 1971. During this time, the academies will also be in the process of training 720 lower-level employees for higher paying jobs.

Kenneth A. Housman, Assistant Postmaster General for Personnel, was credited by Mr. Blount as the organizing force behind the new program. During the past summer, Mr. Housman enlisted the support of 1,660 volunteer postal counselors who took 8,250 inner-city youngsters in tow and successfully kept 94 per cent of them on the job all summer.

"The summer work experience of our Department, when volunteer postal counselors each took personal responsibility for five disadvantaged young people, convinced us that our postal people are anxious to help economically disadvantaged youth if they are permitted to do so. Now we are not only going to ask them -- we are also going to provide them with the help and facilities that will enable them to do a community job which they have shown they can and want to do, Mr. Housman said.

Cost of the new postal academy pilot program in six cities is estimated at $1,161,746 for Fiscal Year 1970, inclusive of training costs for postal employees, rental of neighborhood storefronts for instruction purposes, and maintenance of small staffs of postal street workers who will assist and counsel enrollees on a 24-hour-a-day basis. The program is jointly financed by the Post Office Department (10%) and the Department of Labor and the Office of Economic Opportunity (90%).

"The cost to the Post Office is justified because it is an excellent source for obtaining new employees as well as enabling large numbers of our fine present postal employees to advance within the service, the Postmaster General said.

After assessing the results of the six-city pilot program, the Department will consider further extension of the postal academy concept. Such expansion would permit postal academies to train thousands of young people and postal employees annually.

' The postal academy program in no way competes with established educational facilities, Mr. Blount said. ' The thing to remember is that the youngsters we are going to train are those who have dropped out of the normal stream of education -- they are living in the streets, largely unemployed, without the skills to satisfy their needs. The postal academies will give them a chance to work upward, right in their own neighborhoods, under the guidance of postal people who are old hands in the ghetto and who can speak the language of the underprivileged. '

Youths eligible for the postal academies must meet certain main qualifications. be at least 16 and not over 21 years of age, be recommended by a postal academy street worker; and have parental permission to attend, if under 18.

The postal academies in the six pilot cities will get under way in May 1970. The intervening months will be used to train postal people to handle the new operation, select candidates for training, and equip neighborhood storefronts which will serve as the academy sites in each of the six pilot studies.

THE PRESIDENT

x Washington The News Summary report that the Administration had not kept its postal pay commitments was based on a Joe^x Young article in the Star of January 22nd. It was erroneous.

On the following day the ^xWashington Daily News carried an accurate report that all seven AFL/CIO postal unions had agreed to the pay/reform package.

The Star article reflected concern that postal workers would not be included in a subsequent comparability pay raise for all Federal employees. This confusion was resolved after a number of meetings between Messrs. Ehrlichman, Colson, Cashen and Harlow with the Postmaster General. The budget includes postal employees in the comparability increase, thereby demonstrating that the Administration will honor its pay commitments made in December.

Robert J. Bryce Harlow is presently dealing with Chairman Dulski and Congressman^x Corbett of the House Committee to put the package in final form. There are still some dissident union elements and some unresolved issues. The^x Postal Clerk's Union presents the strongest opposition based primarily on their apprehension of collective bargaining and binding arbitration. The prospects, however, are still good. Sheddens J

Your meeting with James^x Rademacher, whose union represents half of the postal employees, contrary to the Star report, brought the unions in line. Admittedly, the other unions of lesser importance were initially irritated but it was essential to the strategy. Once Rademacher agreed, the others had to go along. Had all been present at the meeting, none of them could have made an agreement with us.

We have been working closely with the National Association of Letter Carriers. Their support has been critical to the progress we have made on Postal Reform. The NALC filed a complaint on September 11th with the Federal Trade Commission arguing that the Independent Postal System of America, which is based in Oklahoma, had a misleading title and would cause public confusion with the U.S. Postal System. It seems to me that they have a legitimate point. I don't wish to become involved in the merits, however, but would like to know the status of the complaint at the FTC. I would appreciate your finding out where it stands and what action the FTC intends to take, if any, so that I can report back to the NALC. Obviously, we don't want to interfere in a regulatory agency's work but in view of our special relationship with the NALC, I would like to at least be in a position to give them information.

Dear Mr. Postmaster General:

The President wishes to make available to government and certain other groups many of the facilities at the Western White House in San Clemente. While the area offers generally pleasant weather in a secluded, informal setting, the 10 fully-equipped offices, conference room, kitchen and dining rooms, private beach and bath house, helipad, and excellent communications system provide ideal conference accommodations for up to approximately 40 persons. (The attached sketches will give you a clearer picture of the complex and its geographical location on the southern California coast.) Of course, the costs of all transportation to and from the Western White House, billeting in any of several nearby motels, and whatever catering services are required must be borne by the sponsoring organizations.

Requests for use of the Western White House should be submitted to the Office of the Military Assistant to the President (Attention: Major John V. Brennan, Marine Corps Aide) -- at least three weeks in advance of desired dates of occupancy. When this is done we will make every effort to determine the President's travel plans, and respond to you within a 7-day period. Advice and assistance in logistical planning will be provided when needed.

President Richard M. Nixon

Dear President Nixon:

This past Saturday, January 31, Postmaster General Mr. Winton Blount was the keynote speaker at the Alabama Jaycees 1970 Governmental Affairs Seminar. This Seminar was attended by some 1000 Alabama Jaycees. I thought you would like to know that Mr. Blount's remarks were extremely well received by young men from every corner of our state. We are most appreciative of your selection of this outstanding Alabamian to serve in his present capacity. The inroads which you made through Mr. Blount will be most rewarding to you in the future.

Yours very truly,

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

The memorandum by Secretaries Romney, Stans, and Volpe and Postmaster General Blount states succinctly the case for the Administration's undertaking a more explicit program of wage and price guidance. They propose three things.

First, the President should request that wage and price increases in 1970 not exceed 75 percent of their 1969 increases (or the second half annual rate). (Construction wage settlements, which have been large, should be limited to the levels reached in other industries.)

Second, the President should appoint an advisory commission to review specific wage and price increases that exceed these objectives.

Third, Government agencies and departments should operate their procurement and other programs in line with prudent business practices as nearly as possible. The "bite" here would be holding up new contracts for projects if labor would be hired or materials purchased at wages or prices that had increased by more than the standard. } ✓

The Administration does have a problem of public relations and public attitudes on inflation. There is wide support for price and wage controls even in the business community. Lack of overt action (criticism of price increases, summoning businessmen and union leaders to Washington, etc.) subjects the Administration to the criticism of passivity and inattention to the most pressing economic problem of the day (i. e., rising prices and wages).

I do not believe the proposal offers a way out of the Administration's dilemma, which is to reassure the public of the soundness of the anti-inflation policy without embarking on a struggle with business and labor that cannot be won in a free economy. But I believe that some things can be done which, while less dramatic, would serve our purposes at less risk.

MEMORANDUM FOR

ED MORGAN

Just to make your day complete, during my phone conversation with John yesterday morning, he mentioned that there was some kind of Cabinet opposition to the proposed legislation on Emergency Public Interest Agreements. John couldn't quite remember who it was that was objecting, but seemed to think that it may be Red Blount and George Romney.

I thought you might want to point this out to Secretary Shultz and ask him to discuss this issue with them so that we can bring them out into the open now rather than having them try to shoot us down at the last possible minute.

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE SURVEY

February 19, 1970

1. First Term of the Nixon Administration

TO: President JEB S. MAGRUDER receive a high level of approval from the public for handling his responsibilities.
FROM: HENRY C. CASHEN II the majority of almost all population groups.

SUBJECT: Possible Subjects for Evaluation by Popular Poll

1. Best findings from this survey are:
With respect to our recent meeting, there are two issues with which a conclusive poll would be most helpful:

- (1) Removing the Post Office Department from the Federal Government and making it a private corporation;
- (2) The future of rail passenger service-- does the public really care if rail passenger service continues or not?

I would leave it to whomever is preparing the poll as to how these questions should be phrased. I would be most interested in the result of a fair and impartial question.

If you have any questions, please give me a call.
