LUNCH WITH REPUBLICAN WOMEN ELECTED OFFICIALS

DATE: Friday, January 13, 1984
LOCATION: State Dining Room
TIME: 12:00 noon

FROM: LEE VERSTANDIG/MARGARET TUTWILER

I. PURPOSE

To show support for Republican women elected officials from fourteen southern and southwestern states and to provide information on issues of concern to them.

II. BACKGROUND

This luncheon, followed by a photo opportunity with the President and Vice President, is part of the first in a series of five meetings designed by Maureen Reagan to bring together Republican women officeholders with members of the Administration. By the time the attendees meet with the President for lunch, they will have been briefed by the Vice President, Secretary Heckler, Secretary Regan and James A. Baker, III. After the luncheon, the briefing will continue and the attendees will hear from Secretary Bell, Secretary Dole and Secretary Pierce.

These meetings are designed to offer attendees an opportunity to acquire additional knowledge and a better understanding of the Administration's policies and programs. It will also offer an environment where attendees can express their opinion on national policy as it affects their states and areas of interest.

III. PARTICIPANTS

Approximately 85 Republican women officeholders from among the following states: Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Kansas, Kentucky, Missouri, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee and Texas.

Selected Cabinet Officials will also be attending the luncheon.

IV. PRESS PLAN

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: LUNCH WITH ELECTED GOP WOMEN OFFICIALS
FRIDAY, JANUARY 13, 1984

Good afternoon and welcome. It's a pleasure to have you all here and a real delight for me to see so many good friends and have the chance to make new ones. I'm glad the Vice President and Barbara Bush and Secretaries Elizabeth Dole, Don Regan, Terrel Bell, and Margaret Heckler were able to be with us. And I'm sure you're all as happy as I am that we have with us two of the most important women in my life -- Nancy and Maureen.

We also have with us some of the many extraordinarily capable women on the White House staff. I see women here from the White House personnel and legislative offices, and I must mention Trudy Morrison, who runs a program close to my heart -- the 50 States Project. I also see we've been joined by a few of the men on our staff -- in a crowd like this they sort of stand out. I don't have time to recognize everyone, but special thanks to Jim Baker for inviting you all here.

Now before I say anything else, let me give you Republican officeholders my heartfelt thanks for all the time and labor each of you has given to the cause that unites us. When all is said and done, it's not gloss and glitter, but effort and determination from people like you who make it possible for us to put our beliefs into practice. And all of you are especially important, because you demonstrate the Republican commitment to American women.

I was thinking on the way over about a story you may have heard. It seems a fellow had been in an accident and was lying on the sidewalk. As a crowd gathered around, a woman knelt to help him. Then a man burst through and said, "I'll take over. I've had training in First Aid." The woman stood up and watched for a moment. Then she said, "When you get to the part where you call for a doctor, I'm right here."

As women have taken on new roles in American society, the Republican Party has given them firm support. First the GOP gave its backing to women's suffrage. Then our party became the first to elect a woman to the United States Congress, and the only party ever to elect women to the United States Senate who were not first filling unexpired terms.

Today the two women in the Senate, my friends, Nancy Kassebaum and Paula Hawkins, are Republicans. And we have nine outstanding Republican women in the House of Representatives. Let me just ask Paula, "Wouldn't you like more company?"

In our Administration, we've appointed many women to positions of top responsibility -- women like our United Nations Ambassador, Jeane Kirkpatrick; our Secretary of Health and Human Services, Margaret Heckler; our Secretary of Transportation, Elizabeth Dole; and the many women on the White House staff with us today. And one of my proudest days in office was when I appointed Sandra Day O'Connor to be the first woman in history on the United States Supreme Court.

But just as important, today there are thousands of able Republican women like you serving in public office outside

Washington. You in State legislatures and other State and local offices are on the front lines of democracy. You have the chance to put your beliefs into practice close to the people that Washington just can't match. We look on you as our eyes and ears -- as leaders who truly know what the American people think and need. And just as we're eager to see the number of Republican women officeholders grow at the national level, we're also determined to see those numbers grow in every American town, city, and State.

Together, we Republicans are working to reshape America's destiny. And when historians write the story of these years, they'll find that skilled and talented women played vital roles.

Now I know you've already had a number of briefings today, and that this afternoon you'll hear about the Women's Program run by the Small Business Administration, projects at the Department of Agriculture, and the Women's Bureau at the Department of Labor. But if I could just take a moment, I'd like to give you an overview of our accomplishments since we took office.

Just 3 years ago, we inherited the worst economic mess in decades. Big taxing and spending had led to soaring inflation and interest rates. Government redtape had smothered productivity. In January 1981, inflation was in double digits, the prime rate was at its highest peak since the Civil War, and growth was disappearing.

When I think of what the Democrats had done to our economy, I remember the little boy who said, "Mother, you remember that jug you told me was passed down to us from generation to generation?"

"Yes," the mother said, "What about the jug?"

And the little boy answered, "This generation dropped it."

The broken economy hit women especially hard. Most elderly Americans living on fixed incomes are women, and these women found their purchasing power eaten up by inflation. Working women saw jobs become more and more scarce. Homemakers found that 12½ percent inflation made it harder and harder to buy groceries and pay the bills. And the thousands of women who wanted to start their own businesses saw 21 percent prime rates slam shut the doors of opportunity.

The American people were fed up, and they cleaned house. Our Administration moved in, and with Republicans in control of the Senate, we went to work to make a new beginning. We reduced the growth of Federal spending, pruned needless regulations, reduced personal income tax rates, and passed a historic reform called tax indexing that means Government can never again use inflation to profit at the people's expense.

To help all Americans achieve economic equality, we reduced the marriage tax penalty, almost doubled the maximum child care credit, increased the limits for I.R.A. and Keogh contributions, and eliminated estate taxes on family farms and businesses for surviving spouses.

Today, less than 3 years since we set our policies in place, our Nation has one big program to help every American man, woman, and child. It's called economic recovery.

The prime rate is almost half what it was when we took office. Inflation has plummeted by three-fourths to only about 3 percent during the past year. Factory orders, retail sales, and housing starts are up; the stock market has come back to life; and the American worker's real wages are rising.

Unemployment is still too high, but it's dropping fast. Last year more than 4 million Americans found jobs, and we had the steepest 12-month drop in the unemployment rate in three decades.

Since we took office, women have begun finding the economic opportunities they've deserved all along. With this recovery, you'll be glad to hear, the unemployment rate among adult women has dropped from 9.1 to 7.1 percent, and today more women have jobs than ever before in our Nation's history. The jobs women hold are getting better and better. In 1983, women filled almost three-quarters of all the new jobs in managerial, professional, and technical fields. The number of women-owned businesses is growing four times faster than those owned by men.

Just as we're turning the economy around, we're bringing a new sense of purpose and direction to American foreign policy. Today, the world knows once again that America stands for the political, religious, and economic freedom of humankind.

In Grenada, we set a nation free. With the help of the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America, we've worked to develop a new concensus to support democracy in that region. The peace process in Lebanon has been slow and painful, but there has been genuine progress toward the goals of internal stability and the withdrawal of all foreign forces.

In Europe, the NATO Alliance has held firm despite months of Soviet bluster. Sooner or later the Soviets will realize that arms reductions are in their interest. When they do, we'll be at the table waiting for them, ready to go on negotiating from strength and in good faith. I'm convinced that because we've strengthened our defenses and shown the world our willingness to negotiate, the prospects for lasting world peace are better than they have been in many years.

All of us share a dream. It's a dream of a broad and open land that offers prosperity to all. It's a dream of a great country that represents a force for peace and goodwill among nations. It's a dream of a land where every citizen is judged not according to color, religion or sex, but on the sole basis of individual merit -- a land where every woman and man is free to become all she or he can. And come to think of it, I wouldn't be surprised if someday soon one of you had my job.

All of us are laboring in the name of that dream. Yes, we will suffer setbacks. And, yes, others will do all they can to place obstacles in our path. But if we have the courage to do all that we can to make our dream come true, then we will achieve great good in this world and do our duty to our country.

Thank you, and God bless you all.
