Other remarks: Object of agency was to make researches and get information on industrial & economic secrets. Most successful & contacts so good that Reichswehr made more & more use of him until (under the Nazis) he became head of their intelligence service & was made Adm. During Weimar Republic remained entirely independent & used his enormous collection of discreet and secret knowledge for his own purposes, blackmailing wherever it served his own advantage. Feared by everybody in power & considered the most dangerous & mysterious wire-puller behind the scenes, which brought him the nickname "Canaille". Hard seen in all political intrigues, though he stayed in background & avoided publicity. One of early pupils and confidentials was a young Navy Lieut., REINHOLD HEYDRICH, who after his dismissal became full-flung collaborator. Hence, Canaris' contacts with Gestapo. Has a definite hatred of the traditional generals & it seems more than likely that in case of a serious conflict between Nazis and militarists, he would be found playing the former's game.
