a. Including losses claimed and admitted for June 26-30.

German losses on the Russian front said by Moscow to have numbered 2,300 planes in three weeks of war. German admissions of plane casualties on this front amount to a total of 150 as of July 1st, and a further 21 on July 5th and 6th.

The Russians admit losing 1,900 planes in three weeks of war, while Berlin claims the destruction of 6,233 as of July 10th. The possibility that many of the Soviet planes claimed by Germany may have been partially dismantled obsolete aircraft, left as lures on Russian airfields, cannot now be evaluated.

Italian communiques admit the loss of one airplane in the first ten days of July, and claim the destruction of 19 British. The British claim to have destroyed 8 Italian.

Vichy French dispatches admit the loss of one plane in Syria, and claim the destruction of 21 British. British communiques specify 34 French planes destroyed in Syria in the ten-day period.

The Finns admit the loss of 4 aircraft to the Russians, and claim they had accounted for a total of 73 Soviet planes as of July 9th.
