^Thousands of Liberians flee as rebels fight government troops outside capital

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) Thousands of terrified Liberians fled the battle zone through pounding rain and rising floodwaters Friday as President Charles Taylor's forces fought to hold the capital against advancing rebels.

Residents streamed out of Monrovia suburb of Virginia, on the Atlantic Ocean coast, which was rocked throughout the day by gunfire and explosions. Refugees deserted camps around the capital already taken by the rebels, fearful of what the insurgents might bring.

"I have never seen good rebels," said James Siryon Cooper, rain streaming down his face as he clutched the hand of his 3-year-old son. "Rebels are rebels."

Liberia's main rebel movement recently has swept south toward the capital, Monrovia, pressing to take the city and drive out Taylor, who was indicted this week on war crimes by an international tribunal in Sierra Leone for his involvement in a 10-year war there.

All seven camps ringing the capital _ housing some 115,000 displaced people _ are now under the control of insurgents, sparking a mass exodus, World Food Program spokesman Ramin Rafirasme said in Dakar, Senegal.

"People are fleeing in all directions. Loads of people. Thousands or tens of thousands. We can't quantify them," Rafirasme said. "The situation remains highly volatile."

Fighting raged even as West African mediators said they had secured a promise from rebel delegates in Ghana to lay down their arms so peace talks could proceed.

"They have agreed to our concerns ... not to let the humanitarian situation get out of hand and they have promised to ask their colleagues back in Liberia to cease fire," said Mohammed Ibn Chambas, executive secretary of the regional bloc mediating the talks.

The government delegation also recommitted itself to the negotiations, he said.

Talks were scheduled to continue Monday.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Richard Boucher called for ending the fighting, establishing a new transitional government and holding elections.

The United States, he said, "remains committed to the ongoing reconciliation and cease-fire talks. We expect no less of a commitment from the government and the rebels."

About 600 rebels attacked Virginia at dawn Friday, said Defense Minister Daniel Chea, wearing military fatigues and a bulletproof vest. At least five government soldiers and about 20 rebels were killed, Chea told reporters before jumping into a vehicle headed to the front.

Those figures could not be verified independently. At least two bloodied government fighters were seen being loaded onto the backs of trucks and driven from the front.

A band of insurgents briefly crossed the bridge over the St. Paul's river marking Monrovia's outer boundary, but government forces drove them back, Assistant Defense Minister Philipbert Brown said. By nightfall, the sounds of fighting subsided.

Civilians battling rising water to escape the area said they feared being caught behind rebel lines.

"We have every cause to run," cried Martha Wilson, 38, a baby strapped to her back and foam mattresses balanced on her head. "We don't know the rebels."

The rebel group Liberians United for Reconciliation and Democracy, or LURD, has battled since 1999 to oust Taylor, who was elected president in 1997, a year after a devastating seven-year civil war ended.

Taylor sparked Liberia's war in 1989 with a failed coup attempt and emerged from the conflict as the strongest warlord.

The war killed hundreds of thousands in Liberia, a nation founded by freed American slaves in the 19th century.

Despite the latest clashes, Taylor's negotiators and LURD representative s met with mediators Friday in Ghana for peace negotiations. A newly emerged rebel group based in Liberia's southeast did not attend.

Taylor was in Ghana on Wednesday for the opening of the talks when the joint U.N.-Sierra Leone court unveiled its indictment accusing him of trafficking guns and diamonds with Sierra Leonean rebels, who killed, raped, kidnapped and maimed tens of thousands of civilians. Taylor was accused of "bearing the greatest responsibility" for the terror campaign.

Taylor returned to Monrovia that day an international fugitive. There was no apparent attempt by Ghanaian authorities to arrest him.

On Thursday, Taylor said a coup attempt, supported by unidentified embassies, occurred while he visited Ghana. Vice President Moses Blah and two of his bodyguards were detained in the attempt.

American officials strongly denied a reported claim by Blah that the U.S. Embassy urged him to take control in Taylor's absence.
