

Dear Supporter,

Our opponents are worried.

Why else would they already be running ads attacking our bill to create a carbon pollution market program and make polluters pay? Groups like the National Federation of Independent Businesses are doing everything they can to stop this crucial first step to reducing carbon emissions -- even questioning our grassroots support.

But we are moving forward. Today, the Washington State House of Representatives is holding a public hearing on HB 1314, a bill that would hold Washington's largest polluters accountable.

This is our opportunity. We need to prove that Washington has what it takes to lead this transition to a clean energy economy. That's why activists with Washington Conservation Voters are stepping up and joining me to show their support for this bill. Will you join us and show that Washington is ready to take this important step?

Last year, I issued an executive order that set in motion an ambitious plan for Washington's clean energy future. This plan -- covering everything from carbon reduction to clean fuels and energy efficiency -- will set Washington on a proven path to reducing carbon emissions.

Passing HB 1314 is the first step. We have an opportunity, right now, to lead the transition to a clean energy economy by creating a carbon pollution market program.

But make no mistake: We will be attacked at every step in this process. We can't let these groups stall our progress.

That's why it's so important that, right now, we show that Washingtonians support our transition to a clean energy future.

Thanks for standing with us. Together we're building a clean energy future for Washington.

Very truly yours,

Jay Inslee
