

November 3, 2015

Dear Senator:

On behalf of the National Federation of Independent Business (NFIB), the nation's leading small business advocacy organization, I am writing you in strong support of S.J. Res. 22, a Congressional Review Act resolution of disapproval in response to the problematic Waters of the United States rule. This legislation would provide relief for small businesses by nullifying this burdensome regulation. A vote on final passage of S.J. Res. 22 will be considered an NFIB Key Vote for the 114th Congress.

Unfortunately, the Senate recently failed to achieve sufficient support for The Federal Water Quality Protection Act (S. 1140), a bill to send the Environmental Protection Agency and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (the Agencies) back to the drawing board on this flawed regulation. Because of the urgency with which small businesses need relief from this harmful regulation, NFIB is pleased the Senate has brought up S.J. Res 22.

In a regulation finalized on May 27, 2015, the Agencies changed the definition of waters of the United States in such a way that vastly expands the federal government's authority over private landowners, including small businesses. Under this new regulation, land formations that only fill and hold water during heavy rain would be regulated if the Agencies determine that these formations affect the quality of downstream navigable waters.

When Congress granted the Agencies the authority to define waters of the United States in the 1970s, it was clear that the intent was for the Agencies to protect navigable waters, not every drop of water that might eventually end up in a navigable water. As a result of this new regulation, the Agencies are bringing seasonal streams, ponds, ditches, and depressions in fields into federal jurisdiction. The financial impact of this rule will affect small businesses disproportionately; Clean Water Act permits can cost tens of thousands of dollars and lead to lengthy project delays.

Despite claims by the Agencies, the regulation will only increase uncertainty. The rule still requires the Agencies to determine on a case-by-case basis whether many common land formations fall under federal jurisdiction. Often, this determination does not occur until after substantial investments and planning by a small business have taken place – thus chilling investment and expansion. Small businesses cannot be speculative with their resources and capital.

In addition, the Agencies failed to adequately analyze the rule under the Regulatory Flexibility Act. This law requires EPA to conduct a Small Business Advocacy Review panel when a rule will have a significant economic impact on a substantial number of small entities. In this case, EPA incorrectly certified that the rule will not have a small business impact.

NFIB strongly supports this commonsense legislation that will ensure that the property rights of small business owners are upheld. NFIB urges the Senate to pass S.J. Res. 22 and will consider it an NFIB Key Vote for the 114th Congress.

Sincerely,
