Elizabethtown College Uses New System to Recycle Food Waste

Elizabethtown College in Lancaster County has partnered with local neighborhood businesses to reduce landfill waste, save water and promote a positive community relationship. The college is now "turning food scraps into dollars" with the installation of an environmentally-friendly pulper system designed by the local Somat Co. Organic waste from the college's dining halls is used in a local farm's methane digester to create electricity.

Chatham University Announces Plans for New Campus

Chatham University announced the launch of its multi-year Eden Hall Campus Master Plan. The campus will be constructed on 388 acres and serve as a new home to the university's School of Sustainability and the Environment. The plan includes climate-positive buildings, sustainable landscape design, an abundance of open space and offsetting of on-site greenhouse gas emissions.

National Wildlife Federation Seeks Young Leader Delegates

The National Wildlife Federation is accepting applications from high school and college students who are "passionate about conservation and sustainability" to serve as delegates for its Young Leaders Charter Assembly. The assembly is held in conjunction with the NWF's annual meeting April 13-16 in Washington DC. Selected delegates will draft a charter that will govern the engagement of young leaders working with NWF and its sister organizations. Application deadline is Feb. 7.
