2 Corinthians 6:14-7:1 NRSV | Written by Rev. Dr. Alf Halvorson

This is the 12th message in our fall series using Paul’s second letter to the Corinthians to consider our own Christian lives, how we can avoid some of their errors, and how to apply the Good News in our own time and place. Today we come upon a text that seems ill-fitted for the Sunday before Christmas; that may be, but, amid seemingly insensitive comments, Paul drops some of the most profound words ever penned about the incarnation (the coming in the flesh of Jesus the Christ) and how we, in the end, become temples of the living God.

1. What are you most excited about regarding Christmas this year? Are you anxious or worried or fearful of anything? Is there a relationship that could add great joy or profound sadness depending on how things go? Where do you have choices? And where do you not?
2. Read 2 Cor. 6:14-7:1. If verse 14 means “do not be unequally yoked with unbelievers,” or “don’t put an ox and a donkey together to try to plow a field,” what do you think Paul is getting at with this image regarding the life of faith?
3. In verses 14b-16a, Paul asks five rhetorical questions to try to cement his argument that there are some things that fundamentally just don’t go together, like oil and water. How do you answer each of his five questions? And with verses 6:17-7:1, what is Paul arguing here? Why can separation from (the opposite of where you want to go) be a blessing or grace?
4. The one Christmas section in this passage seems to be vs. 16b, “For we are the temple of the living God; as God said, “I will live in them and walk among them; and I will be their God, and they shall be My people.” Why is that such Good News?
5. I talked about the incarnation in my message; that God comes in the flesh, and dwells among us, and even lives within us as we become temples of the living God. I shared a few images to try to make the point of how profound and staggering and amazing that news is. What point or image or phrase hit you this year? Why and how might it alter your life in some positive way, knowing you are not alone, but God is with you?
6. How might you, as the great Christmas carol “Joy to the World” says, prepare Him room this Christmas?
