PASTOR'S PEACE by Rev. Dr. Fred Garry

Do this in memory of me.

Wherever the gospel is preached it will be done in memory of her.

They set up twelve stones so as to remember: we were slaves in Egypt.

As Protestants in the 21st century, we now enjoy a 500-year legacy. We have been protesting for half a millennia. Given such a huge amount of time, it may be hard to remember what we were so upset about in the 16th century.

As Americans near the 250th anniversary of the United States, we have nearly a quarter of millennia of history and union and a shared destiny. We have been about the process of democracy and civil rights for quite some time. Looking back we can see some successes and some failures.

It's hard to fathom time once we get beyond our lived experience. Can we really comprehend what it must have been like to leave the small towns of southeastern England in the 1640s and sail across the Atlantic in a leaky boat to start a new life in the Massachusetts Bay Colony? Can we step into the shoes of someone who was born 400 years ago?

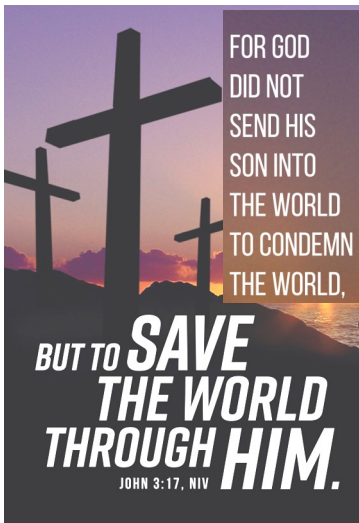

Despite the difficulties, we try. We seek to remember and we also seek to share our memories. Shared memory, collective memory, and public memory are often described as history. Yet, as we so often find when people describe their view of events in the past, our shared memories are sometimes at odds.

I have stumbled into an intriguing set of questions about memory and history. Is remembering the past an exercise in courage? We must remember the sacrifice and accomplishments of others so we too may find the strength to do the same. Is remembering the past an exercise in guilt? We must remember the mistakes and misdeeds of the past so we do not repeat them. Or is remembering the past a way of understanding how life is ever-changing but always the same?

When we try to answer these questions, we often build things. There are three intriguing ways we build places of memory. There are memorials—places where we grieve the past; there are monuments—places where we honor the past; and, there are museums—places where we interpret the past.

In the last year, I have been working on a project seeking to answer: why do we construct these? Some of my research was prompted by the debate over Confederate statues; some of the research was trying to navigate the difference between memory and understanding, and a fair amount of the research arose from trying to navigate my own genealogy. As I have done more and more research, I am beginning to see these three (memorial, monument, and museum) as reaching beyond buildings. They are not only matters of stone, but they are also matters of the heart.

During Lent this year, we will explore the memories we share. Twice each week (once in person and once on a zoom) you are invited to look at the memorials and monuments and museums we have created but also to discuss how our memories Continued in page 2 are shared, how they compliment and challenge one another.

We will look at this from a "civic" perspective, but also from a "sacred" one as well.

Details of times and places, zoom link and instructions are below. Consider making this your Lenten devotion. As I have explored these questions, I gained a different way of looking at our life together, our generations, and our hopes. Mostly, though, I gained a greater mastery of what it means to remember.

a hundred people,
then feed just one.”

Hunger doesn't take a holiday. It doesn't stop the mail, hire a house sitter, pack a bag and head out for somewhere warm.

For that reason, the FPC Food Pantry, under the guidance of Local Mission Director Sarah Teti and with the assistance of her incredibly dedicated volunteer staff, continues to coordinate the longstanding FPC tradition of creating holiday food baskets so that clients can celebrate these special days with dignity.

“Three times a year (Easter, Thanksgiving, and Christmas), we pack holiday bags for our regular and/or frequently attending clients,” said Sarah. “The bags include non-perishable items that are usually served at a holiday meal - canned vegetables, pasta and sauce, stuffing, cranberry sauce, gravy, cornbread mix, cake mix, soup, etc. as well as fresh produce – 5 lbs. of potatoes, 3 lbs. of carrots, 3 lbs. of apples, 3 lbs. of onions, and a few oranges to make up more of the meal. Then they are given a super-market gift card to cover the cost of the protein they will buy for their meal.”

The idea behind this has always been to encourage food pantry clients to have a holiday meal with their loved ones and give them the opportunity to make that happen. The food is distributed a few days before the holiday so they can prepare for the meal in time. In addition to the staples, extras are given as well. Candy, cookies, turkeys and hams donated by congregants and community members during the holidays are given out to them during this distribution, too.

Sarah said, “Our clients look forward to it and it's really a lot of fun and good cheer! Most of the food pantries in our area do something for the holidays, whether it's a gift card OR food, but we do both because we are RELENTLESS!”

Relentless for sure, as the FPC Food Pantry team packed and distributed 130 Thanksgiving baskets with gift cards, along with 19 Thanksgiving-specific emergency bags and turkeys. For Christmas, they distributed 123 baskets with gift cards and 14 Christmas-specific emergency bags and turkeys/hams.

So, where does all this food come from? Most of the non-perishables are donated, especially during Thanksgiving. In fact, Thanksgiving is the largest overall donation period of the year. “Which is great, because we get so much, we usually have lots left over for Christmas so we don't have to buy much,” Sarah said. “The produce is purchased from Lotte Market in Tano Mall and paid for through donated funds,” she continued. “Lotte Market has supplied our produce for two years now and they are EXTREMELY generous by giving us a discounted rate.”

The packing of the food bags has become a much anticipated event annually. All from the congregation and community are invited to come and pack the bags for the families. “We do it in a round robin style, where the kids are given one item at a time to put in a numbered bag until all the items are packed,” Sarah added. “It's so much fun (and incredibly inefficient). But we do it this way to keep the kids engaged.”

Over the past two years, the Food Pantry has had more volunteers than they can handle for these packing events, highlighting a desire from the community for family volunteer opportunities. It also shows a willingness to try and help everyone enjoy the holidays with the blessings we all have.

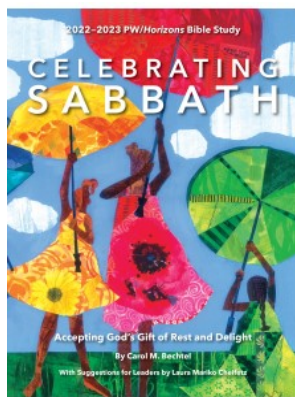

No, hunger doesn't take a holiday. Neither does the staff of the FPC Food Pantry.

A typical Mission volunteers night of happy and eager volunteers, including kids!

Even if you missed Lessons One through Four, don't hesitate to walk in or jump on the Zoom. Every lesson is discrete; every gathering is full of interesting ideas and good discussion.

MUSIC Mini try

By Jordan Klotz, Director of Music Ministries

The thing about music is that it really is everywhere. For us, each with our busy lives—running to work, to the grocery store, to soccer practice, to choir, and back to the grocery store—this may not be entirely apparent. The hustle and bustle of daily life can make it difficult to take the time necessary to pause, to quiet ourselves for just a moment, and to listen.

Growing up, the 2007 film August Rush was a favorite. It's about a young, musically-prodigious orphan and his quest to find his parents, who are also musicians. Although a bit cheesy, the protagonist hears music all around him, quite literally, in all things. In the blowing of the wind, in the slapping of a basketball against the pavement, in the car horns and subway trains and constant chatter of Manhattan, a sonic creation comes alive in his mind. He stops, he listens, and the world illuminates.

Many of us think of music merely as the songs on the radio, the hymns and anthems of Sunday mornings, or the filler noise that consumes our elevator rides, but in her poem "Such Singing in the Wild Branches," Mary Oliver demonstrates the power of pausing and listening to the music of the world around us:

and I began to understand what the bird was saying,

and the sands in the glass stopped
for a pure white moment

Not only do the birds make beautiful music, but as the movie August Rush teaches, there is music to be found in the places we least expect. We are called to love and serve God and our neighbor. Stopping, even for just a moment, to observe the beauty that lies all around us—the song of creation that goes on unceasing—helps to remind us why we love and serve. So, take time on your morning commute, as you walk to get the mail, as you sit down for dinner. Pause, listen, and say a prayer in gratitude.
