

Lamarvia Stinson is an accomplished, senior healthcare operations executive with more than two decades of experience leading complex clinical enterprises, optimizing organizational performance, and advancing mission-driven transformation across hospital, ambulatory, and academic medical settings. She currently serves as the Vice President of Operations for Children's Healthcare of Atlanta at Hughes Spalding, where she leads strategic and operational initiatives designed to enhance quality, efficiency, access, and the overall patient and family experience. Known for building high-performing teams and fostering collaborative partnerships, she plays a pivotal role in shaping operational excellence for one of the nation's leading pediatric healthcare systems.

Prior to joining Children's Healthcare of Atlanta in 2013, she held progressive leadership roles at Emory Healthcare and Palmetto Health Council, Inc., where she strengthened operational infrastructure, enhanced provider engagement, and implemented innovative care delivery models that improved outcomes and financial performance.

Deeply committed to advancing the healthcare profession and community engagement, Lamarvia is an active member of the American College of Healthcare Executives (ACHE) and the National Association of Health Services Executives (NAHSE). She currently serves as an Executive Board Member for NAHSE Atlanta Chapter and volunteers with the Junior League of Atlanta, contributing her leadership expertise to initiatives that directly support the community.

Lamarvia earned her Bachelor's degree in Business Administration and Finance from Clark Atlanta University and a Master of Public Health degree in Health Policy and Management from the Rollins School of Public Health at Emory University.

Recognized for her strategic acumen, operational rigor and commitment to equitable, high-quality care, she continues to shape organizational performance and community well-being through visionary, purpose-driven leadership.
