2018 was a mix of extremes. Lots of good stuff… Our old friend, Shaking Through engineer Jonathan Low won a Grammy, as did our long-time Weathervane friends, The War on Drugs (congratulations, guys!). And who in Philadelphia could forget the night the Eagles won the Super Bowl?

But this year, that same frightening tide of division, largely born of the last presidential election cycle, continued to give us pause. We know that speaking out is a universal human need. This is underscored by the fact that this year we heard not only from artists - In 2018, the outcry of professional athletes truly captivated and stirred so many of us as well. That has reassured our passion for telling the stories of music and music makers that we told this year. Their stories and their voices are important.

In 2018 Shaking Through continued to highlight creative self-expression, always exploring why artists make music and how it changes our world. Music is special, because where so much media isolates and separates, music does the opposite. It brings people together, often re-establishing our common humanity.

So we continue to idealize a world where creative impulses bring about change, justice, and healing. And without a doubt, we see our work as aiding those impulses - highlighting the inspiring stories, creating opportunities to support and engage with great new music, and sharing resources for making music as well.

This work means everything to us. Thank you for everything that you did in 2018 to make it possible, and here's to the coming year!

With thanks and love,

Weathervane’s documentary video series, exploring the importance of creative self-expression, by collaborating with exemplary recording artists as they produce a new song in the studio.

For Shaking Through, artists come to Philadelphia to record a brand new song with the professional recording staff at our partner studio, Miner Street Recordings. We share their experiences, processes and techniques in beautifully produced, deeply engaging and illuminating documentary videos that release throughout the year. Our Remix Members become part of this creative experience, by downloading the original recorded multi-tracks, mixing them, and sharing them back with the community on Shaking Through episode pages. In addition, this year, Weathervane created the Event Access Membership, allowing members to attend Recording Workshops, Studio Concerts, and the Wrap Parties that we hold at the end of every Shaking Through recording session.

Shaking Through Sponsors

For the tenth year, Weathervane has worked on Shaking Through in partnership with Miner Street Recordings, the premiere Philadelphia recording studio in our Fishtown Neighborhood, and for the third year, we’ve also received video and lighting equipment with our partners at Expressway Cinema Rentals. Weathervane has also appreciated sponsorship from local food providers Rustica Pizza, Reanimator Coffee, and Philly Style Bagels.

2018 PRODUCTIONS

J Pope and the HearNow - “How Long?”
Released: July 5, 2017
Jasmine Pope is a Baltimore-based social worker and AIDS Advocate. An incredible singer and rapper, she and her band recorded their hip-hop / jazz fusion track, “How Long?” for this beautiful episode of Shaking Through.

The Kominas - “We Got time”
Executive Producers: Anthony Armenta, Bill Hawkins
Released: September 13, 2017
The Kominas describe themselves as “the brown-skinned children of South Asian immigrants.” For this episode, Weathervane shows how this most unique punk band makes music to shed light on racism, Islamophobia, and injustice.

Steady Hands - “Magazines”
Produced: July 22, 2017, Released: November 15, 2017
Executive Producer: Robert Ibsen
Sean Huber was a member of the popular band Modern Baseball. In this episode, his new band, Steady Hands, recorded their song “Magazines”, a song about losing people we care about to mental health issues.

Thin Lips - “So Stoned”
Produced: September 30, 2017, Released: January 31, 2018
Executive Producer: Ralph Zazula
Chriissy Tashjian and her band recorded their song “So Stoned”. In the episode she describes her struggles with agoraphobia, and the role music and friendships have had in helping her deal with it. This is one of the best stories Weathervane has had the privilege to tell.

Jesse Hale Moore - “Enter Light”
Produced: November 18, 2017, Released: April 25, 2018
Executive Producer: Dr. Karen Lyons
In this episode, Jesse describes the importance of collaborative influences, and how it is important not to be too guarded with his music, but instead to be willing to release it into the world.

American Trappist - “Leann”
Produced: January 20, 2018
Executive Producers: Anne Ravert
In this episode, singer Joe Michellini describes how abstraction and self-awareness influence his music. In the song “Leann”, he sings about once close friends, separated by diverging life circumstances. The song and recording in this episode are particularly excellent.

Half Waif - “Every Animal”
Produced: March 24, 2018
Executive Producers: Christopher Petro, Dr. Karen Lyons
In this incredible episode, Nandi Plunkett describes her experiences as a woman in music, and how her recently-passed grandmother’s life of daily ritual has influenced her own sense of vulnerability, emotional transparency and compassion.

Weathervane Recording Workshops are two-day recording sessions where we explain all the processes and techniques that go into recording music.

To many, our workshops function like live, instructional versions of Shaking Through, with a similar creative goal to record one incredible new song in two days. The difference here is a much greater focus on learning. These remarkable events are not only educational, they provide quality interaction between other members, music fans, and Weathervane staff and crew.
