WWE Universal Title Match

Daniel Bryan vs. Roman Reigns (c) tranger things have happened, but it's highly unlikely Daniel Bryan dethrones The Tribal Chief this close to WrestleMania after so much attention has been given to Roman Reigns vs. Edge.

The leader of the Yes Movement is always a threat to become world champion, but in this situation, he's likely more of a stepping stone than a major factor in the WrestleMania match itself.

Reigns has a track record of besting Bryan too. He beat him at Elimination Chamber in February and also in a more fair contest at Fastlane in 2015.

Whether Jey Uso or special guest enforcer and No. 1 contender Edge get tangled up in the action to cause enough of a distraction Reigns can capitalize on or this is a straight-up victory for SmackDown's Big Dog, the Universal Championship should stay where it's at.

WWE Women's Tag Team Titles Match

Bianca Belair and SmackDown Women's Champion Sasha Banks vs. Nia Jax and Shayna Baszler (c)

WWE Intercontinental Title Match
Apollo Crews vs. Big E (c)

Sheamus vs. Drew McIntyre

Alexa Bliss vs. Randy Orton

Braun Strowman vs. Shane McMahon

Seth Rollins vs. Shinsuke Nakamura

As for Bryan vs Reigns, we're just excited to see this match for the first time in six years. Yes, according to Cagematch, the last time these two had a one-on-one was Fastlane 2015. In the years since, both have had to step away from active competition, so this is something of a treat. That said, since we all expect Reigns to retain and continue his run as The Head of The Table/Tribal Chief, it will take a lot of theatrics to get folks to believe Bryan has a chance.

Big E's Intercontinental Championship defense against the newly-heel Apollo Crews also has our eye. While E's run is still in its infancy, Crews has lost too many times as of late, and needs a big win to make his new turn mean something.

Then, you've got a match between Drew McIntyre and Sheamus — which should be a fun brawl, but it has no stakes. Shayna Baszler & Nia Jax vs. Sasha Banks & Bianca Belair for the WWE Women's Tag Team Championships doesn't seem to matter at all, except for building animosity for the latter team's WrestleMania match.

And that just leave the curious case of Randy Orton vs. Alexa Bliss. The latter challenged the former to meet her at the PPV, but we doubt WWE will actually have an intergender wrestling match, especially on its first night on PremiumTV
