FACULTY

Joyce L. Harris, PhD, CCC-SLP, recently retired from the Department of Communication Sciences and Disorders faculty at The University of Texas at Austin, where she taught courses in adult neurogenic language disorders and the sociocultural bases of communication. During a career spanning more than 35 years, Harris has worked in public schools, hospital- and university-based rehabilitation, the Veterans’ Administration Medical System, and higher education. She is an ASHA Fellow and life member, the author of The Source for Reminiscence Therapy, and co-editor and contributing author of Literacy in African American Communities and Communication Development and Disorders in African American Children: Research, Assessment, and Intervention. Currently, Harris serves as the coordinator of ASHA’s Special Interest Group 14, Communication Disorders and Sciences in Culturally and Linguistically Diverse Populations.

Financial Disclosures

- Financial compensation from ASHA for this presentation

Nonfinancial Disclosures

- Coordinator of ASHA’s Special Interest Group 14, Communication Disorders and Sciences in Culturally and Linguistically Diverse Populations