FACULTY

Erik X. Raj, PhD, CCC-SLP, is a practicing speech-language pathologist working with school-age children with various communication difficulties. He is currently an assistant professor and clinical supervisor in the Department of Speech-Language Pathology at Monmouth University in West Long Branch, New Jersey. Raj regularly presents interactive workshops demonstrating how school-based speech-language pathologists can use technology to motivate and teach students on their caseload. In addition to developing numerous top-ranking educational iPad applications for children, he has also directed the DVD component to the award-winning speech-language pathology book titled Your Voice is Your Business (Plural Publishing) and has created original video content for such television networks as MTV and mtvU. Raj earned his bachelor’s degree in speech pathology and audiology from Richard Stockton College of New Jersey and a master’s of science degree in speech-language pathology from Misericordia University in Pennsylvania. He recently completed his doctorate in communication sciences and disorders at Wayne State University in Detroit, Michigan.

Financial Disclosures
- Financial compensation from ASHA for this presentation

Nonfinancial Disclosures
- Has developed numerous educational iPad apps for children with communication difficulties