DISCLOSURES

Financial Disclosures
Connie Kasari is an employee of UCLA and receives grant support from NIH, HRSA, IES, Autism Speaks, Merck Foundation, and Goldman Foundation. She has received speaker honorariums and travel/lodging fees from various university grand rounds and parent organizations across the world. Alexandra Sturm and Wendy Shih report no financial relationships to the content of this article.

Nonfinancial Disclosures
Connie Kasari is on the science board of Autism Speaks, and the advisory board of many grant networks, school, and agency organizations related to autism. Alexandra Sturm and Wendy Shih report no nonfinancial relationships to the content of this article.

Financial Disclosures
This research was supported by a grant from NIH. Susan Ellis Weismer is an employee of University of Wisconsin-Madison. She received an honorarium and complementary course registration for this ASHA Research Symposium. Margarita Kaushanskaya, Caroline Larson, Janine Mathée, and Daniel Bolt report no additional financial relationships to the content of this article.

Nonfinancial Disclosures
Susan Ellis Weismer, Margarita Kaushanskaya, Caroline Larson, Janine Mathée, and Daniel Bolt report no nonfinancial relationships to the content of this article.

Financial Disclosures
Jana M. Iverson is a salaried full professor in psychology at the University of Pittsburgh. She received research funding from the National Institute on Child Health and Development. She receives honoraria for presenting CE courses and seminars and receives financial compensation for reviews of grants from the NIH and other agencies. She received speaker honorarium and free registration for ASHA’s 2017 Convention.

Nonfinancial Disclosures
Jana M. Iverson reports no nonfinancial relationships to the content of this article.

Financial Disclosures
Sara T. Kover is an employee of the University of Washington. Letitia R. Naigles is an employee of the University of Connecticut and received grant funding from NIHDCD. She is the co-editor and receives royalties for the Cambridge Handbook of Child Language and is the editor and receives royalties for Innovative Investigations of Language in Autism Spectrum Disorders. She received a speaker stipend from ASHA and free registration to the 2017 ASHA Conference. She also receives financial compensation for reviews of grants from the NIH and other agencies. Ahmed Abdelaziz and Manuela Wagner report no financial relationships to the content of this article.

Nonfinancial Disclosures
Letitia R. Naigles is a nonsalaried faculty member in the Institute for Brain and Cognitive Science at the University of Connecticut and an unpaid consultant on an NIMH grant and a grant from the Japanese Society for the Promotion of Science. She served on the Editorial Board for the Journal of Child Language through 2016 and serves as reviewer for several peer-reviewed journals. Ahmed Abdelaziz, Sara T. Kover, and Manuela Wagner report no nonfinancial relationships to the content of this article.