ASPPH Stance on Third Party Ranking Systems

The Association of Schools and Programs of Public Health (ASPPH) does not endorse third party ranking systems of schools and programs of public health. To become an ASPPH member institution, a school or program of public health must earn accreditation from the Council on Education in Public Health (CEPH), a private non-profit corporation established in 1974 by ASPPH and the American Public Health Association (APHA) and certified by the US Department of Education. Accredited schools and programs have all met established standards of institutional quality and performance in professional public health education. Thus, we believe all member institutions provide a high-quality education that prepares students for success in public health and related careers. For more information on member schools and programs, see the ASPPH Public Health Graduate School Viewbook and the ASPPH Academic Program Finder.
