Cornell Cooperative Extension Orange County is launching a Master Community Builder Program that introduces and guides participants to apply the concepts that create the conditions for resilience and regenerative well-being.

This program is for everyone who wants to “do” something and is interested in supporting our communities to navigate challenges related to public and mental health, climate change, community and economic vitality, education, public safety, and public policy.

The program thrives on its diverse participants with different backgrounds, interests, and experiences, which include educators, human services providers, mental health and health care providers, business leaders and professionals, law enforcement, community leaders, faith-based community leaders, and members, community activists, policymakers, and community members at large.
